A preliminary examination was held before Police Justice Parcells, at Astoria, yesterday, in the case of the masked burglars, an account of whose arrest by Capt. Murray, of the Fourth Precinct, was published in THE TIMES of yesterday. The robbers were committed without bail to the Queens County Jail, at Hempstead, to await the action of the Grand Jury. The examination was conducted by Benjamin W. Downing, District Attorney of Queen's County. The court-room was crowded with residents of Astoria. The prisoners were seated inside the Judge's railing, four of them connected with each other by handcuffs. The fifth one, James Riley, having consented to turn state's evidence, was not in irons. Three of the men were exceedingly rough-looking fellows. These were John James alias "Fatty Farrell," John Schmidt, and John Roberts. James fully realized the ideal criminal. He would be a marked man out of a thousand of his class. His alias "Fatty Farrell" does him a trifling injustice. He is not grossly fat, but is a stout, muscular man. He has the face and eyes of a villain. Schmidt is a fellow of gigantic frame. He is supposed to have been the leader of the gang, and seems to possess the requisite qualities for such a position. In his conduct during the examination he showed clearly that he was as shrewd and cunning as he was desperate. Roberts is a dapper little fellow, who wears a ruffled shirt-bosom and a Piccadilly collar, his neat personal appearance being in marked contrast to that of his comrades. His features are small and sharp, and his general appearance does not belie his reputation as a habitual criminal, whose liquor stop in James street is a notorious den for thieves. As for McCarty and Riley, they look like mere neophytes in comparison with the other three, and the testimony of the sufferers by the burglary agrees in the fact that they filled only subordinate roles in the distribution of parts for the burglaries of Dec. 22. The prisoners were arraigned upon the charge of having burglariously entered the residences of William H. Green, the hotel-keeper, and of Michael L. Hiller, and of having stolen articles aggregating in value about $500. To this charge James Riley pleaded "guilty." The other four pleaded "not guilty," and severally protested that they were as innocent of the crime alleged as the District Attorney himself. Capt. Murray was the first witness, and was followed by Gilbert Carr, the detective attached to his precinct. The two officers gave the particulars of the arrests, and produced several articles which had been found upon the persons of the prisoners. Among the articles were a pocket-knife and a cigar-holder, taken from McCarty, which have been fully identified by Mr. Hiller as his property, taken from him on the night of the burglary. Mr. William H. Green, the hotel-keeper, related the story of the burglary at his house. He said that when his wife awakened him and told him that burglars were in the house, he put out his head for his revolver; then one of the men said: "You identified me, acting the train approach without warning from the depot, he called to the engineer of the dummy engine of the freight train, to "go ahead." The engineer, who says he did not hear this order, instead of going ahead, backed his cars, and the express dashed clean through them at the speed of 40 miles an hour, according to the estimate of the employes on the train. The engineer of the express first caught sight of the freight cars at a distance of about 150 yards from the crossing. He immediately whistled "down brake" and pulled violently at the cord running through the cars and connecting with the patent Creamer brakes. The passengers on the train, 79 in all, were at once alarmed. The next moment the engineer, having reversed his engine, threw himself into the crew-bank, and the express went through the freight train like a cannon-shot—not coming to a stop till it was on the trestle bridge 250 yards away. A terrible disaster was only escaped by a miracle. The engine happened to strike a car of the barely moving freight train right in the middle, carrying a bed-beam and splinters of the wreck along with it, but driving the wheel-trucks on either side of the track, and thus enabling the cars, none of which left the rails, to pass through the wreck without injury. The fireman stood manfully at his post and shut off the steam, and thus obviated the chance of the bursting of the boiler. The front of the engine, the cow-catcher, headlights, smoke-stack, sand-chest, and one of the steam-cylinders were broken; but otherwise the train was uninjured, and the passengers escaped with a shaking up. Had the speed of the train been less, and had the engine struck a truck instead of the body of the car, a serious loss of life would in all probability have ensued. About a year ago a precisely similar accident, with the same lucky escape of the passengers, occurred at this crossing. It is a very dangerous one for all trains coming east unless it is very carefully flagged and signaled.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The firm of Allen & Co., reported in THE TIMES of yesterday as having made an assignment, is not that of Allen & Co., tobacco dealers, of Nos. 173 and 175 Chambers street.

The New-York Bible Society distributed, by gift and sale, during December, 4,128 Bibles and Testaments among 3,163 families, 182 vessels, and 3,748 emigrants at Castle Garden.

On Thursday evening Officers Nevins and Jackson, of Special Agent Brackett's staff, seized 30 rolls of human hair, worth about $800, that were being smuggled in on the steam-ship Vera Cruz.

A match game of Polo, two trotting matches, a fist race with lady riders, Roman chariot driving, mustang hurdle racing, and difficult feats of horsemanship will be among the attractions at Gilmore's Garden to-night.

In the assignment of John H. Hapgood, of No. 42 University place, to William W. Sharpe, the liabilities are reported at $11,228 90, and the assets at $4,857 03. Of the latter $3,000 consist of stocks pledged with a creditor as collateral.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Farragut Monument Association, held last Tuesday, Mr. August St. Gaudens, a young artist of this City, received the commission for the statue of Admiral Farragut, which is to be erected in this City.

Mr. Willis S. Paine, Receiver of the Bond Street Bank, has paid out to depositors nearly $200,000. A balance of $500,000 remains to be called for by depositors. This first dividend of 55 per cent. includes the interest credited to the accounts last July.

Charles Cooper, a truck man, reported at the Eighth Precinct Station, last night, that a valuable case of silk-worms' eggs, intended for transportation to France by the steam-ship Havre, was stolen from his truck in Canal street while he was taking it to the dock of the Transatlantic Company.

Superintendent Walling yesterday received information that G. O. Stanley, alias Capt. St. Clair, a well-known thief, had made his escape from the jail at Norwalk, Conn. Stanley had been arrested for robbery on the complaint of S. S. Dale, a clothier, doing business at No. 168 South street, in this City.

In rendering a verdict yesterday of accidental death in the case of Ann McKenna, an old woman, of No. 229 East Forty-fifth street, who died recently of injuries received by falling into an excavation, the jury recommended that the authorities pass a law for the better protection of citizens against similar accidents.

At the annual meeting of the Inspectors' Association of the Port of New-York, held at the Barge Office on Thursday, the following gentlemen were elected officers of the association for the year 1877: Thomas Bell, President; A. B. Douglass, Vice President; O. M. Fisher, Secretary; Robert Utley, Treasurer. Subsequently the President appointed James R. McNaughton Chaplain.

Giovanni Locatelli, aged 42, an Italian merchant, who arrived from Japan on Thursday last, and engaged board at the hotel Du Roma, No. 36 East Houston street, was found dead in his room yesterday morning. A post-mortem examination of the body disclosed the fact that heart disease had been the cause of death. Locatelli leaves a widow and three children in Bergamo, Italy.

A meeting of the Seventeenth Assembly District Hayes and Wheeler Club was held on Thursday evening last, at No. 1,528 Broadway, W. J. Bryon occupying the chair. Addresses were made by Mr. Purdy and several other members; the party was congratulated on the success of the Republican ticket, and after tendering a vote of thanks to the officers of the club, the meeting adjourned.

BROOKLYN.

Patrick Gillen, a vagrant, about 50 years of age, died suddenly last evening at Robertson's Stores.

The Republican members of the Board of Aldermen will hold a caucus this evening to determine who shall be their candidate for President of the board. The board will reorganize for 1877 on Monday.

Judge Moore, in the Court of Sessions yesterday, sentenced Charles Trefurd and James Walsh to 60 days each in the Penitentiary for wife-beating. Trefurd beat his wife Susan with his fists, and Walsh beat his wife Ellen with an axe-handle.

Edward J. Groome, residing at the corner of Flatbush avenue and Dean street, was arrested last evening on a charge of collecting $160 from his father's creditors, and appropriating it to his own use. The complaint was made by the young man's mother his father being seriously ill.

Justice Gilbert, in the Supreme Court yesterday, said, in response to an application for the postponement of a case, that in his opinion counsel spent more time in postponing cases than in trying them. The same Justice refused to allow any defaults yesterday because the ice in the river made it uncertain when New-York lawyers could reach Brooklyn.

Julia McCaffrey and Ellen Edden, both married women, residing at No. 250 Van Brunt street, quarreled last evening about some trivial matter. Mrs. McCaffrey threw Mrs. Edden down stairs and then jumped on her. The result was that Mrs. Edden had one of her legs broken and was internally injured. The wounded woman was taken to the Long Island College Hospital, and her assailant locked up.

About 5 o'clock last evening a horse attached to a sleigh driven by Mr. George C. Atchinson, of No. 45 Bridge street, took fright in Gold street, and, turning into Adams street, dashed over the dock and into the shoreline. The animal was not finished out, but died a few minutes afterward. The sleigh was broken, but the driver was thrown out before the horse reached the river, and thus escaped injury.

Alexander Waldron brought an action against the Citizens' Gas-light Company of Long Island to foreclose a mortgage on the defendant's property amounting to $14,000. The defense was that the plaintiff had verbally agreed not to call for payment when the mortgage became due. Justice Gilbert, in the Supreme Court yesterday, rendered judgment for the plaintiff in the fall amount, with an allowance of 2 per cent.

Late on Thursday night Officer Coddington found Thomas Nolan and his wife, Bridget, drunk and quarreling in their apartments, at No. 17 Garrison street. There was no furniture or fire in the room, and three small children of the drunkards were huddled together in a corner, almost famished from cold and hunger. Yesterday Justice Walsh discharged the man and woman upon their promising to take care of their children in the future and give up drinking. Officer Coddington was instructed to see that the promise is fulfilled.

NEW-JERSEY.

The number of deaths in Paterson during the year 1876 was 1,063.

Charles McPheeley, who was convicted in the Hudson County Court of Sessions of highway robbery and resisting an officer, was sentenced yesterday to two years in State Prison.

Augusta Kehne, aged 16 years, has been missing since Sunday. On that day she left New-York, where she is employed, to attend a New Year's party at her mother's house in Newark, but did not arrive there, and has not since been seen.

Murray C. Drake, a well-known resident of Paterson, died suddenly Thursday night after returning home with his mother from an entertainment. A medical examination showed that death had resulted from congestion of the brain, superinduced by indigestion.

Capt. Wonder, a resident of Guttenburg, was walking through Bull's Ferry road yesterday morning on his way home, and had arrived at Meeks' woods, when he saw a portion of a man's body sticking out from a snow-bank. He made an examination, and found the frozen body of an unknown man partly buried in a snow-bank. There were no marks of violence on the body, so that it is believed the man lost his way, and was overcome by cold and exhaustion. Coroner Crane was notified, and the body taken to the Morgue to await identification.

SCARLET FEVER IN JERSEY CITY.

Scarlet fever of a malignant type, and diphtheria, have been very prevalent on Jersey City Heights, N. J., for some time past. A number of deaths resulted from these diseases, and they had spread so widely that inquiry was instituted, and it was discovered that a short time ago two or three children of the janitor of public school No. 19, on Crescent avenue, had been suffering from scarlet fever. The school was kept open all the time they were ill, and it is believed that through that means the disease was widely spread. The fact of their illness was kept as secret as possible, but the parents of some of the pupils became acquainted with it and kept their children at home. The authorities, who failed to give proper attention to the matter, are generally condemned.

THE EAST RIVER ICE BLOCKADE.

LARGE FLOES DETAINING THE FERRY-BOATS —THE DELAYS EXPERIENCED IN CROSSING THE RIVER.

Ferry-boat travel on the East River was yesterday, as on Wednesday and Thursday, very much impeded by the continued blockade of the river by heavy ice-floes. The greatest delay was experienced at the Fulton, Roosevelt, and Catharine Ferries, the delay at the other East River ferries being less than on the previous day. The Farragut, of the Fulton Ferry line, left the Brooklyn side of the East River at 11:45 o'clock in the morning, with a large number of passengers. She had scarcely left the slip, when she encountered great floes of ice, which completely blocked her course and threatened to render her further progress impossible. After two hours delay she finally reached the New-York side of the river, landing at the Catharine Street Ferry instead of the Fulton Ferry slip. This was the longest delay experienced during the day, the America, which left the Brooklyn slip at 1:15 o'clock, making the passage in one hour and twenty minutes. The Fulton was also greatly delayed. Finding it impossible to guide the boat on the 11:20 A. M. trip in the direction of the Fulton Ferry slip, the pilot changed the course and steered it toward the Catharine street slip. Even after reaching the slip, the boat experienced great difficulty in getting into the slip, which was choked with ice. Hawsers were fastened to the piles at the opening of the slip, and afterward to the ferry bridge to assist the boat in effecting a landing. It was not, however, until many attempts had been made that the boat was finally safe. In a subsequent trip which it made from Brooklyn about 1:30 P. M., it experienced a delay of over one hour, reaching the New-York side at 3:55 o'clock.

The ferry-boat Alaska, of the Roosevelt Street Ferry, which left Williamsburg at 10:30 o'clock, found it almost impossible to make any headway against the ice, and did not arrive at New-York until after one o'clock. The Peconic, of the Catharine Street Ferry, which left Brooklyn at the same time as the Farragut, became locked in the same manner as the latter, and was subjected to a similar detention, her landing on the New-York side being effected only after a most vexatious delay. The Republic, of the same line, in making her passage to New-York, reached the City at Bridge street, a considerable distance from her proper slip, and was compelled to fight her way against the ice before she reached the Catharine street slip and landed her passengers. At the Hunter's Point Ferry trips were made about every hour, the ice offering some but not very serious obstruction to the progress of the boats. At the Jersey City and Hoboken ferries the trips were made generally in good time, although some delay was caused by ice-floes early in the afternoon. As the turning of the tide in the afternoon the ice began to move, and trips were made more or less regularly until midnight, when the ice began to gather in immense fields.

EX-MAYOR WICKHAM.

HE IS INVITED TO A PUBLIC DINNER BY A NUMBER OF PROMINENT CITIZENS—THE INVITATION ACCEPTED.

A number of citizens, desiring to express their appreciation of the manner in which ex-Mayor Wickham discharged his official duties, have sent him the following invitation to a public dinner:

NEW-YORK, Jan. 3, 1877.

Hon. William H. Wickham:

DEAR SIR: The undersigned citizens of New-York desire to express to you their appreciation of your public spirit and fidelity in the discharge of your high office as Mayor of this City. We believe that we speak for the great body of our fellow-citizens, when we recognize your steadfast effort, throughout your administration, to subserve the general interests of the City and its citizens without distinction of parties; and we respectfully invite you to name a day on which it will be convenient for you to afford us the opportunity of meeting you at a public dinner.

The above invitation is signed by August Belmont, Samuel D. Babcock, William E. Dodge, George W. Lane, Royal Phelps, Joseph Seligman, Edward L. Donnelly, John Kelly, Russell Sage, Smith Ely, Jr., James Buell, Peter Cooper, Noah Davis, Chester A. Arthur, Benjamin K. Phelps, and others. Mr. Wickham has accepted the invitation. The following is his reply:

GENTLEMEN: I am in receipt of yours of the 3d inst., and am somewhat embarrassed in replying to your kind and complimentary invitation therein contained. To have merited the good opinion of yourselves and those whom you represent is to me an exceedingly satisfactory termination of my official career, and a testimony that I appreciate. In compliance with your request I will name the evening of Jan. 12 next. Very truly yours,

WILLIAM H. WICKHAM.

TILDEN'S MONEY IN OREGON.

THE SUM OF EIGHT THOUSAND DOLLARS ACCOUNTED FOR—AN OFFICIOUS ATTORNEY TELLS WHAT HE KNOWS—A NEW-YORK BANKER LETS OUT A SECRET—THE TWO STATEMENTS TOGETHER ACCOUNT FOR THE MAN CRONIN'S PRESENCE IN WASHINGTON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day examined the officious adviser of Mr. Martin, who testified yesterday, and also Enos Runyon, of the firm of Martin & Runyon. The first witness, the lawyer sent down to watch Martin, was Burton N. Harrison, who made light of the affair. He was coming to Washington on business connected with the Spanish-American Claims Commission, and Martin came with him. It came out that a gentleman called on him, and informed him that Martin was to be introduced to him by Runyon, and the same gentleman arranged the joint trip to Washington. Harrison evaded and wriggled out of direct answers, and finally declined to give the name of this gentleman who called on him before Martin was introduced. Runyon was extremely nervous and hesitating in his answers, and clearly endeavored to avoid giving any information. He was led into an explanation of the $8,000 check, but refused to state the name of the person who ordered it drawn. It was drawn "for a customer." He inadvertently admitted that he was told by this customer who ordered the check drawn to consult Mr. Harrison. Then Harrison was recalled and asked the name of the person who told him he was to be consulted by Runyon. Rather than be brought before the Senate in contempt, and knowing that the question was a proper one, he hesitatingly answered that it was Col. William T. Pelton, Secretary of the National Democratic Committee. This, of course, is a mistake. Pelton is known here as a nephew and confidential Secretary to Gov. Tilden. Thus another link was found in the chain which undoubtedly connects the Oregon fraud with the highest Democratic authorities.

During Runyon's examination Harrison sat intently watching him, and so completely absorbed and anxious that he made no effort to conceal the physical expression of disgust when an adverse point was made. Pelton will be put on the stand. He now appears as the principal in the $8,000 transaction. He made arrangements to have the money transmitted, and, last of all, attempted to fix things so the committee could not get the evidence. Now he will have to go on the stand and tell his story, and if he is not able to conceal his operations by reason of some incompleteness of the knowledge possessed by members of the committee, which would leave necessary questions unasked, it will be an instructive story. It is not believed he can escape giving information as to the vital point of the inquiry. Bush, of Oregon, who is claimed to have been the recipient and disburser of the fund, and whose presence at the State-house is said to have been anxiously awaited by the Cronin college on the day of the vote, will be examined by the committee. As for Gov. Tilden, the search has proceeded to that extent that, as children cry out in a certain game, "It is warm." Indeed, it seems to be getting quite "hot."

Grover was further examined to-day, but the Democrats call him a good witness, and he has the ability to avoid giving any information unnecessarily. Cronin has been discharged, and he leaves for Oregon followed by the hearty curses of the Democratic managers for his stupidity in answering the questions of the committee in such a manner as to spoil the Democratic programme.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections continued the examination of Gov. Grover in relation to the Oregon Electoral matter to-day. In answer to Senator Mitchell, Gov. Grover stated that he had prepared and filed his official opinion in relation to Watts' case a few days after the hearing which took place the day before the meeting of the Electoral College. He announced his decision in Watts' case to all interested as soon as he had made up his mind to whom to issue the certificate. The paper filed by the Republican Electors was a protest against his [the witness'] right to issue the certificates to any save the three persons having the highest number of votes, as shown by the returns to the Secretary of State; the Republican Electors made no argument; they only presented their protest; he might have made the remark that in case he issued a certificate to Watts, he should state in the certificate that Watts was a postmaster; he conversed with leading men of Oregon on the subject of Watts' eligibility; he was a witness before Judge Deady, of the Oregon Supreme Court, on a certain occasion, and Judge Deady said to witness that he [Judge Deady] was of opinion that the Watts case was one which ought to be settled by the State courts; he talked with Gen. Simpson, of Oregon, and spoke to Simpson of what Deady had said, but don't think he told Simpson that he should issue a certificate of election to Watts; he conversed with Simpson in a free, friendly manner; it was about the middle of November that the conversation took place, and at that time he [witness] had not thoroughly examined the case; he never received a printed brief from New-York in relation to the Watts case, but received a printed brief from some place and person unknown to witness; this brief was a collection of English decisions. On the day previous to the hearing before mentioned Senator Kelly handed witness an argument from Mr. Doyle, of California; this argument was against the issuing of a certificate to Mr. Watts, and it was concurred in by several prominent lawyers of California; witness received no instructions from New-York pointing out any way he should act in relation to the Watts case; there were no arms in the State house or in the private house of the witness on the day of the meeting of the Electoral College, or at any time afterward; witness knew of no funds being telegraphed from New-York to Oregon to pay the election managers' expenses, and he knew of no moneys being telegraphed to Ladd & Bush about the time of the meeting of the Electoral College; Mr. Bellinger, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee of Oregon, collected money by subscription from prominent Democrats to pay the expenses of the electoral messenger to Washington and return; he does not know that Mr. Bellinger was assured from New-York that certain parties in the East would be responsible for all necessary expenses in his Electoral matter. In answer to Mr. Kernan the witness said: "It was after the college met that Bellinger collected money for the messenger's expenses; on the morning of the meeting of the Electoral College witness directed his secretary to draft the certificates of the Electors and deliver them to the Secretary of State; witness said Judge Deady introduced the conversation in relation to the Watts case, which took place between him and the Judge.

Enos Runyon, of Newark, N. J., a member of the firm of Martin & Runyon, bankers and brokers, of Wall street, New-York, was the next witness. In answer to Senator Mitchell he testified that his firm do business with the Bank of North America, and they have a business correspondence with parties in Oregon; witness had no personal business transactions with any parties in Oregon, and never had. There was a certified check for $8,000 drawn by his firm, Martin & Runyon, on the bank of North America, on Dec. 6, 1876, in favor of Ladd & Bush, of Portland, Oregon. The witness did not know why or for what the check was drawn. It was drawn by George H. Hewes, the bookkeeper of the firm. The witness declined to tell who the check was drawn for; but stated that it was not drawn for him. He also declined to tell who came to his office and ordered him to draw the check.

Senator Kernan stated that he, as counsel for the witness, and as a member of the committee before which witness was testifying, would advise the witness to answer the question.

Senator Morton repeated the question, and witness again declined to answer it, saying that it would be a breach of confidence; that bankers and brokers never gave the names of their customers in relation to any business transactions; witness took the check to Charles Dimond, at the banking-house of A. E. & C. E. Titon, in Liberty street; Mr. Dimond was not in, and witness returned, bringing the check with him; he deposited it with the other checks of his firm in the Bank of North America, on which it was drawn; his reason for depositing this check, instead of destroying it when he brought it back from Titon's banking-house, was to enable him to keep the check accounts of the firm straight; the check was never used. In answer to Mr. Kernan, the witness said the check was disposed of as are all unused checks; witness saw one of the Titons when he went to their bank to see Dimond, but Mr. Titon could not receive the check because Dimond was not there; Dimond came to witness' banking-house on the afternoon of the day in question and said that the check could not be used as it was, as he [Dimond] had no connection with Ladd & Bush; witness told Dimond that he [witness] did not know what the check was for; witness gave the check to Dimond on the 11th of December; Dimond paid witness for the check; at the time the first check was drawn no charges were made; witness was ordered to give the check to Dimond by the person who came to witness' banking-house and ordered the drawing of the check; witness charged himself on the books of his firm with the amount of money for which the check was drawn; Dimond paid for the check by giving witness a check on the St. Nicholas Bank of New-York; the amount of this check was returned to witness, less telegraph charges; witness understood that the deduction was for telegraph charges; the amount paid witness on the $8,000 check by Dimond was $7,997 25; witness having previously been paid $2 75 charges; the witness received interest on the check from the person who first ordered it; the interest was paid to the witness in the office of the person who ordered the check. In answer to Senator Mitchell the witness stated that he had never issued any checks to any persons in Oregon; he accompanied Mr. Martin to the office of Burton Harrison, a lawyer; witness did not suggest that Mr. Harrison should come to Washington with Mr. Martin; witness saw the person who ordered the check for $8,000 yesterday, and told him that he [witness] was going to Washington, having been subpœnaed to appear before a committee; the person made no suggestion to witness as to what he should testify; witness is a Democrat, Mr. Martin an ardent Republican.

The next witness was Mr. Burton N. Harrison, of New-York. He testified in answer to a question from Mr. Mitchell that he is a lawyer; has been practicing in New-York since 1866; had no business prior to that time; lived in the South before going to New-York; was connected with the University of Virginia as an assistant professor of Physics from 1859 to 1861; lived in Virginia from 1861 to 1865; lived at Richmond during that period; was a private secretary to the "President of the Confederacy," so called, Jefferson Davis, from 1861 to 1865; in 1865 he was arrested and imprisoned at Washington; went to New-York in the Winter of 1866–67, and was a law student in the office of Fullerton, Knox & Rugg, of New-York, until admitted to the Bar, which was in December, 1867, and since that time has been engaged in the practice of his profession; for the two years ending with the month of December last, witness was a clerk and legal adviser in the office of the Mayor, Mr. Wickham, of New-York; witness stated that he had been acting with the Democratic Party, and that during the last campaign had made one or more speeches at a place near West Point, N. Y., where he has a Summer residence; he met Messrs. Martin and Runyon, for the first time, day before yesterday; Mr. Runyon came to his [witness's] office, and said he wanted to consult witness about going to Washington; the witness did not know Mr. Runyon, and could not say that he knew Mr. Runyon was coming to consult with him, although a personal friend of the witness had said to him in conversation that day, that some one might call to consult him [witness]; the witness declined to give the name of the person who had informed him that some one might come to consult him; the witness was not employed to come to Washington by either Mr. Martin or Mr. Runyon, but came here on professional business for which he received a retainer; his professional business here is to look after a claim before one of the Commissioners; he told Mr. Runyon that he [witness] was going to Washington and that he [Runyon] could go on with him. In answer to Mr. Morton the witness stated that he met the person whose name he declined to give on the morning of the day that Mr. Runyon called on him, [witness;] it was by chance that the witness was informed that some one would call on him; the witness stated that he did not wish to give the name of the person who informed him that some one might call and consult him, because he did not desire to bring the name of any one into publicity in connection with this matter; the witness said he did not know that he took especial interest in this case; he gave Mr. Runyon no advice regarding the testimony he [Runyon] should give before the committee.

Senator Morton here recalled Mr. Runyon, who, in reply to questions, stated that he had consulted with the person for whom he had drawn the $8,000 check before seeing Mr. Harrison, and this person advised him [Runyon] to consult with Harrison.

Mr. Harrison was again recalled and stated that rather than be declared in contempt for refusing to answer the question he would give the name of the person who had told him that some one might call and consult him. It was Mr. W. T. Pelton, Secretary of the Democratic National Committee; witness also stated that Mr. Pelton, had informed him that he [Pelton] did not know Mr. Runyon; Mr. Pelton told witness this in his [Mr. Pelton's] office in Liberty street; witness does not know whether there were other persons in the office when Mr. Pelton made this remark or not; it is possible that Mr. Pelton might have told witness that Runyon had been subpœnaed to go to Washington; Mr. Pelton knew nothing of the transaction as far as witness knows; witness saw Mr. Pelton at his [Pelton's] office after he [witness] had seen Messrs. Martin and Runyon, and told Mr. Pelton what had taken place between Martin, Runyon, and witness.

At the request of Senator Kernan, Mr. Watts, of Oregon, was called, and testified that he resigned his Postmastership on the 13th of November last; he resigned by telegraph to the Postmaster General, and the day following his resignation he received a reply to the effect that his resignation had been accepted; he made his returns and ended all connection with the Postmastership which he held on the 15th of November; his successor was appointed on the 14th of November.

F. W. M. Holliday, of Virginia, was then sworn. He testified that he was appointed as a Centennial Commissioner, by President Grant, about a year ago, and has never resigned the office; he was Presidential Elector at large on the Virginia Democratic ticket, and received a certificate from the Governor of Virginia, but did not attend the meeting of the Electoral College; he did not send in a resignation but simply refrained from attending the meeting; the Electoral College thereupon filled the vacancy caused by his absence.

Enos Runyon was recalled. He was asked by Mr. Kernan: Do you know Col. William T. Pelton personally? A.—I do not.

Q.—Did he know anything about this matter before or after the occurrence? A.—I do not know.

Q.—You do not know him at all? A.—I do not know him; I think I know the man by sight.

Q.—Did anything ever pass between him and you about this check or anything connected with this matter or your seeing here? A.—Nothing of the kind.

Mr. Cronin, of Oregon, wishing to return to his home to attend to his private business affairs, was excused from further attendance on the committee. The committee have decided to report to the Senate Mr. Runyon's refusal to answer, and will ask that action be taken to compel him to do so.

FERNANDO WOOD'S SCHEME.

HE WOULD LIKE TO HAVE ANOTHER ELECTION—NOT IN ALL THE STATES, BUT IN THREE OR FOUR SOUTHERN ONES—HE DON'T THINK MUCH OF SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS—AND LIKE MOST OF HIS PARTY CAN'T SEE HOW TILDEN CAN BE INAUGURATED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Of the numberless suggestions of methods for a settlement of the vexed questions concerning the election of President which have been put out by the Democratic leaders to test the temper of the people, none have yet assumed the dignity of distinct propositions, and it will probably remain for Mr. Fernando Wood to make the first advance in this direction. He has prepared, and intends to present in the House on the first opportunity, a resolution instructing the House Committee on the Electoral count to offer to the Senate Committee as a compromise, a proposition for a new election in South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana to be held, and the returns made, before the 14th day of February next, the date upon which both houses meet to count the Electoral vote. The resolution as drawn does not go into details or prescribe the mode of conducting the new election, but simply recites the fact that as a direct settlement of the question which would peaceably determine which of the two, Hayes or Tilden, was elected, is not probable even if it is possible, that it is desirable that a new election be held in these three States where the disputes as to the actual results have arisen. Mr. Wood is very proud of his new idea, and speaks freely of his intentions and ambitions to any one who may come to talk to him upon the subject. He would, he says, have offered the resolution during the past week, but he was holding it for two reasons: First, because he could find no authority in the Constitution for holding such an election as his resolution proposed, and second, because he hesitated to interfere with or offer suggestions to the committee which had been formed to consider these questions. He said, however, that he had now concluded that in such a crisis as this Congress had a right, as it was its duty to provide safeguards for the peace of the country, and that, therefore, any stretch of constitutional authority would be overlooked and lost sight of in the great popularity of the proposition he made for a settlement of this Presidential question. As to interfering with the work of the committee appointed to consider the Electoral count, Mr. Wood thought that while it was an able body, made up from among the best men of the House, yet the members would be glad to have suggestions, and even directions, from the House. He will keep his resolution, according to his words, ready to offer at a moment's notice. Just when the moment will arrive that the peace of the land depends upon the adoption of Mr. Wood's resolution, not even Mr. Wood himself can predict. Speaking of his resolution and the results to be gained by a new election in the three States of South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana, Mr. Wood says that the people of the country would be satisfied with the result of a new election in these States, and that the great importance attached to such new election would of necessity make them free from the disgraceful acts of fraud and violence complained of in the recent election. Both parties, he says, would be on the alert, and would throw around a new election such safeguards that there could be no fraud, and consequently no cause to question the result. Mr. Wood says there is no constitutional authority for a new general election, and that if Mr. Hewitt is in favor of such a scheme as he has been reported to be, he is alone among all the party leaders in his convictions. When asked if there could be no new general election for President under the Constitution—how there could be a new election in three States as proposed by his resolution—he said that it could only be done by a slight stretch of constitutional authority, but that the end reached he thought would justify the means. Mr. Wood is a little reticent upon the Presidential question generally, and speaks very guardedly of his views of the situation. He seems to care to talk of the future more than the present, and to speak of probabilities and possibilities more than of actual facts now before the public. He evidently does not have a very exalted idea of the Southern Democracy, and intimates that there was a good deal of rascality there on both sides during the late election, which could be prevented in his new election.

The idea is entirely new, and it is quite likely to receive considerable attention in certain Democratic quarters. The advancement of it by Mr. Wood is strikingly indicative of a feeling among Democrats that they cannot get Mr. Tilden elected by any of their old schemes, and they are casting about for something new. All these efforts at some kind of arrangement outside the provisions of the law and the Constitution, come from Democrats, and besides indicating a consciousness of defeat, show that the Constitution to which they profess such devotion is very little cherished when it does not meet their wants.

LOUISIANA.

A JUDGE OF THE NEW SUPERIOR CIVIL COURT APPOINTED BY GOV. KELLOGG—THE ORDERS OF THE JUDGE RECOGNIZED BY THE DEMOCRATIC SHERIFF.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 6.—Judge Alfred Shaw has been appointed by Gov. Kellogg to be the Judge of the New Superior Civil Court of the Parish of Orleans, filling an original vacancy on the bench of the court created by an act of the present Legislature of Louisiana, and Col. "Jack" Wharton has been appointed Clerk of the same court. Judge Shaw, on assuming his new office to-day, called upon Civil Sheriff Thomas H. Handy to open court according to the forms of law, and that gentleman promptly recognizing the call of Judge Shaw, sent his chief deputy and caused him to open court. Sheriff Handy is the newly elected Civil Sheriff of the parish. He is a partisan Democrat of the ultra school, but otherwise a sensible man. He was returned elected by the Returning Board, and commissioned by Gov. Kellogg. Great pressure has been brought to bear on him to enlist his support of the Nicholls faction, but he followed the advice of his legal counselor, and has to-day placed himself squarely as a supporter of law and order and the legal State Government. The unexpected action of Sheriff Handy has been a severe blow to the Democratic conspirators.

Gov. Kellogg reorganized the Supreme Court of Louisiana to-day by reappointing Hon. John T. Ludeling as Chief Justice, and by appointing Hon. John E. King as an Associate Justice, to fill a vacancy. The other Associate Justices are P. H. Morgan, Rufus K. Howell, and J. Edwards, Leonards, holding over under eight-year appointments. The new appointments were submitted to the Senate and confirmed to-day. The Democratic seceders from the Legislature met at Odd-fellow's Hall to-day and found themselves without a quorum. The Democrats have publicly announced that Mr. Nicholls will take the Governor's oath of office on Monday, in the balcony of St. Patrick's Hall. Mr. Packard will be inaugurated as Governor at the State-house.

NO TROUBLE APPREHENDED IN NEW-ORLEANS ON MONDAY—THE SENATE AND HOUSE INVESTIGATIONS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 6.—Gov. Kellogg apprehends no trouble on Monday. He thinks the Democratic programme, after inaugurating Nichols, is to duplicate the State Government, but pending a solution of the Presidential question, they will avoid a collision.

The Senate Committee met this morning, but the witnesses from East Feliciana being delayed, an adjournment was had until Monday morning. Senators Wadleigh, Oglesby, and McDonald and a few invited guests left this afternoon to inspect the jetties at South-west Pass. The Senate Sub-committee heard Augustus Williams, (colored,) of Baton Rouge, this morning, but his evidence developed nothing of special importance in connection with events there. No more witnesses were in attendance, and the committee adjourned till Monday.

The House Committee to-day examined D. B. Gorham, District Attorney of Natchitoches, who said he never knew he was a candidate until after the election, and that the law required him to live in the district, but he did not live there. He acknowledged writing a letter to United States Marshal Pitkins for a blank commission for a Supervisor of Registration in Ouachita in the event that Supervisor Brady failed to meet the expectations of the party; he had read McEnery's speech at Baton Rouge, and thought he favored an aggressive warfare against carpet-baggers; he thought the Republican vote had been diminished eight or ten thousand by the disturbances, and that the Republican majority proper is about 25,000.

Joseph E. Williams, (colored) of New-Orleans, testified that he assisted in organizing a Democratic Club; Craig was elected President; never had more than seven or eight members; witness was arrested charged with breaking into a house and raising a disturbance, and sent to prison; was accused of collecting money for the club and appropriating it to his own use; voted the Republican ticket because the Democrats did not treat him right; believes if the Democrats were in power the condition of the colored people in some sections would be worse than that of slavery.

C. A. Feustee, of Lafourche Parish, testified: Was Commissioner of Election; the Democrats cut the tally-sheets. Sullivan, (Democrat) United States Supervisor, made out tally-sheets and his friends put their pistols on the table, and asked us to sign the tally-sheets; we were afraid to refuse, and complied; Sullivan made no threat when he put his pistol on the table; all the Commissioners were Republicans; we never kept any list of votes, although the law directed us to do so.

THE DEMOCRACY OF OHIO.

THE TONE OF DEMOCRATIC REVOLUTIONISTS COOLING DOWN—HOW THEY ARE OBEYING ORDERS ISSUED IN NEW-YORK—VIOLENT EXPRESSIONS SAID TO BE OBJECTIONABLE—THE SCRAMBLE FOR OFFICE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 6.—There has been a very perceptible cooling down of late in the tone of the Democratic revolutionists in Ohio, and the strained pretense of indignation over Gov. Hayes' prospective inauguration is maintained with great difficulty. Either the cue has been given from the Tilden head-quarters that violent expressions will not do, or the gentlemen who manage the indignation machine have had the sagacity to discover this for themselves, and a strong effort will be made to put all effervescent Democrats into a straight-jacket who attend the bull-dozers' convention next Monday. In the recent caucus of Democratic members of the General assembly national questions have been the principal topics of discussion, and strong efforts have been made in the way of mutual inculcation of the virtues of discretion and self-restraint. How far this will go toward keeping under proper discipline the over-charged delegates, who will come to the convention for the express purpose of uncorking their indignation, remains to be seen; but there is no doubt that the entire programme for the occasion has been prepared in advance, and for the express purpose of keeping all emotional and conspicuously obnoxious remarks severely in the background. There are also strong indications that those who are managing the affair have far less concern for Mr. Tilden's fortunes than for their own, and that the 8th of January demonstration is to be a mere masquerade of rival candidates for Governor, United States Senator, and so forth, preliminary to the next State canvass.

Daily advices as to the state of political feeling in all parts of Ohio confirm the previous reports that the Republicans are everywhere firm, and unanimous in the belief that Gov. Hayes has been fairly and legally elected, and that there is no necessity or excuse for any compromise or temporizing on that subject. It is equally clear that a large mass of Democrats—indeed, nearly all except those having a personal interest in agitation—quietly acquiesce in this result, and anticipate a Republican Administration for the next four years.

JOHN THOMPSON'S GREATNESS—AN ARMY OF 100,000 READY TO TAKE THE CAPITAL—TILDEN TO BE INAUGURATED—THE MEETING AT TOLEDO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Considerable information has been received here by letters from Ohio about the temper and action of the Democrats of that State. One report that comes is that John Thompson, Sergeant at Arms of the House, proposes to appoint 100,000 men as deputies, and have them in Washington on the 4th of March, to execute the will of the House with respect to Tilden's inauguration. Thompson is quite capable of inventing such a scheme, but hardly has sufficient military experience for the command of such a force. The county meetings of Democrats to select delegates to the State Convention of the 8th inst., are full of wild talk. A letter says: "The meeting in Toledo was redolent of blood and violence. Scribner, who is the law partner of Hurd, of the present House of Representatives, and considered one of their most cautious leaders, is reported to have declared, 'We will inaugurate Tilden peacefully if we can, forcibly if we must.' Steadman echoed the sentiment, and Ashley concurred. The meeting was not large, and the leading business men were not there, though their names appear."

THE LAKE SHORE DISASTER.

EXAMINATION OF THE BODIES AT THE MORGUE.

THE REMAINS PLACED IN A CEMETERY VAULT—PROCLAMATION BY THE MAYOR OF ASHTABULA—THE RETURN OF VALUABLE ARTICLES DEMANDED—WERE THEY STOLEN OR TAKEN FOR "KEEPSAKES?"

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 6.—Careful examination of the bodies at the Morgue was to-day made by two of the physicians of the place, and it was decided that there were, in several instances, parts of different bodies in the same coffin. In one instance there were portions of three different bodies, all supposed to have belonged to one person. By separating these additional bodies, six were found, making in all 22. All these were placed in coffins and removed to a vault in Woodland Cemetery, from which they will be taken, unless soon recognized, for burial. Late this afternoon the friends of Miss Libbie Meyers, of Buffalo, identified her remains by means of some shreds of a peculiar kind of lace which she wore. There is but little hope of many other bodies being identified, as there is scarcely any recognizable trace remaining upon them. The work of constructing the new bridge is being pushed with all possible dispatch, and the main timbers now entirely respan the ravine. Mr. Colline, the chief bridge-builder, hopes to have it ready for trains within three days. None of the vigilance of those engaged in dragging the creek has abated. A Roman gold locket and chain was discovered to-day. It is ornamented with leaves of gold and pearls, and bore the monogram "M. Etta Hamlin, May 19, 1875."

Proclamation to all whom it may concern:

Whereas, It is stated on good authority that numerous and various articles have been taken, either feloniously or for keepsakes, by divers persons, from the wreck of train No. 5, or Pacific Express, of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway, at its crossing of Ashtabula River, in this City, in spite of the strict Police surveillance over the same; and, whereas, there are many afflicted persons who have lost friends in this terrible disaster of the 29th ult., and are yet unable to obtain a single memento or article that they can identify which belonged to those that perished on that train,

Therefore, all persons who have taken, or who have in their possession, any article taken from said wreck, are hereby notified to return the same to A. A. Strong, of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad Company, or to this office. And I hereby notify and warn all persons who have taken or who have in their possession, if they are known or hereafter discovered, any article from said wreck who do not comply with this request immediately, that they will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. And, furthermore, I call upon all good citizens to notify myself, the Police Department, or said railroad authorities, if they are knowing or have good reasons to believe or suspect any person or persons to have taken or have in their possession any article taken from said wreck without authority, and also to assist me to bring to condign punishment all persons guilty of any felonious acts in the premises.

Given under my hand and official seal, at Ashtabula, Ohio, this 6th day of January, A. D., 1877.

H. P. HEPBURN, Mayor.

Some small articles have already been reclaimed by the City Marshal and others from citizens, and in desperate cases that have been brought to light, warrants of arrest have been issued. For instance, one person was found to be in possession of a very valuable gold bracelet, of peculiar pattern, which he obtained soon after the accident. It is enameled in checks on the back, is round on the inside, and flat on the outside, having a fine linked guard-chain attached. When first found it had upon its inside shreds of burned flesh, which were scraped off. When reclaimed it was at a jeweler's for repairs. Mr. Trueworthy, of Oakland, Cal., arrived to-day. His wife and daughter were killed and his son injured in the accident. The son will soon be sufficiently recovered to be removed. To-morrow Mrs. A. J. Graham leaves for New-York, having sufficiently recovered, in the opinion of the physicians, to be able to endure the journey. Three persons, who were supposed to have perished in the wreck, have to-day been restored to life through the exertions of Superintendent Paine, in telegraphing to their friends. Their names are as follows: R. F. Wilson, Toledo, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Peck, Peoria, Ill. The Coroner's inquest took no testimony to-day.

In the dispatch which appeared on Thursday morning, there was a telegraphic error which entirely altered the meaning of an important sentence. In allusion to the evidence of Mr. Strong, the depot master, about the disputed responsibility for not throwing water on the burning cars, the dispatch makes Mr. Strong say in answer to the Chief Engineer of the fire brigade, "I don't want water, I want help; he meaning thereby to forbid Mr. Knapp throwing water, but at the moment thinking more about help for the wounded than anything else." The manuscript dispatch handed to the telegraph operator read "he not meaning," &c. Justice to Mr. Strong calls for this correction.

A RESOLUTION OF INVESTIGATION PASSED BY THE OHIO ASSEMBLY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 6.—A resolution providing for investigation by a special committee of the Ashtabula railway disaster has passed the lower branch of the General Assembly, and will be reported for action of the Senate next Tuesday.

Gov. Hayes is spending a few day at Delaware, Ohio.

THE MILITIA OF VIRGINIA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RICHMOND, Jan. 6.—The voice of Virginia is not for war, and her military establishment is not upon a war footing, nor likely to be at any early date. Up to the recent death of Adjt. Gen. Richardson that office was liberally maintained upon a yearly salary of $1,500; but now the salary is reduced by Act of Assembly to $100 a year, and the office itself is attached to that of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. The report of the Adjutant General, just submitted, shows that the militia of the State is utterly unorganized, except that there are a number of harmless Brigadiers appointed, and the citizens liable to bear arms are not even enrolled. The Volunteer Militia consists of 25 companies of infantry, of which 16 are white and nine colored (or 1,000 white, rank and file, and 500 colored;) three white artillery companies of 14 guns, and one white cavalry company; total force organized, about 1,750 officers and men—some of whom are not yet armed. This city has 12 of the infantry companies (eight white and four colored) and one artillery company with six rifle guns. The arms and ammunition in store consist of 1,273 muskets, of which 243 are breech-loaders, and 688 are muzzle-loaders, 38 of the latter being smooth-bores; 139 sabres, 543 bayonets, and 33,730 cartridges, of which 1,950 are blank. In the report it affirms that 63 overcoats have been distributed to the colored volunteers, and only 84 to the white, and this has caused a great outcry against Gov. Kemper. The truth is, however, that the white volunteers have a supply of tents and other camp equipage of which the colored have none.

MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE.

AUGUSTA, Jan. 6.—The five negroes who murdered Hausman and Portman, near Aiken, S. C., last November, have been found guilty of murder in the first degree. One of the negroes confessed the crime, and gave the names of other prominent citizens whom the gang, of which he was a member, intended to murder. The murdered men were respectable German citizens.

THE LYKENS VALLEY COAL MINES.

LATER ADVICES FROM THE BURNING COLLIERIES—NOT THE FIRST FIRE WHICH HAS OCCURRED—AN UNFORTUNATE AFFAIR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 6.—Later advices from the burning mine at Lykens are encouraging. The Superintendent of the mine, Mr. E. C. Hanna, telegraphed as follows to a gentleman in this city at a late hour this afternoon: "We are gaining slowly, but, I think, surely." This is not the first time a fire has occurred in these mines. About two years ago fire was communicated to the coal in some manner, but owing to the prompt and energetic measures taken, it was extinguished before it gained headway. On that occasion, as at the present time, a steam fire-engine and a lot of hose were sent from this city, and did effective work in checking the progress of the flames. The same agencies were employed this time, but not as successfully. This is probably owing to the fact that the present fire broke out on New Year's Day, when but few men were at work. It was not discovered until about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and may have been burning for hours before the attention of the workmen was called to it. Great delay occurred in securing the services of the engine, which did not reach Lykens until Wednesday afternoon. The company's agents in this city were compelled to send to Philadelphia for hose, and that caused a further delay.

The fire in the Lykens Valley mines has materially retarded the work on Big Run mine, several miles west of Lykens. A number of miners working in Big Run mine were overcome with smoke and sulphur, and their companions had to carry them out of the mine. The burning of the mines at this season of the year is a calamity, the severity of which is fully realized by the business men of Lykens. Many of the workmen had been on short time for months, and were unable to save any money. Their enforced idleness finds them without resources, and that want and suffering must ensue seems inevitable. Taken in all its aspects, the outlook is very discouraging. A feeling of gloom and foreboding has seized all classes alike—miners, laborers, and business men. Their only hope is that an investigation, after the flames are extinguished, may develop the fact that the danger is not as great as was expected. Nothing definite has been ascertained as to the origin of the fire. Many rumors are afloat in the neighborhood, some persons even hinting at incendiarism.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE NAVY.

ACTION OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS—A BILL FOR A MIXED COMMISSION TO PREPARE A PLAN OF REORGANIZATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan 6.—The House Committee on Naval Affairs held a meeting to-day and agreed upon a bill providing for a mixed commission to consider and report a plan for the future government of the Navy. This commission will consist of two Senators, three Representatives, the General of the Army the Admiral of the Navy, and two other naval officers to be designated by the President. The bill will be reported to the House early next week and an effort made to pass it as soon as possible. It is the intention of the committee that this commission shall mature a plan for a complete reorganization of the Navy, and to suggest the future policy of the Government in its conduct.

THE CAPITAL POLICE BOARD.

A NEW BOARD TO BE APPOINTED BY THE PRESIDENT—GAMBLING TO BE BROKEN UP—HOW MALICIOUS SLANDERS ORIGINATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The President stated this morning that he had a list of names made out for nomination as Police Commissioners in place of the board whose resignations he had demanded. This list he would not change, and the nominations will be made on Monday. The President said they were good men of the District, and when appointed the investigation into the conduct of the Police with respect to the gambling-houses and of all other charges would be carried forward, and the busines would be probed to the bottom. The President spoke of the insinuations against himself, which had been allowed to go into the testimony heretofore taken, to the effect that he had bet at horse races and had pardoned a gambler immediately after his conviction, and thus discouraged other prosecutions. He said he had been to but two horse races since he was President, and at one of those his family was with him. He had no personal recollection of the pardon referred to, and only knew that he must have acted on the recommendation of the Attorney General, as he never pardoned any one without that recommendation. The statements about the President were maliciously interjected by witnesses, and admitted by the board without shadow of reason. The President, by making a new Police Board of good citizens, will gain great approbation. The question with which the public are most interested is that pertaining to the immunity enjoyed by the gambling fraternity, and the reason the business had been allowed to prosper.

It is understood that ex-Mayor Matthew G. Emery; John T. Mitchell, a well-known merchant; John C. Harkness, a prominent architect, and Frederick W. Douglass are the gentlemen selected. The resignation of Mr. William J. Murtagh, the President of the old board, has not yet been accepted, and it is thought probable that he will be retained as a member of the new board.

MR. ALVORD AND THE SPEAKERSHIP.

AN EMPHATIC DENIAL THAT HE GAVE HIS VOTE IN PURSUANCE OF A BARGAIN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—Mr. Alvord has published a letter denying in the most emphatic terms that he gave his vote for Speaker of the Assembly in pursuance of a bargain, that he influenced any one else to vote, or that his vote decided the contest one way or the other. He says: "I did not, in the most remote degree, either promise or endeavor to influence the action of any one member on the subject. But I uniformly refused to give advice when requested so to do. No one knows how I voted, and as it would not have changed the result in either direction, no one need now be informed. Neither Mr. Sloan nor his friends ever made any approaches to me for my aid in the canvass, nor did either of them make any promises of place to me, nor did I ever ask of him or them any such promise, and the Speaker will, in no respect, either violate or redeem any promise expressed or implied in whatever disposition he may make of me in the construction of his committees.

PRESIDENT SMITH, OF DARTMOUTH.

BOSTON, Jan. 6.—A morning paper announces the death of Rev. Dr. Asa D. Smith, President of Dartmouth College. President Smith is alive and his health much improved.

CALIFORNIA'S VINTAGE.

THE GOLDEN WINE OF THE PACIFIC COAST.

WINE-MAKERS OF THE FAR WEST—SOME VERY BAD CLARET—HOW GOOD NATIVE WINES ARE PRODUCED—A VISIT TO THE OLD MISSION VAULTS—A FIT SUBSTITUTE FOR OLD MADEIRA—THE INTRODUCTION OF CHAMPAGNES—TASTING THE DIFFERENT BRANDS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, Dec. 22, 1876.

Countless visitors to the Centennial will doubtless recall with amusement the flaming advertisements which infested Philadelphia generally, and the Agricultural Hall specially, of the Golden Wine of California. The public was tempted by the offer of a generous lunch for 50 cents and half a bottle of that glorious vintage for half a dollar. Those who yielded to the seductions of this promise will also undoubtedly remember that the Golden Wine was simply mud, and not even auriferous mud. Even at that early day the difference between Californian brag and Californian performance began to make itself perceptible to some people, who were highly amused by the pompous pretensions of the wine-makers of San Mateo. But if any one should suppose that this golden wine was a fair sample of what Californians can do in wine-making, that person would be lamentably in error. There are here wine-makers who have succeeded admirably, and whose efforts are destined to play a most important part in the future of this State. Nevertheless, I am free to say that the number of these is very small, whereas the number of wine-makers is exceedingly great. In the great Californian valleys, the Sacramento, Joaquin, San José, and others, very many persons are engaged in this business, more especially foreigners—French and South Italians. Their results are not only bad, but they are, from a stomachic point of consideration, atrocious—absolutely unequaled in villainy by the worst efforts that have been made in the same direction in New-Jersey or Nebraska. In both of these States I have tasted wine that was excruciating, that left a memory upon the palate like a great sorrow. But I am willing to make my affidavit in the most solemn manner that I have never been swindled into swallowing anything half so vile as some claret made by a Frenchman in the old mission of San José, and a white wine manufactured by an Italian from the basilicata in the Calaveras valley. If there was any mark known to typographers by which I could indicate a compound-comminated shudder, I would express it in connection with these two execrable potables—for wine I will not call them washed villa one-story high, and girt around with a broad piazza, was surrounded on all four sides by a lovely garden, in which the shrubberies were composed of pepper trees, olive trees, and fig trees. Behind the rear garden were the vineyards, which swept from the base of a high hill up its slope half way to its crest. Beyond the topmost line of the vines were rows of pines and blue-gums, planted to protect the vineyards from the bitter winds from the north, which blow terribly in the Summer time. The cellars were away from the house some little distance, and were built partly of stone, partly of timber. Each cellar was furnished with two rows of huge vats, ranging from 600 gallons in dimensions to 2,500 gallons. On each was painted in bold type the name of the grape and the year it was converted into wine. One of the sons of Mr. Palmer, who did the honors, was very polite, but still he at first spoke a little like a man repeating a very old story, and I rather suspected that Palmer's ranche was one of the lions of San Francisco, to which, probably, strangers were taken with a frequency which was more complimentary than agreeable to the Palmer family. But after a little conversation, when he found that was seriously desirous of learning what California had done and might do in the way of making wine, he thawed rapidly, sent for the head man, a very jolly Frenchman, and proceeded to open a formidable array of bottles, and to give me an immense amount of very valuable information.

The first step to improvement in wine making made by his father was to discard the Mission grape, cultivated by the old padres, and much approved for its prolific and hardy character. But wine from it is unpleasantly fiery, and has an earthy after-taste, very disagreeable to connoisseurs. His next step was to go to work scientifically in search of such vines as would marry the soil, and he settled down on Zinfindelis, Riesling, Grinache, White St. Peter, Chasselas, and Folie Blanche. He did not expect for one moment that the results of these grapes would be similar with those obtained in the lands from which he imported them. For instance, Riesling is, I believe, the grape of the Johannisberger District, but the wine he gets from it is absolutely a new wine, occupying a middle ground between Liebfrauenmilch and a light Sicilian wine. Zinfindella is something like a Burgundy, but in all probability requires long keeping to reduce its fiery nature. It is, however, a generous, full-bodied red wine, and perhaps even better than Norton's Virginia Seedling, made in Missouri by Capt. Poeschel. The wine from the golden chasselas tasted to me like a fine Hochheimer, and probably is destined to make quite a name. But the greatest surprise was the White St. Peter, a grape from the South of France. I looked at it, I tasted it, I looked at Palmer. He never winked, but maintained a perfectly impassive appearance. "Isn't this a joke? Aren't you, as the Californians say, corraling me; putting up a job upon my innocent head? Have you not given me a glass of old Madeira and called it by this new name?" He answered gravely, "No, I have done none of these things. I'm glad you think it has the Madeira flavor, because we think it has ourselves." And it certainly had. If Royal Phelps, who is such a connoisseur of old Madeira, will just try a bottle of this White St. Peter (Bacchus, what a name!) I think his judgment would settle the matter beyond dispute.

Palmer told me, however, that the greatest hopes of his father were placed in the Zinfindels and the Riesling. Now both of these wines are of excellent quality, but both are, I think, too full-bodied for dinner purposes. The Reisling, which is not subacid, would make a most delicious wine for dessert and general use, but would not be very acceptable with meats, &c. The Zinfindella, which is subacid, is exceedingly generous, and would, I think, be a good dinner wine for those who habitually add water. But for those who drink neat, as the French say, it is undoubtedly too full-bodied. It is not yet proved that Zinfindella does lose its fiery quality by keeping, but I think there can be little doubt of the fact. Nevertheless, I do think that Mr. Palmer will acknowledge himself that he has not yet succeeded in the great desideratum of American wine-growers. He has not yet found a true claret or anything which can take the place of Bordeaux wine. Zinfindella, though good in flavor, and generous in wanting in bouquet, is very fiery, and is exceedingly full-bodied, so that the fact of its being subacid is lost sight of. Therefore, it must be owned that he has not come as near the solution as the wine-growers of Missouri, whose Concord is much more like the desired article.

Arpad Haraszthy has turned his attention almost exclusively to the production of champagnes, and since his partnership with Sandsberger, at San Francisco, his brands begin to excite considerable attention. I visited the establishment and was received by the two named gentlemen with courtesy and cordiality, though there was a numerous gathering of Californians in the room to whom I was not, apparently, an agreeable visitor. They, in fact, jumped on me, as the expression goes in these parts, concerning sundry letters of mine, and asked me repeatedly what good I could possibly do to California by such egotistics. I found that their rooted idea was that every journalist who came to California was in duty bound to write in such guise as to attract emigration and capital to their State. I asked them "Why?" and they immediately rejoined, "What do you come to California for, then?" and, they continued, that if the country did not please me I ought not to stop in it. Then they cross-examined me strictly as to my knowledge of wines, (there were about seven of them,) and were hugely diverted with the innocence of my answers. Sandsberger opened several bottles of champagne, and I had hardly tasted mine before my opinion was called for. I gave it with hesitation, being in the enemy's camp, so to speak. But, taking my courage in both hands, I announced that I liked the flavor, but that there was an after-taste that was bitter and earthy. This induced shouts of derisive laughter, which made me feel pretty angry, because a man's palate may fail to give him the sensation of some very delicate and exquisite flavor, but can hardly be wrong in any positive announcement that it makes. In other words, the sins of the palate are of omission—not commission. Fortunately the great Haraszthy came to my relief, and stated that I was unquestionably right; that Sandsberger had opened a bottle of wine which had only been "disgorged" three days previously, and that the flavor of the syrup had not yet assimilated itself with the wine. And he announced, furthermore, that the unfortunate journalist whom they were figuratively boneting evidently possessed a very discriminating palate, and that he was very glad indeed to have the opinion of such a one.

The champagne I had just tasted was the Private Cuvei brand. I was now asked to taste another. I did. It was faultless. This, the Eclipse, was gone in flavor, exceedingly full-bodied, very sparkling, very dry, and had no after-taste whatever.

Now as the sugar excess of carbonic acid which had characterized the first, and made it a trifle too "grattant." And now I had to taste brand after brand, and acquitted myself so honorably that Sandsberger & Haraszthy sent for more connoisseurs and more champagne, until the room was full, and so were the visitors. I was taken round the establishment and saw the entire process, which has been described so often that I omit it. But I saw that the wines mingled to form the champagne were not poor wines, but the best and richest in the land. I saw, moreover, that the saccharine matter was so abundant that it was unnecessary to charge the bottles with carbonic acid, for they were already self-charged. I saw that they were so full-bodied that it was unnecessary to load them with Cognac, as is done with French champagnes. I saw, too, that there were no little additions of essences, for the natural flavor was so delicious that it required no artificial rounding up or heightening. But one thing was added, and that was a certain amount of syrup. This has been substituted by Haraszthy for the barley-sugar or rock-candy used by the French, and I am convinced that in so doing he has committed an error. It is this syrup, made from Honolulu molasses, which gives the bitter, earthy aftertaste, and I believe that it may in some instances take a considerable time before it is absolutely absorbed. In the Eclipse brand, indeed, I tasted a bottle which was only a week from disgorging, but yet had no aftertaste. But I also tasted a bottle of Eclipse which had been disgorged six weeks, and the syrup hinted its presence pretty loudly. If Sandsberger & Haraszthy could keep their wine six months after disgorging, I am satisfied that a faulty bottle of champagne from their house would be a wonder. But the demand for their wine is so enormous at $19 50 gold, wholesale price, that the immense majority is sold before it is a week old. This being the case, I would take the liberty of advising the use of barley sugar, after all. On general principles, there can be no question of the soundness of Haraszthy's views. But considering that the wine has no chance of absorbing the syrup before it is drank, I think that he is doing an injustice to himself as a producer and to the extraordinary merits of the wine. For it must be remembered that, considered as a natural wine, this champagne of California far excels the French, which is artificial to a very high degree. As a proof of this, I will mention the fact that, although every gentleman who participated in the grand sampling, of which I was a spectator, was sick, not one had a headache. This I believe is unknown with French champagne. GAR.

POLICE DEPARTMENT FINANCES.

A REQUEST FOR THE TRANSFER OF AN UNEXPENDED BALANCE OF THE FUNDS OF 1874 AND 1875 TO THE APPROPRIATION OF THE PRESENT YEAR—THE REASONS THEREFOR.

The following communication, asking for the transfer of the unexpended balances of the Police Department appropriations of 1874 and 1875 to the appropriation for 1877, was adopted at the meeting of the Police Board yesterday, and a copy was sent to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment:

To the Honorable Board of Apportionment of the City of New-York.

GENTLEMEN: The Board of Police hereby makes respectful application to your honorable board for the transfer to the account of the Police Department for 1877 of the unexpended balances of appropriation for account of this department for the years 1874 and 1875 to the amount of $146,669 78. There are numerous urgent reasons in favor of favorable action upon this application, and among them the following: A period of unusually cold weather accompanied with rain produced a mass of ice. Excessive falls of snow have followed, producing a partial blockade in all the streets of the City and excessive embarrassment to all locomotion and transportation. This condition embarasses, delays, and increases the cost of all business and movement, reduces the power of teams to haul vehicles and loads by one-half, wears them out and destroys their value at an extraordinary rate. Pedestrians are exposed to exhaustion and personal peril in going to and from their occupations. The hauling and distribution of food and fuel to 1,000,000 of inhabitants is burdened with expense, delayed, and often defeated. Stages and cars run with difficulty, are unavoidably overcrowded and delayed, inflicting real injury upon a multitude of citizens.

There are 275 miles of streets, averaging 60 feet in width, constituting an area of 9,680,000 superficial yards covered with one foot as it fell, to which is added necessarily a very large amount thrown from roofs and private areas and yards. This volume of snow is equal to 3,226,666 cubic yards. The removal and disposition of such a quantity of snow and ice is quite beyond the capacity of private citizens. It must remain perhaps during the whole Winter, with probable additions, to the vast detriment of business, unless the City authorities provide means for its removal. From all quarters appeals come to the Board of Police to apply some measure of relief from these excessively embarrassing conditions, to which, in the present condition of the department in respect to funds, none but negative answers can be returned. The expenditure of the money in clearing the streets of snow and ice, while it will benefit in large degree business and property interests, will incidentally employ a large number of persons at moderate labor wages, and reduce to the deplorably large number of unemployed poor who otherwise will be thrown for support upon charities, public and private, or forced into the streets to beg, steal, or starve.

It is understood that the appropriation by your honorable board for the year 1877 covers, on salary account, only 2,262 policemen. There are now patrolmen legally in office and on duty to the number of 30 in excess of the number thus provided for. This number can only be reduced by death, resignation or dismissal. According to the ordinary course of such events, three months, perhaps, will elapse before the force can be reduced to the limits of the appropriation. During that period the department can only make requisition for one-twelfth of the appropriation each month, which amounts would be insufficient to meet the claims for salary. Each failure to pay salary would afford ground of legal action by each unpaid officer against "the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty" for non-payment of salaries. The business of the Police Department increases from year to year by the addition of new duties and the more thorough performance of duties not new. The unavoidable expense increases in an equal ratio.

The department estimate for 1877 was made in each item as small as consistent with the probable requirements of the service, and taken as an aggregate will not meet the probable demands upon it. No margin will exist to respond to calls likely to arise from legislation, from the constantly increasing demands of several departments of the City Government for the service and aid of the Police, from increased business and pleasure travel, from new ferries, railroads, and steam-ship lines, from the continually increasing demands from citizens, moneyed and business institutions, from duties imposed in the detection, arrest, and punishment of criminals and the better guarding of exposed property and persons of citizens. While the City increases, the duties, labors and expenses of the Police Department must increase in like degree.

By the provisions of the Police law the rank and file of the force, now numbering 2,300 patrolmen, are appointed for life unless sooner dismissed on charges. Until recent years these appointments were made without regard to age. The force is growing old and increasing numbers each year are superannuated and disqualified for patrol duty, gradually reducing the efficiency of the force, which thus becomes loaded with a burden of old and sick men who must be paid, but who can render but little valuable service. This is a serious and a growing evil which the board has no legal power to remedy. Its present magnitude is illustrated by the following figures:

Number of days lost (sick time) and for which payment was made, 15,084¼; the same for which no payment was made, 11,519¼; total number of days lost, 26,603½; amount paid for sick time, $49,472 93—about equal to 73 years of one, or a year's service of 73 men.

The money appropriated will not be expended unless its expenditure is required by the public welfare, and all unexpended balances will be, as they always have been, accounted for. The board, therefore, hope that the transfer asked for will be granted, and without delay, because the demand for immediate application of the money is justified by the exigencies above referred to. Very respectfully, WILLIAM R. SMITH,

President Board of Police.

SERGT. MILLER'S TRIAL.

The trial of Sergt. Miller was resumed yesterday. Several witnesses were examined for the prosecution, one of whom testified that on the night of Feb. 3, 1875, the defendant called on him and asked him to see the Inspector, and use his influence to induce him not to include the fact of playing cards in the complaint. The prosecution also introduced as evidence the minutes of the Board of Police of May 8, 1876, on which date the resolution dismissing all complaints against members of the force on which no final action had been taken prior to Jan 1, 1876, was adopted, and also a list of cases to which it is claimed the resolution had reference, and which list did not include the name of Sergt. Miller. In answer to a question from Mr. MacLean, counsel to the Board, Mr. Hawley, the Chief Clerk, stated that he did not think the case of Capt. Williams was affected by the resolution. The case was then closed for the prosecution and the defense opened by placing the defendant on the stand. He testified that on the night of Feb. 3, 1875, he was at the corner of Fifty-ninth street and Eleventh avenue, when the barkeeper in Maher's saloon wanted to see him. Maher had been a member of the force and had been dismissed through his [Miller's] instrumentality, and he therefore did not wish to enter the store unaccompanied. He therefore rapped with the baton, and Patrolmen Smith and Carey answered his summons. With these officers he entered the saloon, and went into the back room, where he found Maher. He sat down at a table, and Maher commenced to tell him about some trouble he had had with cattle-drovers, who had broken into his place and created a disturbance. While conversing with Maher, Roundsman Raynor came in, and a few moments after Inspector McDermott came in. The Sergeant swore positively that he was not playing cards, nor did he have his coat and cap off, as stated by the Inspector. There was a pack of cards on the table, and his hand rested on the pack as he conversed with Maher. The case was adjourned until Tuesday next.

REWARDING MERITORIOUS CONDUCT.

A communication from the Life-saving Benevolent Association, requesting the permission of the Police Board to present $25 and a silver medal to Patrolman Michael Gorman, of the Thirteenth Precinct, as a testimonial for gallant service in saving a man from drowning, was yesterday read at the meeting of the board, and referred to the Committee on Rules and Discipline. A request from Mr. Abraham Beekhoff, whose store at Twentieth street and Broadway was recently robbed, for permission to present $300 to Detectives Silleck, Lyons, and King, as a reward for their efforts in recovering some of the stolen property, was referred to the same committee. Capt. McDonnell, of the Eighth Precinct, reported meritorious conduct on the part of Officers Wall and Murphy in assuming the boarders of the Foshay House, in West street, during a fire on Tuesday last; also on the part of Patrolman Byrnes in rescuing a child from a fire at No. 497 Broome street.

FUNERAL OF "EPH" HORN.

The remains of "Eph" Horn were buried yesterday from the Church of the Transfiguration, Rev. Dr. Houghton read the funeral services, after which the lid of the rich rosewood casket was removed and those who were present were permitted to take a last glance at the well-known features of the dead minstrel. The floral offerings were few but appropriate. The San Francisco troupe sent a pillow of flowers, with the inscription, "The End," in red immortelles; Tony Pastor presented a wreath, and Bryan, Wambold, and Backus a lyre. The pall-bearers were James Clark, Jacob Rickman, Harry Miner, and "Dick" Sands. Several prominent members of the theatrical profession were present, including Tony Pastor, Gus Williams, Matilda Heron, John Mathews, James Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Backus, Mrs. Mulligan, Mr. and Mrs. Bitch, Mrs. John Wild, James Collier, Neil Bryant, Gus Phillips, and Dr. Quackenbos.

GREENWOOD LAKE REGION.

A CHOICE SPOT IN TWO STATES.

ITS HISTORY AND PRESENT ATTRACTIONS—FORMERLY A FAVORITE PLACE WITH THE INDIANS—CROSSING THE LAKE ON A BITTERLY COLD NIGHT—A VISIT AMONG THE NATIVES.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

GREENWOOD LAKE, Wednesday, Jan. 3, 1877.

The dwellers in and around Gotham know but little of the beautiful region of which Greenwood Lake is, as you may say, the centre; but, thanks to the boat clubs who made it temporarily prominent last Summer, and to the railroad company who have brought it within reach, and will succeed in bringing it still closer to civilization long before next harvest time, the lake and its surroundings will soon be as familiar to the tourist, the artist, and the average Summer boarder, as any of our festival resorts whose names have been household words for so many years. For nature has given Greenwood Lake its proper share of advantages, and nothing is lacking to make its beauties and its comforts of general benefit, but to bring them to the notice of the world at large. To be sure, it has been from time immemorial the Summer resort of many families residing in the Counties of Passaic and Orange, and in the season hunters and fishermen from far and near have found it one of the best regions for sport within 200 miles of the Metropolis. So it is not utterly unknown, but it is well that the world abroad should be told something about it.

The lake lies in Passaic County, N. J., and Orange County, N. Y., about two-thirds of its area in the latter. It is nine miles long by an average of three-quarters of a mile wide; but up to the year 1836 it was only a pond covering less than one-half of its present area. It is 10 miles from Warwick, eight miles south-west of Chester at the junction of the Newburg and Erie Roads, and about 50 miles from New-York, from which City it is reached by the Montclair and Greenwood Lake Railway, a new road under the management of the New-Jersey Midland. This road touches the lake at Cooper's, and little steamers, of which there are three in use in the Summer, take passengers to the hotels on the northern, western, and southern shores of the lake. Three picturesque islands dot the clear surface of the mimic sea, tall hills bound and shadow it on three sides, and at the southern end the land rises in a gentle slope to a well-wooded plateau, which at the distance of two miles loses its continuity on meeting a long range of dark hills known as the Greenwood Mountains. Here, before the march of civilization brought population and breech-loaders to these wilds, the red deer wandered fearlessly; here the bear hibernated; and here, when the warm sun of spring coaxed him out, he plied his vocation as a food-hunter, and reared his hairy progeny in peace, save when, occasionally, the red man's arrow sought his bushy hide and the knotty club completed the murderous work the cruel shaft began. There are no deer, no bears in the mountains now; but the wild-cat still makes them his home, thousands of rabbits burrow in their rocky gorges, the fox holds high carnival here with the lonely farmer's poultry; and quails, partridges, and woodcock live here the year round in vast numbers.

There are evidences that at one time in the far distant past this region was a favorite spot for the Indians. No rude heaps that had been cities clothe the ground with history; but on the east side of the lake are two large Indian mounds, from which, at various times, rude implements of husbandry have been taken, and weapons of war such as men used in the stone age. Within a few years human bones have been exhumed, and here and there on the west side hunters have discovered traces of villages that must have been deserted hundreds of years ago. Numbers of flint arrow-heads, spear-heads, pestles and mortars, and stone axes, are preserved by the dwellers in and around the lake region, and in some instances the stories connected with the relics are remarkably interesting. I regret to say, however, that I can trace none of them down to a fact foundation. As Sir Thomas Browne says of Herodotus, these relic-holders besprinkle their stories "with many fabulosities."

In 1762 a dam was constructed by what was then known as the London Company, and this, throwing the water back upon the lowlands considerably increased the size of the pond. In 1836 the Directors of the Morris and Essex Canal purchased thousands of acres on the borders of the pond, paying, I am told an average of $100 an acre, and erected a still larger dam, by means of which the water surface was so largely increased that the pond became worthy of a loftier title, and it was henceforth known as Greenwood Lake.

I reached Cooper's a few nights ago, the only passenger in the last train from New-York. The road terminates on the very margin of the lake, and there is no hotel on the east side; so it was necessary for me to cross the frozen surface of the lake before I could find a resting place and a shelter from the storm that was threatening to break within a very few hours. The ice was perhaps a foot thick, and over this was spread another foot of tough snow left by the storm of a day or two before. It was bitterly cold, and the night breeze from the north swept down the lake with eager velocity, and with such ruthless augmentation of the chilly rigor that if the direction taken by my guide and myself had been north instead of south-west, it is more than probable we should have found it necessary ere many days to undergo the Taliacotian operation as to our facial prominences, and have supplemental noses supplied us from the superfluous flesh of our calves or thighs. The walk of three-quarters of a mile across the lake, through the snow and with the keen wintry wind pinching us on the quarter, without mitigation or remorse, was not altogether unpleasant, even though an occasional break through the thin outer crust of ice into the watery slush beneath did suggest a cold bath; for there was the novelty of the trip, there was the pale moon looking down through its gauzy veil upon a long stretch of unbroken white, fringed with high reaches of shadowy woodland; there were the gloomy mountains just ahead, standing like a long line of grim sentinels over the weird scene below them; there was universal stillness, broken only by the crunching of the snow beneath our feet, and then there was Brown's Hotel in sight, with its certainty of warm fires, a hot supper, and a comfortable bed. The fire, the supper, and the bed came in due season, and so did the storm.

In the morning I sallied out, not to see the landscape by daylight, for that was simply impossible on account of the driving snow which came down in long, thick flakes that darkened the air; but to seek for information regarding the early history of the Greenwood Lake country. At the base of the mountain, a mile away, I found the residence of Mrs. Woodruff, who had been described to me as a walking cyclopedia of knowledge pertaining to the subject then nearest my heart.

"Who comes there?" was the call from within an ancient and dilapidated frame building as I knocked at the door.

"A stranger," said I, "to see Mrs. Woodruff."

"Pooty time for a stranger to call," said the voice. And then there were two voices which engaged for two minutes or more in a sort of amœbean contest of growls, one answering the other after the manner of Venetian gondoliers in real life.

At last I heard the stronger voice say, "I guess you'd better look, Joe, and see who it is;" and the door was unbolted, unlocked, and unchained, and as it opened a little way, a man put his head in the gap, and took a good look at your correspondent standing on the door stone, with the falling and driving snow covering him like a pall. His long examination of my features seemed to satisfy him that I was neither a tramp nor a lightning-rod agent, so he allowed me to enter. The room was a large one, very poorly furnished. Fronting me were two beds, set end to end, from one of which the man had just arisen in full dress, if you count out from the total of the garments which make up that costume, the hat, the boots, and the necktie. In the other lay an old woman, who watched me with a pair of keen gray eyes. At one end of the room was a large old-fashioned fire-place, and in front of this a cooking-stove that had been innocent of blacking for ever so long. The old lady was Mrs. Woodruff; the man, her son Joseph. The mother was a nonagenarian; the son had seen, perhaps, 50 Summers, but looked to be hardly 20 years younger than his parent. It was after 10 o'clock in the morning.

"Might as well lay abed as get up in such weather as this," said the old lady. "There ain't nothin' to do, and it's too peaky cold out o' bed for comfort. Joe, give the stranger a chair, and find out what he wants, and then build a fire."

Joe first applied himself to the execution of the last command, then, in the intervals of splitting kindling wood and blowing the blaze, he interrogated me as to the object of my visit. When I had made this somewhat plain, he offered me a chair, and as the wood began to burn and the fire to throw out a gentle heat upon the cold air, the old lady slid out of her bed and made her simple toilet by throwing a calico gown over the multiplicity of enfoldings which already graced her person. Then she subjected me to a critical examination as to my political creed, asking just such questions as would be natural coming from one who had lived out of the world for forty years. As I rarely had an opportunity to say a word, she had the floor to herself, and this is about the substance of her talk:

"Them Tories will ruin the country yet. The Whigs is the party that's true for the country ever sense they throwed the tea overboard and whipped the British in Jackson's war. I was a gal then. My husband fit in that war, and I remember when I went from Staten Island over to York. It was in 1814. Ever been there sense? No, and I don't want to go. It's a wicked place. I would know it again, though, for I remember St. Paul's Church and the dock where I landed. They hain't moved St. Paul's Church, hev they? Well, I s'pose York has growed a bit sense I was there. They say there's agoin to be a time about the Electoral vote. I thought the votin' was all over, and what on airth this Electoral vote is I don't know, and Joe don't, neither. Yes, there must ha' been Injuns in these mountains away back, but that was afore my time. Now, about York. Is that dock there yit? There was a park close by the dock. The Battery? Well, I didn't hear the name, but I guess that was it. St. Paul's Church was close by, and there was lots of sogers around. Jackson was a great man. Joe, show the stranger that stone they got from the Injun grave, and fetch some water."

It was thus, with matter and impertinency drolly mixed, with reason and madness curiously intermutating, that the relic of a by-gone age sought to instruct me concerning the early history of a region which she had lived in for more than half a century. Her recollections and her sentiments implicated and hindered each other like the ingredients of saltpetre, and by the time Joe had reached us with the water she had drifted far away from the buried past and occupied herself for the rest of the morning in arguing with herself that if it is pleasant to drown why it must be pleasanter to die in bed, especially in Winter.

From Joe, however, I learned an important fact; namely, that the first white settler on the shores of Greenwood Lake was one Belcher. It appears that he, following the example of Samuel, who bivouacked between Mizpeh and Shem, raised his ebenezer on the land now owned by mine hostess of Brown's Hotel; but that like the remnant of that escaped from the house of Judah, he took root downward and bore fruit upward; that is, his sons migrated to the northern end of the lake, near which some of their descendants still hold divers and sundry tracts of land by livery of seizin.

I next called upon Elias Sindel, the Nimrod of the country side, who has made the Greenwood Mountains the main theatre of his exploits with trap and gun for a quarter of a century. In his hours of leisure he makes and mends the foot-gear of his neighbors; and it was in his little cabin on the road-side that I found him.

"Only for this snow-storm," said Elias, "I should be out now, looking for a cat that I tracked the other day. He's a monster, about as big a cat, I guess, as was ever seen in these woods."

Then he told me stories about the hunters of the old time who, like Esau, went to the field for venison and brought it; who battled with the angry bear; who took fish from the lake, and fat birds from the wood; and who lived long lives of quiet and content far away from the maddening crowd and the dictionary. "But there has been no bear in this country for many long years," said Elias; "the last was killed by Jake Ryerson and Isaac Cooley after a sharp tussle, more than 25 years ago. The deer have disappeared, too; but there are lots of wild-cats left."

It snowed all day until about 4 o'clock, when it began to hail; and at supper time it snowed and hailed and rained. When the hour for retiring came, the wind blew great guns. It came howling down the frozen lake and through the leafless trees, and lashed the streaming panes of the hostelrie with whips of snow and ice, till one was almost forced to believe that there was something human in the utter remorselessness of its malignity. The morning broke clear, and at the first sign of light I started across the lake in a sleigh to explore the land on the other side.

Almost the country on both sides of the lake belongs to Peter Cooper and his son-in-law, Hon. Abram S. Hewitt. At Hewitt Station, two miles east of Cooper's, are the Cooper & Hewitt furnaces, which in the busy season employ a large number of men. They are now idle, and most of the men, together with dozens of lusty young fellows from the farms near by, are engaged in cutting away the stumps that have so long impeded navigation on the lake. A few months ago the water of the lake was drawn off through the sluice-way at Cooper's, and the stumps, of which there are many thousands, now stand about five feet above the ice, and can be easily removed. When this work is done and the water again collects there will be a good depth from end to end of the lake, and the future visitor will have plenty of room to travel in. The boat crews, too, will find their limits enlarged, and, with this and other improvements soon to be made, Greenwood Lake will be one of the most attractive resorts in the country.

Within a stone's throw of the station at Cooper's is a building owned by an association of benevolent citizens of Newark, and called a "Sanitarium." It was opened last Summer as a temporary home for sick and destitute children. Near by is the cave of an old hermit, John Cole by name, in whom I expected to find a remarkable character. I regret that I was disappointed. Instead of having lived in this cave from time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, he has been an anchorite only two years. He is not a wise man, but he is certainly obstinate and reticent. This fact accounts for his reputation as a sage. The old fellow lives on fish in the Summer, but when cold weather comes he is an object of general charity.

Three miles away is Ringwood, the beautiful summer residence of Abram S. Hewitt; and in the vicinity of the Brandon, the Windermere, and the other hotels near the head of the lake, are a few private residences used only in Summer. Next season Dr. Deems' new Church of the Strangers will be erected somewhere near the cluster of hotels, and in the course of another year this part of the lake will be crowded with Summer villas, and alive with pleasure-seekers from all parts of the country.

A few miles away are the ruins of the old Stirling Furnace, where, it is claimed by the dwellers in and about the lake, the great chain was made that was stretched across the Hudson at West Point during the Revolution, to keep the British fleet from ascending the river. This claim, I think, is not valid, for a chain of the immense size of that great piece of human handiwork, links of which I have seen up the river, could have been made only at a foundry, and there was never a foundry at Stirling. There was one, however, at Morristown, and it is probable that the chain was made there.

SCARLET FEVER IN JERSEY CITY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

An article appears in your journal of this morning concerning the prevalence of scarlet fever in Jersey City, which does great injustice to the Board of Education in regard to school No. 12, and I cannot conceive how any person could pen such a statement in face of the facts, which are as follows: I was immediately notified by the Superintendent of the presence of scarlet fever in the janitor's family, and at once visited the school and announced publicly to teachers and scholars the whole case, saying that they ought to advise their parents without delay, and they could then determine whether or not to keep them at home. As a result of this action, about one-half the school remained away. There were present at the time Dr. Wilkinson, Superintendent William L. Dickinson, and Mr. Joslyn, Principal of the school. There could have been no more effective method of publicity, and I do not believe a single family represented in that school was ignorant of the truth after sundown of the same day. Yours, truly,

W. PANGBORN

GOV. KELLOGG'S MESSAGE.

THE CONTEST IN LOUISIANA.

LAMENTABLE STATE OF POLITICAL AFFAIRS—INJUSTICE AND OPPRESSION—HOW THE COLORED MEN ARE MURDERED AND NO ONE IS PUNISHED.

Gov. Kellogg, of Louisiana, in his last annual message to the Legislature, submitted on the 1st inst., thus refers to the grave questions at issue in that State:

In the communications I have had the honor to lay before the General Assembly heretofore, I have scarcely alluded to political questions. There has been much in our political history during this time to call for comment, but I have preferred to confine my recommendations chiefly to measures calculated to advance the material interests of the State, trusting that time and returning prosperity would soften asperities and harmoniously adjust the changed relations of capital and labor, and the political status of the two races.

Recent events, however, seem to require that I should now refer at some length to matters of State and national policy. Grave national issues depend upon the solution of political problems closely affecting the peace and prosperity of Louisiana. It has become a question for the nation to decide, whether the violent and illegal means which have been systematically put forth in this and other Southern States, to prevent, if possible, a fair expression of the will of the whole people at the ballot-box, shall be allowed to prevail. The nation is confronted with the possibility of a Presidential election hinging on the votes on States not long since in rebellion against the national authority, within whose borders the constitutional amendments which embody the leading issues decided by the war have been virtually set aside by armed violence, intimidation, and murder.

This is really the practical question to be determined. It is sometimes thinly disguised as a struggle against corrupt Governments and for reform, a pious warfare of intelligence and virtue against ignorance and vice. The results aimed at, however, in each of the States in question appear to be the same—the wresting of all political control in the hands of an aristocratic oligarchy, irrespective of the will of the majority of the people, and the practical nullification of the constitutional measures which accord to the emancipated race the rights of citizens. To illustrate: Two years ago, in our neighboring State of Mississippi, there was a Republican State Administration. It had been elected by a large and unquestioned majority of the people; it was not oppressive; taxation was light; there was no appreciable debt; the State was prosperous. That Government has been swept out of existence. The freedmen of Mississippi are to-day represented in Congress just as they were when slaves before the war, with only this difference, that their emancipation has increased the representative strength of their white masters. The State of Louisiana on a fair vote is largely Republican, as was Mississippi. Yet, within the past eight years, five organized attempts have been made in the interest of the same class to overcome the will of the majority; four times by violence and once by fraud.

The success of any one of these efforts would have placed the State of Louisiana in the same position that Mississippi now holds. There can be no mistake as to the attitude of the opponents of the Republican party in Louisiana toward the constitutional amendments. It is clearly cut and well defined. The proof does not rest upon evidence of violence in any one or more parishes, or at any one election. It is legibly written all over the history of the State since the termination of the war. The Legislature of 1865-6, convened under the reconstruction policy of President Johnson, and composed exclusively of white citizens, many of them still prominent aspirants for political office, tabled the fourteenth amendment by a unanimous vote, both Houses, and passed laws consigning the freedmen to virtual peonage. One of the first public efforts to give practical effect to the new amendment when finally adopted by the country, was met by the terrible massacre of July, 1866. No word of condemnation of that bloody outrage has yet been heard from the opponents of Republican principles in this State. It is justified and approved. The Judge of the Criminal Court, who refused to charge the Grand Jury in relation to the murders then committed, has ever since been biennally re-elected to the same office by the majority of the voters of the City of New-Orleans.

In the Spring of 1868, the interposition of military power, under the direction of Congress, enabled the colored people to exercise their newly-conferred right of suffrage, and to elect a Republican State Government. Whatever may be the errors or shortcomings justly chargeable against that Administration, (which entered upon its duties under circumstances of great difficulty,) it is a matter of record that no disposition was shown to wait and judge it fairly by its acts, or to accord to it moral support in any effort for the general welfare. It was at once denounced as a usurpation thrust upon the people by Federal bayonets, and the young men of the State were invited by public resolution to form themselves into clubs and arm for its overthrow. And a few months later in that same year the candidate of the national Democratic Party for the Vice Presidency of the United States declared the constitutional amendments void and recommended ten acts a nullity, and called upon the President to use the Army of the United States to suppress the usurping Southern Governments established under those enactments. As a natural consequence of this declaration and of the scenes of violence which followed, nearly one more than 5,000 out of 48,000 colored men in Louisiana who had voted in the Spring for a Republican Governor were permitted to cast their votes in the Fall for a Republican President. These are matters of notoriety. It is not necessary to trace in detail the subsequent history of colored suffrage in this State, further than to say that the fall of 1873, the massacres of Colfax and Coushatta; the White-League riots of September, 1874, and the later outrages attending the last election, which have shocked the moral sense of the whole country. Viewed separately or together, these crimes disclose one motive, their accomplishment has tended to precnie one end. Their perpetrators are shielded by public sentiment; their defenders are rewarded by election to public offices in communities where hostility to Republican principles predominates.

It is a painful fact in the history of the State that when a number of white citizens were arrested, tried, and convicted before a jury in the United States Circuit Court of the murder of more than a hundred surrendered defenseless colored men at Colfax Court-house, the most influential residents of New-Orleans formed associations for their relief. The entertainments given for the so-called "Grant Parish sufferers" were the most popular of the season. No terms of opprobrium were found too strong for the United States Circuit Judge who, acting under a strict sense of duty, held that the proceedings taken under the reconstruction acts of Congress against these confessed persons were legal and valid, and no praise too extravagant to be bestowed upon the Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, who acting, it is to be presumed, under an equally strict sense of duty, declared those proceedings unconstitutional and void. The Grant Parish massacre is still regarded as a justifiable assertion of white supremacy.

It is argued, with apparent plausibility, that the disorders admitted to prevail in some of the Southern States are the result of the inefficiency of the Republican State authorities and their inability to enforce the laws and bring the guilty parties to justice. In August last the Executive of this State officially directed the attention of the State Central Committee of the opposing party to the organized violence exercised in certain parishes of the State toward prominent Republicans. The Chairman of that committee replied that the parishes named were presided over by Republican officials, whose duty it was to bring evil-doers to justice under the State laws, and that if there was any truth in these charges it was conclusive proof that the Republican Party was responsible for the disorders which had occurred in this State. Similar arguments are continually repeated. It is pointed out that Georgia and Alabama and other Southern States, which have been 'redeemed,' as it is called, from Republican rule, peace prevails, and political murders are comparatively unknown. The very statement of this proposition carries with it confession of guilt. It discloses the fact that the disorders in the South are created by the opponents of Republicanism for the purpose of obtaining control of the Government, and that until they obtained possession of the office, whether they have such a majority of the legal voters as would justly entitle them to those offices or not, political turmoil will continue.

The first case of successful prosecution for political crime has yet to occur in Louisiana. Instances are unhappily not wanting where bold efforts made to enforce the laws have been promptly followed by the assassination of Judges, prosecuting officers, and Sheriffs. It may here be recalled that during the Gubernatorial election for State officers and Congressmen in 1874, the State Central Committee of the opposition passed a formal resolution pledging their influence to secure a discontinuance of political violence throughout the State upon certain conditions, which being complied with, upon acts of violence against Republicans almost immediately ceased. No political tribunals can prevent or punish political offenses while the controlling public sentiment among the more influential citizens sanctions or at least connives at those disorders. There seem to me but three ways by which peace can be maintained and the laws of the State and of the United States can be enforced in Louisiana against political offenders.

1. The surrender of the State Government to the minority who controlled its destinies before the emancipation of the slaves.

2. The acceptance by that minority in good faith of the constitutional amendments which express the issues decided by the war.

3. The enactment by Congress of such appropriate and valid legislation as will secure the enforcement of those amendments against organized, insidious and deep-seated hostility.

The first of these plans I believe would be subversive of freedom and of the principles upon which a republican form of government is based. I shall be unfeignedly glad if I am called upon to welcome as my successor in office one whose fidelity to the principles on which, in my opinion, the future peace and prosperity of the community depend, has been abundantly proved, and whose tried integrity and experience in the public service entitle him to full confidence. I will ask you to accord to him earnest support in maintaining the laws and advancing the material interests of the State, and in securing and protecting the humblest citizen in the rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the country."

THE DEMOCRATIC PROTEST.

On the 2d inst. a delegation from the Democratic House of Representatives waited upon Gov. Kellogg and presented a formal protest "against the occupation of the State-house by armed Police and Militia, and against the unlawful and unwarranted exclusion of duly elected representatives of the people." Gov. Kellogg replied:

GENTLEMEN: There are several statements contained in this communication which are incorrect. There were no military, properly speaking, in the State-house yesterday. There was a force of Police, armed no differently from the way in which they are ordinarily armed as conservators of the peace. They were simply here for the purpose of protecting the members of the Legislature. They were not here for the purpose of interfering with any member of either house. They were specially instructed not to interfere with any member, but to protect them from

EDWARD DOWDEN.

THE SECRET CHAMBER.

DEDICATED TO THE INQUIRERS IN THE NORMAN TOWER.]

CHAPTER I.

Castle Gowrie is one of the most famous and interesting in all Scotland. It is a beautiful old house, to start with—perfect in old feudal grandeur, with its clustered turrets and walls that could withstand an army—its labyrinths, its hidden stairs, its long mysterious passages—passages that seem in many cases to lead to nothing, but of which no one can be too sure to what they lead. The front, with its fine gateway and flanking towers, is approached now by velvet lawns, and a peaceful, beautiful old avenue, with double rows of trees, like a cathedral; and the woods out of which the grey towers rise look as soft and rich in foliage, if not so lofty in growth, as the groves of the South. But this softness of effect is all new to the place—that is, new within the century or two which count for but little in the history of a dwelling-place, some parts of which, at least, has been standing since the days when the Saxon Athelings brought such share of arts as belonged to them to solidify and regulate the original Celtic art which reared incised stones upon rude burial-places and swined mystic knots on its crosses, before historic days. Even of this primitive decoration there are relics at Gowrie, where the twistings and twinings of Runic cords appear on some bits of ancient wall, solid as rocks and almost as everlasting. From these to the graceful French turrets, which recall many a gray chateau, what a long interval of years! But these are filled with stirring chronicles enough, besides the dim, not always decipherable records, which different developments of architecture have left on the old house. The Earls of Gowrie had been in the heat of every commotion that took place on or about the Highland line for more generations than any but a Celtic pen could record. Rebellions, revenges, insurrections, conspiracies—nothing in which blood was shed and lands lost, took place in Scotland in which they had not had a share; and the annals of the house are very full, and not without many a stain. They had been a bold and vigorous race—with much evil in them, and some good; never insignificant, whatever else they might be. It cannot be said, however, that they are remarkable nowadays. Since the first Stuart rising, known in Scotland as the "Fifteen," they have not done much that has been worth recording; but yet their family history has always been of an unusual kind. The Randolphs could not be called eccentric in themselves; on the contrary, when you knew them, they were at bottom a respectable race, full of all the country-gentleman virtues; and yet their public career, such as it was, had been marked by the strangest leaps and jerks of vicissitude. You would have said an impulsive, fanciful family—now making a grasp at some visionary advantage, now rushing into some wild speculation, now making a sudden sally into public life, but soon falling back into mediocrity—not able, apparently, even when the impulse was purely selfish and mercenary, to keep it up. But this would not have been at all a true conception of the family character; their actual virtues were not of the imaginative order, and their freaks are a mystery to their friends. Nevertheless, these freaks were what the general world was most aware of in the Randolph race. The late Earl had been a representative peer of Scotland (they had no English title,) and had made quite a wonderful start, and for a year or two seemed about to attain a very eminent place in Scotch affairs; but his ambition was found to have made use of some very equivocal modes of gaining influence, and he dropped accordingly, at once and forever, from the political firmament. This was quite a common circumstance in the family. An apparently brilliant beginning, a discovery of evil means adopted for ambitious ends, a sudden subsidence, and the curious conclusion at the end of everything that this schemer, this unscrupulous speculator or politician, was a dull, good man after all—unambitious, contented, full of domestic kindness and benevolence. This family peculiarity made the history of the Randolphs a very strange one, broken by the oddest interruptions, and with no consistency in it. There was another circumstance, however, which attracted still more the wonder and observation of the public. For one who can appreciate such a recondite matter as family character there are hundreds who are interested in a family secret, and this the house of Randolph possessed in perfection. It was a mystery when piqued the imagination and exercised the interest of the entire country. The story went that somewhere, hid amid the massive walls and tortuous passages, there was a secret chamber in Gowrie Castle. Everybody knew of its existence; but save the Earl, his heir, and one other person not of the family, but filling a confidential post in their service, no mortal knew where this mysterious hiding-place was. There had been countless guesses made at it, and expedients of all kinds invented to find it out. Every visitor who ever entered the old gateway, nay, even passing travelers who saw the turrets from the road, searched keenly for some trace of this mysterious chamber. But all guesses and researches were equally in vain.

I was about to say that no ghost story I ever heard of has been so steadily and long believed. But this would be a mistake, for nobody knew even with any certainty that there was a guest connected with it. A secret chamber was nothing wonderful in so old a house. No doubt they exist in many such old houses, and are always curious and interesting—strange relics, more moving than any history, of the time when a man was not safe in his own house, and when it might be necessary to secure a refuge beyond the reach of spies or traitors at a moment's notice. Such a refuge was a necessity of life to a great medieval noble. The peculiarity about this secret chamber, however, was that some secret connected with the very existence of the family was always understood to be involved in it. It was not only the secret hiding-place for an emergency, a kind of historical possession presupposing the importance of his race, of which a man might be honestly proud; but there was something hidden in it of which assuredly the race could not be proud. It is wonderful how easily a family learns to place itself upon any distinctive possession. A ghost is a sign of importance not to be despised; a haunted room is worth as much as a small farm to the complacency of the family that owns it. And no doubt the younger branches of the Gowrie family—the light-minded portion of the race—felt this, and were proud of their unfathomable secret, and felt a thrill of agreeable awe and piquant suggestion go through them when they remembered the mysterious something which they did not know in their familiar home. That thrill ran through the outer circle of visitors and children and servants when the Earl peremptorily forbade a projected improvement, or stopped a reckless exploration. They looked at each other with a pleasurable shiver. "Did you hear?" they said. "He will not let Lady Gowrie have that closet she wants so much in that bit of wall. He sent the workmen about their business before they could touch it, though the wall is twenty feet thick if it is an inch: ah!" said the visitors, looking at each other; and this lively suggestion sent tinglings of excitement to their very finger-points; but even to his wife, mourning the commodious closet she had intended, the Earl made no explanations. For anything she knew, it might be there, next to her room—this mysterious lurking place; and it may be supposed that this suggestion conveyed to Lady Gowrie's veins a thrill more keen and strange, perhaps too vivid to be pleasant. But she was not in the favored or unfortunate number of those to whom the truth could be revealed.

I need not say what the different theories on the subject were. Some thought there had been a treacherous massacre there, and that the secret chamber was blocked by the skeletons of murdered guests—a treachery no doubt covering the family with shame in its day, but so outdone by long softening of years as to have all the shame taken out of it. The Randolphs could not have felt their character affected by any such interesting historical record. They were not so morbidly sensitive. Some said, on the other hand, that Earl Robert, the wicked Earl, was shut up there in everlasting penance, playing cards with the devil for his soul. But it would have been too great a feather in the family cap to have thus got the devil, or even one of his angels, bottled up, as it were, and safely in hand, to make it possible that any lasting shame could be connected with such a fact as this. What a thing it would be to know where to lay one's hand upon the prince of darkness, and prove him once for all cloven foot and everything else to the confusion of gainsayers!

So this was not to be received as a satisfactory solution, nor could any other be suggested which was more to the purpose. The popular mind gave it up, and yet never gave it up; and still everybody who visits Gowrie, be it as a guest, be it as a tourist, be it only as a gazer from a passing carriage, or from the flying railway train which just glimpses its turrets in the distance, daily and yearly spends a certain amount of curiosity, wonderment, and conjecture about the Secret Chamber—the most piquant and undiscoverable wonder which has enquired unguessed and undeciphered to modern times.

This was how the matter stood when young John Randolph, Lord Lindores, came of age. He was a young man of great character and energy, not like the usual Randolph strain—for, as we have said, the type of character common in this romantically situated family, notwithstanding the erratic incidents common to them, was that of dullness and honesty, especially in their early days. But young Lindores was not so. He was honest and honorable but not dull. He had gone through almost a remarkable course at school and at the university—not, perhaps, in quite the ordinary way of scholarship, but enough to attract men's eyes to him. He had made more than one great speech at the Union. He was full of ambition, and force, and life, intending all sorts of great things, and meaning to make his position a stepping-stone to all that was excellent in public life. Not for him the country-gentleman existence which was congenial to his father. The idea of succeeding to the family honors and becoming a Scotch peer, either represented or representative, filled him with horror; and final pity in his case was made warm by all the energy of personal hopes when he prayed that his father might live, if not forever, yet longer than any Lord Gowrie had lived for the last century or two. He was as sure of his election for the county the next time there was a chance as anybody can be certain of anything; and in the meantime he meant to travel, to go to America, to go no one could tell where, seeking for instruction and experience, as is the manner of high-spirited young men with parliamentary tendencies in the present day. In former times he would have gone "to the wars in the Hie Germanie," or on a crusade to the Holy Land; but the days of the crusaders and of the soldiers of fortune being over, Lindores followed the fashion of his time. He had made all his arrangements for his tour, which his father did not oppose. On the contrary, Lord Gowrie encouraged all those plans, laughed with an air of melancholy indulgence which his son could not understand. "it will do you good," he said, with a sigh. "Yes, yes, my boy; the best thing for you." This, no doubt, was true enough; but there was an implied feeling that the young man would require something to do him good—that he would want the soothing of change and the gratification of his wishes, as one might speak of a convalescent or the victim of some calamity. This tone puzzled Lindores, who, though he thought it a fine thing to travel and acquire information, was as scornful of the idea of being done good to as is natural to any fine young fellow fresh from Oxford and the triumphs of the Union. But he reflected that the old school had its own way of treating things, and was satisfied. All was settled accordingly for this journey before he came home to go through the ceremonial performances of the coming of age, the dinner of the tenantry, the speeches, the congratulations, the father's banquet, his mother's ball. It was in Summer, and the country was as gay as all the entertainments that were to be given in his honor. His friend who was going to accompany him on his tour, as he had accompanied him through a considerable portion of his life—Almeric Ffarrington, a young man of the same aspirations, came no to Scotland with him for these festivities. And as they rushed through the night on the Great Northern Railway, in the intervals of two naps, they had a scrap of conversation as to these birthday glories. "It will be a bore, but it will not last long," said Lindores. They were both of the opinion that anything that did not produce information or promote culture was a bore.

"But is there not a revelation to be made to you among all the other things you have to go through?" said Ffarrington. "Have not you to be introduced to the secret chamber, and all that sort of thing? I should like to be of the party there, Lindores."

"Ah," said the heir. "I had forgotten that part of it," which, however, was not the case. "Indeed, I don't know if I am to be told. Even family dogmas are shaken nowadays."

"Oh, I should insist on that," said Ffarrington, lightly. "It is not many who have the chance of paying such a visit—better than Rome and all the mediums. I should insist upon that."

"I have no reason to suppose that it has any connection with Rome or the mediums," said Lindores, slightly nettled. He was himself an esprit fort; out a mystery in one's own family is not like vulgar mysteries. He liked it to be respected.

"Oh, no offence," said his companion. "I have always thought that a railway train would be a great chance for the spirits. It one was to show suddenly in that vacant seat because you, what a triumphant proof of their existence that would be! But they don't take advantage of their opportunities."

Lindores could not tell what it was that made him think at that moment of a portrait he had seen in a back room at the castle of old Earl Robert, the wicked Earl. It was a bad portrait—a daub—a copy, made by an amateur, of the genuine portrait, which, out of horror of Earl Robert and his wicked ways, had been removed by some inferior duke lord from its place in the gallery. Lindores had never seen the original—nothing but this daub of a copy. Yet somehow this face occurred to him by some strange link of association—seemed to come into his eyes as his friend spoke. A slight shiver ran over him. It was strange. He made no reply to Ffarrington, but set himself to think how it could be that the latent presence in his mind of some anticipation of this approaching disclosure, touched into life by his friend's suggestion, should have called out of his memory a momentary realization of the acknowledged magician of the family. This sentence is full of long words; but unfortunately long words are required in such a case. And the process was very simple when you traced it out. It was the clearest case of unconscious cerebration. He shut his eyes by way of securing privacy while he thought it out; and being tired, and not at all alarmed by his unconscious cerebration, before he opened them again fell fast asleep.

And his birthday, which was the day following his arrival at Glenlyon, was a very busy day. He had not time to think of anything but the immediate occupations of the moment. Public and private greetings, congratulations, offerings, poured upon him. The Gowries were popular in this generation, which was far from being usual in the family. Lady Gowrie was kind and generous, with that kindness that comes from the heart, and which is the only kindness likely to impress the keen-sighted popular judgment; and Lord Gowrie had out little of the equivocal reputation of his predecessors. They could be splendid now and then on great occasions, though in general they were homely enough; all which the public likes. It was a bore, Lindores said; but yet the young man did not dislike the honors, and the adulation, and all the hearty speeches and good wishes. It is sweet to a young man to feel himself the centre of all hopes. It seemed very reasonable to him—very natural—that he should be so, and that the farmers should feel a pride of anticipation in thinking of his future speeches in Parliament. He promised them with the sincerest good faith that he would not disappoint their expectations—that he would feel their interest in him an additional spur. What so natural as that interest and these expectations? He was almost solemnized by his own position—so young, looked up to by so many people—so many hopes depending on him; and yet it was quite natural. His father, however, was still more solemnized than Lindores—and this was strange, to say the least. His face grew graver and graver as the day went on, till it almost seemed as if he were dissatisfied with his son's popularity, or had some painful thought weighing on his mind. He was restless and eager for the termination of the dinner, and to get rid of his guests; and as soon as they were gone, showed an equal anxiety that his son should retire too. "Go to bed at once, as a favor to me," Lord Gowrie said. "You will have a great deal of fatigue—to-morrow." "You need not be afraid for me, Sir," said Lindores, half affronted; but he obeyed, being tired. He had not once thought of the secret to be disclosed to him, through all that long day. But when he woke suddenly with a start in the middle of the night, to find the candles all lighted in his room, and his father standing by his bedside, Lindores instantly thought of it, and in a moment felt that the leading event—the chief incident of all that had happened—was going to take place now.

CHAPTER II.

Lord Gowrie was very grave, and very pale. He was standing with his hand on his son's shoulder to wake him; his dress was unchanged from the moment they had parted. And the sight of this formal costume was very bewildering to the young man as he started up in his bed. But next moment he seemed to know exactly how it was, and, more than that, to have known it all his life. Explanation seemed unnecessary. At any other moment, in any other place, a man would be startled to be suddenly woke up in the middle of the night. But Lindores had no such feeling; he did not even ask a question, but sprang up, and fixed his eyes, taking in all the strange circumstances, on his father's face.

"Get up, my boy," said Lord Gowrie. "and dress as quickly as you can; it is full time. I have lighted your candles, and your things are all ready. You have had a good long sleep."

Even now he did not ask, What is it? as under any other circumstances he would have done. He got up without a word, with an impulse of nervous speed and rapidity of movement such as only excitement can give, and dressed himself, his father helping him silently. It was a curious scene; the room gleaming with lights, the silence, the hurried toilet, the stillness of deep night all around. The house, though so full, and with the echoes of festivity but just over, was quiet as if there was not a creature within it—more quiet, indeed, for the stillness of vacancy is not half so impressive as the stillness of hushed and slumbering life.

Lord Gowrie went to the table when this first step was over and poured out a glass of wine from a bottle that stood there—a rich, golden-colored, perfumy wine, which sent its scent through the room. "You will want all your strength," he said; "take this before you go. It is the famous Imperial Tokay: there is only a little left, and you will want all your strength."

Lindores took the wine; he had never drunk any like it before, and the peculiar fragrance remained in his mind, as perfumes so often do, with a whole world of association in them. His father's eyes dwelt upon him with a melancholy sympathy. "You are going to encounter the greatest trial of your life," he said; and taking the young man's hand into his, felt his pulse. "It is quick, but it is quite firm, and you have had a good long sleep." Then he did what it needs a great deal of pressure to induce an Englishman to do—he kissed his son on the cheek. "God bless you!" he said, faltering. "Come, now, everything is ready, Lindores."

He took up in his hand a small lamp, which he had apparently brought with him, and led the way. By this time Lindores began to feel himself again, and to wake to the consciousness of all his own superiorities and enlightenments. The simple sense that he was one of the members of a family with a mystery, and that the moment of his personal encounter with this special power of darkness had come, had been the first thrilling, overwhelming thought. But now, as he followed his father, Lindores began to remember that he himself was not altogether like other men; that there was that in him which would make it natural that he should throw some light, hitherto unthought of, upon this carefully-preserved darkness. What secret even there might be in it—secret of hereditary tendency, of psychic force, of mental conformation, or of some curious combination of circumstances at once more and less potent than these—it was for him to find out. He gathered all his forces about him, reminded himself of modern enlightenment, and bade his nerves be steel to all vulgar horrors. He, too, felt his own pulse as he followed his father. To spend the night perhaps among the skeletons of that old-world massacre and to repent the sins of his ancestors; to be brought within the range of some optical illusion believed in hitherto by all the generations, and which, no doubt, was of a startling kind or his father would not look so serious—any of these he felt himself quite strong to encounter. His heart and spirit rose. A young man has but seldom the opportunity of distinguishing himself so early in his career, and his was such a chance as occurs to very few. No doubt it was something that would be extremely trying to the nerves and imagination. He called up all his powers to vanquish both. And along with this call upon himself to exertion there was the less serious impulse of curiosity; he would see at last what the Secret Chamber was, where it was, how it fitted into the labyrinths of the old house. This he tried to put in its due place as a most interesting object. He said to himself that he would willingly have gone a long journey at any time to be present at such an exploration; and there is no doubt that in other circumstances a secret chamber, with probably some unthought-of historical interest in it, would have been a very fascinating discovery. He tried very hard to excite himself about this; but it was curious how fictitious he felt the interest, and how conscious he was that it was an effort to feel any curiosity at all on the subject. The fact was, that the Secret Chamber was entirely secondary—thrown back, as all accessories are, by a more pressing interest. The overpowering thought of what was in it drove aside all healthy, natural curiosity about itself.

It must not be supposed, however, that the father and son had a long way to go to have time for all these thoughts. Thoughts travel at lightning speed, and there was abundant leisure for this between the time they had left the door of Lindores' room and gone down the corridor no further off than to Lord Gowrie's own chamber, naturally one of the chief rooms of the house. Nearly opposite this, a few steps further on, was a little neglected room devoted to lumber, with which Lindores had been familiar all his life. Was this nest of old rubbish, dust, and cobwebs should be so near the bedroom of the head of the house had been a matter of surprise to many people—to the guests who saw it while exploring, and to each new servant in succession, who planned an attack upon its ancient stores, scandalized by finding it to have been neglected by their predecessors. All their attempts to clear it out had, however, been resisted, nobody could tell how, or indeed thought worth while to inquire. As for Lindores, he had been used to the place from his childhood, and therefore accepted it as the most natural thing in the world. He had been in and out a hundred times in his play. And it was here, he remembered suddenly, that he had seen the bad picture of Earl Robert which had so curiously come into his eyes on his journeying here, by a mental movement which he had identified at once as unconscious cerebration. The first feeling in his mind, as his father went to the open door of this lumber-room, was a mixture of amusement and surprise. What was he going to pick up there? some old pentacle, some amulet or scrap of antiquated magic to act as armor against the evil one? But Lord Gowrie, going on and setting down the lamp on the table, turned round upon his son with a face of agitation and pain which barred all further amusement; he grasped him by the hand, crushing it between his own. "Now, my boy, my dear son," he said, in tones that were scarcely audible. His countenance was full of the dreary pain of a looker-on—one who has no share in the excitement of personal danger, but has the more terrible part of watching those who are in deadliest peril. He was a powerful man, and his large form shook with emotion; great beads of moisture stood upon his forehead. An old sword with a cross handle lay upon a dusty chair among other duty and battered relics. "Take this with you," he said, in the same inaudible, breathless way—whether as a weapon, whether as a religious symbol Lindores could not guess. The young man took it mechanically. His father pushed open a door which it seemed to aim he had never seen before, and led him into another vaulted chamber. Here even the limited powers of speech Lord Gowrie had remained seemed to forsake him, and his voice became a mere hoarse murmur in his throat. For want of speech he pointed to another door in the further corner of this small vacant room, gave him to understand by a gesture that he was to knock there, and then went back into the lumber-room. The door into this was left open, and a faint glimmer of the lamp shed light into this little intermediate place—this debatable land between the seen and the unseen. In spite of himself, Lindores' heart began to beat. He made a breathless pause, feeling his head go round. He held the old sword in his hand, not knowing what it was. Then, summoning all his courage, he went forward and knocked at the closed door. His knock was not loud, but it seemed to echo all over the silent house. Would everybody hear and wake, and rush to see what had happened? This caprice of imagination seized upon him, ousting all the firmer thoughts, the steadfast calm of mind with which he ought to have encountered the mystery. Would they all rush in, in wild déshabille, in terror and dismay, before the door opened? How long it was of opening! He touched the panel with his hand again. This time there was no delay. In a moment, as if thrown suddenly open by some one within, the door moved. It opened just wide enough to let him enter, stopping half-way as if some one invisible held it, wide enough for welcome, but no more. Lindores stepped across the threshold with a beating heart. What was he about to see? the skeletons of the murdered victims? a ghostly charnel-house full of bloody traces of crime? He seemed to be hurried and pushed in as he made that step. What was this world of mystery into which he was plunged—what was it he saw?

Hesaw—nothing—except what was agreeable enough to behold—an antiquated room hung with tapestry, very old tapestry of rude design, its colors faded into softness and harmony; between its folds here and there a panel of carved wood, rude too in design, with traces of half-worn gilding; a table covered with strange instruments, parchments, chemical tubes, and curious machinery, all with a quaintness of form and dimness of material that spoke of age. A heavy old velvet cover, thick with embroidery faded almost out of all color, was on the table; on the wall above it, something that looked like a very old Venetian mirror, the glass so dim and crusted that it scarcely reflected at all; on the floor an old soft Persian carpet, worn into a vague blending of all colors. This was all that he thought he saw. His heart, which had been thumping so loud as almost to choke him, stopped that tremendous upward and downward motion like a steam piston, and he grew calm. Perfectly still, dim, unoccupied: yet not so dim either; there was no apparent source of light, no windows, curtains or tapestry drawn everywhere—no lamp visible, no fire—and yet a kind of strange light which made everything quite clear. He looked round, trying to smile at his terrors, trying to say to himself that it was the most curious place he had ever seen—that he must show Ffarrington some of that tapestry—that he must bring away a panel of that carving—when he suddenly saw that the door was shut by which he had entered—nay, more than shut, undiscernible, covered like all the rest of the walls by that strange tapestry. At this his heart began to beat again in spite of him. He looked round once more, and woke up to a more vivid being with a sudden start. Had his eyes been incapable of vision on his first entrance? Unoccupied? Who was that in the great chair?

It seemed to Lindores that he had seen neither the chair nor the man when he came in. There they were, however, solid and unmistakable; the chair carved like the panels, the man seated in front of the table. He looked at Lindores with a calm and open gaze, inspecting him. The young man's heart seemed in his throat fluttering like a bird, but he was brave, and his mind made one final effort to break this spell. He tried to speak, laboring with a voice that would not sound, and with lips too parched to form a word. "I see how it is," was what he wanted to say. It was Earl Robert's face that was looking at him; and startled as he was, he dragged forth his philosophy to support him. What could it be but optical delusions, unconscious cerebration, occult seizure by the impressed and struggling mind of this one countenance? But he could not hear himself speak any word as he stood convulsed, struggling with the dry lips and choking voice.

The Appearance smiled, as if knowing his thoughts—not unkindly, not malignly—with a certain amusement mingled with scorn. Then he spoke, and the sound seemed to breathe through the room not like any voice that Lindores had ever heard, a kind of utterance of the place, like the rustle of the air or the ripple of the sea. "You will learn better to-night: this is no phantom of your brain; it is I."

"In God's name," cried the young man in his soul; he did not know whether the words ever got into the air or not, if there was any air;—"In God's name, who are you?"

The figure rose as it coming to him to reply; and Lindores, overcome by the apparent approach, struggled into utterance. A cry came from him—he heard it this time—and even in his extremity felt a pang the more to bear the terror in his own voice. But he did not flinch, he stood desperate, all his strength concentrated in this act; he neither turned nor recoiled. Vaguely gleaming through his mind came the thought that to be thus brought in contact with the unseen was the experiment to be most desired on earth, the final settlement of a hundred questions; but his faculties were not sufficiently under command to entertain it. He only stood firm, that was all.

And the figure did not approach him; after a moment it subsided back again into the chair—subsided, for no sound, not the faintest, accompanied its movements. It was the form of a man of middle age, the hair white, but the beard only crisped with gray, the features those of the picture—a familiar face, more or less like all the Randolphs, but with an air of domination and power altogether unlike that of the race. He was dressed in a long robe of dark color, embroidered with strange lines and angles. There was nothing repellant or terrible in his aspect—nothing except the noiselessness, the calm, the absolute stillness, which was as much in the place as in him, to keep up the involuntary trembling of the beholder. His expression was full of dignity and thoughtfulness, and not malignant or unkind. He might have been the kindly patriarch of the house, watching over its fortunes in a seclusion he had chosen. The pulses that had been beating in Lindores were stilled. What was his panic for? The gloam even of self-ridicule took possession of him, to be standing there like an absurd hero of antiquated romance with the rusty, dusty sword—good for nothing, surely not adapted for use against this noble old magician—in his hand—

"You are right," said the voice, once more answering his thoughts; "what could you do with that sword against me, young Lindores? Put it by. Why should my children meet me like an enemy? You are my flesh and blood. Give me your hand."

A shiver ran through the young man's frame. The hand that was held out to him was large and shapely and white, with a straight line across the palm—a family token upon which the Randolphs prided themselves—a friendly hand; and the face smiled upon him, fixing him with those calm, profound blue eyes. "Come," said the voice. The word seemed to fill the place, melting upon him from every corner, whispering round him with softest persuasion. He was lulled and calmed in spite of himself. Spirit or no spirit, why should not he accept this proffered courtesy? What harm could come of it? The quiet thing that detained him was the dragging of the old sword, heavy and useless, which he held mechanically, but which some internal feeling—he could not tell what—prevented him from putting down. Superstition, was it?

"Yes, that is superstition," said his ancestor, serenely; "put it down and come."

"You know my thoughts," said Lindores; "I did not speak."

"Your mind spoke, and spoke justly. Put down that emblem of brute force and superstition together. Here it is the intelligence that is supreme. Come."

Lindores stood doubtful. He was calm; the power of thought was restored to him. If this benevolent, venerable patriarch was all he seemed, why his father's terror? why the secrecy in which his being was involved? His own mind, though calm, did not seem to act in the usual way. Thoughts seemed to be driven across it as by a wind. One of these came to him suddenly now—

"How there looked him in the face
An angel beautiful and bright,
And how he knew it was a fiend."

The words were not ended when Earl Robert replied suddenly, with impatience in his voice: "Fiends are of the fancy of men; like angels and other follies. I am your father. You know me; and you are mine, Lindores. I have power beyond what you can understand; but I want flesh and blood to reign and to enjoy. Come, Lindores!"

He put out his other hand. The action, the look, were those of kindness, almost of longing, and the face was familiar, the voice was that of the race. Supernatural! Was it supernatural that this man should live here shut up for ages; and why, and how? Was there any explanation of it? The young man's brain began to reel. He could not tell which was real—the life he had left half an hour ago or this. He tried to look round him, but could not; his eyes were caught by those other kindred eyes, which seemed to dilate and deepen as he looked at them, and drew him with a strange compulsion. He felt himself yielding, swaying toward the strange being who thus invited him. What might happen if he yielded? And he could not turn away, he could not tear himself from the fascination of those eyes. With a sudden, strange impulse which was half despair and half a bewildering half-conscious desire to try one potency against another, he thrust forward the cross of the old sword between him and those appealing hands. "In the name of God!"

Lindores never could tell whether it was that he himself grew faint, and that the dimness of swooning came into his eyes after this violence and strain of emotion, or if it was his spell that worked. But there was an instantaneous change. Everything swam around him for the moment, a giddiness and blindness seized him, and he saw nothing but the vague outlines of the room, empty as when he entered it. But gradually his consciousness came back, and he found himself standing on the same spot as before, cluteoing the old sword, and gradually, as though a dream, recognized the same figure emerging out of the mist what—was it solely in his own eyes?—had enveloped everything. But it was no longer in the same attitude. The hands which had been stretched out to him were busy now with some of the strange instruments on the table, moving about, now in the action of writing, now as it managing the keys of a telegraph. Lindores felt that his brain was all atwist and set wrong; but he was still a human being of his century. He thought of the telegraph with a keen thrill of curiosity in the midst of his reviving sensations. What communication was this which was going on before his eyes? The magician worked on. He had his face turned toward his victim, but his hands moved with unceasing activity. And Lindores, as he grew accustomed to the position, began to weary—to feel like a neglected suitor waiting for an audience. To be wound up to such a strain of feeling, then left to wait, was intolerable; impatience seized upon him. What circumstances can exist, however horrible, in which a human being will not feel impatience? He made a great many efforts to speak before he could succeed. It seemed to him that his body felt more fear than he did—that his muscles were contracted, his throat parched, his tongue refusing its office, although his mind was unaffected and undismayed. At last he found an utterance in spite of all resistance of his flesh and blood.

"Who are you?" he said hoarsely—"You that live here and oppress this house?"

The vision raised its eyes full upon him, with again that strange shadow of a smile, mocking yet not unkind. "Do you reasonmoer me," he said, "on your journey here?"

"That was—a delusion." The young man gasped for breath.

"More like that you are a delusion. You have lasted but one and twenty years, and I—for centuries."

"How? For centuries—and why? Answer me—are you man or demon?" cried Lindores, tearing the words, as he felt, out of his own throat. "Are you living or dead?"

The magician looked at him with the same intense gaze as before. "Be on my side, and you shall know everything, Lindores. I want one of my own race. Others I could have in plenty; but I want you. A Randolph, a Randolphul and you. Dead! do I seem dead? You shall have everything—more than dreams can give—if you will be on my side."

Can he give what he has not? was the thought that ran through the mind of Lindores. But he could not speak it. Something that choked and stifled him was in his throat.

"Can I give what I have not? I have everything—power, the one thing worth having; and you shall have more than power, for you are young—my son! Lindores!"

To argue was natural and gave the young man strength. "Is this life," he said, "here? What is all your power worth—here? To sit for ages, and make a race unhappy?"

A momentary convulsion came across the still face. "You scorn me," he cried, with an appearance of emotion, "because you do not understand how I move the world. Power! 'Tis more than fancy can grasp. And you shall have it!" said the wizard, with what looked like a show of enthusiasm. He seemed to come nearer, to grow larger. He put forth his hand again, this time so close that it seemed impossible to escape. And a crowd of wishes seemed to rush upon the mind of Lindores. What harm to try if this might be true? To try what it meant—perhaps nothing—delusions, vain show, and then there could be no harm; or perhaps there was knowledge to be had, which was power. Try, try, try! the air buzzed about him. The room seemed full of voices urging him. His bodily frame rose into a tremendous whirl of excitement, his veins seemed to swell to bursting, his lips seemed to force a "yes," in spite of him, quivering as they came apart. The hiss of the s seemed in his ears. He changed it into the name which was a spell too, and cried, "Help me, God!" now knowing why.

Then there came another pause—he felt as if he had been dropped from something that had held him, and had fallen, and was faint. The excitement had been more than he could bear. Once more everything swam around him, and he did not know where he was. Had he escaped altogether? was the first waking wonder of consciousness in his mind. But when he could think and see again, he was still in the same spot, surrounded by the old curtains and the carved panels—but alone. He felt, too, that he was able to move, but the strangest dual consciousness was in him throughout all the rest of his trial. His body felt to him as a frightened horse feels to a traveler at night—a thing separate from him, more frightened than he was—starting aside at every step, seeing more than its master. His limbs shook with fear and weakness, almost pitching to and fro the action of his will, trembling under him with jerks aside when he compelled himself to move. The hair stood upright on his head—every finger trembled as with palsy—his lips, his eyelids, quivered with nervous agitation. But his mind was strong, stimulated to a desperate calm. He dragged himself round the room, he crossed the very spot where the magician had been—all was vacant, silent, clear. Had he vanquished the enemy? This thought came into his mind with an involuntary triumph. The old strain of feeling came back. Such effects might be produced, perhaps, only by imagination, by excitement, by delusion—

Lindores looked up, by a sudden attraction he could not tell what; and the blood suddenly froze in his veins that had been so boiling and fermenting. Some one was looking at him from the old mirror on the wall. A face not human and inhuman, like that of the inhabitant of this place, but ghostly and terrible, like one of the dead; and while he looked, a crowd of other faces came behind, all looking at him, some mournfully, some with a menace in their terrible eyes. The mirror did not change, but within its small dim space seemed to contain an innumerable company, crowded above and below, all with one gaze at him. His lips dropped apart with a gasp of horror. More and more and more! He was standing close by the table when this crowd came. Then all at once there was laid upon him a cold hand. He turned; close to his side, brushing him with his rough holding him fast by the arm, sat Earl Robert in his great chair. A shriek came from the young man's lips. He seemed to hear it echoing away into unfathomable distance. The cold touch penetrated to his very soul.

"Do you try spells upon me, Lindores? That is a tool of the past. You shall have something better to work with. And are you so sure of whom you call upon? If there is such a one, why should he help you who never called on Him before?"

Lindores could not tell if these words were spoken; it was a communication rapid as the thoughts in the mind. And he felt as if something answered that was not all himself. He seemed to stand passive and hear the argument, "Does God reckon with a man in trouble, whether he has ever called to Him before? I call now," (how he felt it was himself that said:) "O God, evil spirit! go, dead and cursed! go, in the name of God!"

He felt himself flung violently against the wall. A faint laugh, soiled in the throat, and followed by a groan, rolled round the room; the old curtains seemed to open here and there, and flutter, as if with comings and goings. Lindores leaned with his back against the wall, and all his senses restored to him. He felt blood trickle down his neck, and in this contact once more with the physical, his body, in its madness of fright, grew manageable. For the first time he felt wholly master of himself. Though the magic air was standing in his place, a great, majestic, appalling figure, he did not shrink. "Liar!" he cried, in a voice that rang and echoed as in natural air—"clinging to miserable life like a worm—like a reptile; promising all things, having nothing, but this den, unvisited by the light of day. Is this your power—your superiority to men who die? is it for this that you oppress a race, and make a house unhappy? I vow, in God's name, your reign is over! You, and your secret, shall last no more."

There was no reply. But Lindores felt his terrible ancestor's eyes getting once more that mesmeric mastery over him which had already almost overcome his powers. He must withdraw his own or perish. He had a human horror of turning his back upon that watchful adversary; to face him seemed the only safety; but to face him was to be conquered. Slowly, with a pang indescribable, [illegible] as he looked at them, and felt his hand [illegible] that gaze; it seemed to drag his eyes out of their sockets, his heart out of his bosom. Resolutely, with the daring of desperation, he turned round to the spot where he entered—the spot where no door was—hearing already in anticipation the step after him—feeling the grip that would crush and smother his exhausted life—but too desperate to care.

CHAPTER III.

How wonderful is the blue dawning of the new day before the sun! not rosy-fingered, like that Aurora of the Greeks who comes later with all her wealth; but still, dreamy, wonderful, stealing out of the unseen, abashed by the solemnity of the new birth. When anxious watchers see that first brightness come stealing upon the waiting skies, what mingled relief and renewal of misery is in it! another long day to toil through—yet another sad night over! Lord Gowrie sat among the dust and cobwebs, his lamp flaring idly in the blue morning. He had heard his son's human voice, though nothing more; and he expected to have him brought out by invisible hands, as had happened to himself, and left lying in a long deathly swoon outside that mystic door. This was how it had happened to heir after heir, as told from father to son, one after another, as the secret came down. One or two bearers of the name of Lindores had never recovered; most of them had been saddened and subdued for life. He remembered sadly the freshness of existence which had never come back to himself; the hopes that had never blossomed again; the assurance with which never more he had been able to go about the world. And now his son would be as himself—the glory gone out of his living—his ambitions, his aspirations, wrecked. He had not been endowed as his boy was—he had been a plain, honest man, and nothing more; but experience and life had given him wisdom enough to smile by times at the coquetries of mind in which Lindores indulged. Were they all over now, those freaks of young intelligence, those enthusiasms of the soul? The curse of the house had come upon him—the magnetism of that strange presence, ever living, ever watchful, present in all the family history. His heart was sore for his son; and yet along with this there was a certain consolation to him in having henceforward a partner in the secret—some one to whom he could talk of it as he had not been able to talk since his own father died. Almost all the mental struggles which Gowrie had known had been connected with this mystery; and he had been obliged to hide them in his bosom—to conceal them even when they rent him in two. Now he had a partner in his trouble. This was what he was thinking as he sat through the night. How slowly the moments passed! He was not aware of the daylight coming in. After a while even thought got suspended in listening. Was not the time nearly over? He rose and began to pace about the incumbered space, which was but a step or two in extent. There was an old cupboard in the wall, in which there were restoratives—pungent essences and cordials, and fresh water which he had himself brought—everything was ready; presently the ghastly body of his boy, half dead, would be thrust forth into his care.

But this was not how it happened. While he waited, so intent that his whole frame seemed to be capable of hearing, he heard the closing of the door, boldly shut with a sound that rose in muffled echoes through the house, and Lindores himself appeared, ghastly indeed as a dead man, but walking upright and firmly, the lines of his face drawn, and his eyes staring. Lord place," said a lady who was of the party. "Whose portrait ought to be there, Lord Linderes?"

He looked at his father, who made a slight assenting gesture, then shook his head drearily.

"Who put it there?" Linderes said, in a whisper.

"It is not there; but you and I see it," said Lord Gowrie, with a sigh.

Then the strangers perceived that something had moved the father and the son, and, notwithstanding their eager curiosity, obeyed the dictates of politeness, and dispersed into groups looking at the other pictures. Linderes set his teeth and clenched his hands. Fury was growing upon him—not the awe that filled his father's mind. "We will leave the rest of this to another time," he cried, turning to the others, almost fiercely. "Come, I will show you something more striking now." He made no further pretense of going systematically over the house. He turned and went straight up stairs, and along the corridor. "Are we going over the bed-rooms?" some one said. Linderes led the way straight to the old lumber-room, a strange place for such a gay party. The ladies drew their dresses about them. There was not room for half of them. Those who could get in began to handle the strange things that lay about, touching them with dainty fingers, exclaiming how dusty they were. The window was half blocked up by old armor and rusty weapons; but this did not hinder the full Summer daylight from penetrating in a flood of light. Linderes went in with fiery determination on his face. He went straight to the wall, as if he would go through, then paused with a blank gaze, "Where is the door?" he said.

"You are forgetting yourself," said Lord Gowrie speaking over the heads of the others. "Linderes! you know very well there never was any door there; the wall is very thick; you can see by the depth of the window. There is no door there."

The young man felt it over with his hand. The wall was smooth, and covered with the dust of ages. With a groan he turned away. At this moment a suppressed laugh, low, yet distinct, sounded close by him. "You laughed!" he said, fiercely to Ffarington, striking his hand upon his shoulder."

"I—laughed! Nothing was further from my thoughts," said his friend, who was curiously examining something that lay upon an old carved chair. "Look here! what a wonderful sword, cross-hilted! Is it an Andrea? What's the matter, Linderes?"

Linderes had seized it from his hands; he dashed it against the wall with a suppressed oath. The two or three people in the room stood aghast.

"Linderes!" his father said, in a tone of warning. The young man dropped the useless weapon with a groan. "Then God help us!" he said; "but I will find another way!"

"There is a very interesting room close by," said Lord Gowrie, hastily—"this way! Linderes has been put out by—some changes that have been made without his knowledge," he said, calmly. "You must not mind him. He is disappointed. He is perhaps too much accustomed to have his own way."

But Lord Gowrie knew that no one believed him. He took them to the adjoining room, and told them some easy story of an apparition that was supposed to haunt it. "Have you ever seen it?" the guests said, pretending interest. "Not I; but we don't mind ghosts in this house," he answered, with a smile. And then they resumed their round of the old noble mystic house.

I cannot tell the reader what young Linderes has done to carry out his pledged word and redeem his family. It may not be known, perhaps, for another generation, and it will not be for me to write that concluding chapter; but when, in the ripeness of time, it can be narrated, no one will say that the mystery of Gowrie Castle has been a vulgar horror, though there are some who are disposed to think so now.—Blackwood's Magazine.

SCHOPENHAUER'S PHILOSOPHY.—"All things, Schopenhauer says, we observe and observe only through the medium of time, space, and causality, with one single exception—ourselves. It is true that our body, in so far as it lives and acts, and that which makes our body live and act, our will, are objects of our own perception in the ordinary sense. But apart from this perception, we are conscious of a vital principle in ourselves absolutely identical with the essence of our own being, and quite independent of and beyond our ordinary means of observation. This vital principle of the human organism is called Will; it is ever present to our mind, is perceived or rather felt by us independently of time, space, or causality; it is indeed the imminent essence of our life, the "Ding an sich" of our being. This recognition of our own being by dint of self-intuition, Schopenhauer justly calls the only possible metaphysical or philosophic knowledge in the proper sense of the word. With every change or motion of this Will, he proceeds to show, a corresponding change in our body is indissolubly connected. Every movement of our hand, every beat of our pulse, is the effect of the action of our will, independently of our own consciousness of such action. Our body itself, with its nerves and fibres, its blood and its brain, is indeed nothing but this Will become conscious, and observing itself through the principium individuationis. With the aid of this knowledge of our being, we now look at the world around us to find that the microcosm of the universe is only the repetition on a gigantic scale of our own tangible identity. We perceive an infinity of outward forms, organic and inorganic; plants and birds and beasts and men all fashioned after the manner of our own body, or at least submitting to the same laws of material existence. The essence or noumenon of our own body we know to be Will; what, then, can be the one substratum of the universe but the same Will in its various stages of consciousness and individuation? There is only the alternative between the acceptance of this reality and the theory of absolute egoism, which, as Schopenhauer observes, cannot be metaphysically disproved, but has never been seriously started out of a mad house. Will, then—Will one and universal, eternal and unchangeable in essence, although multiform in its temporal appearances—is the key-note of the harmony of the spheres, the essence of which all the wonders of the world, from the colossal immovability of a granite rock to the subtle texture of the human brain, are only signs and forms. Natura non facit saltus was one of Schopenhauer's favorite maxims. To come from the stone to the individual action of human will, we must pass through the innumerable gradations of inorganic, organic, and animal life. All these Schopenhauer regards as the various stages of the "objectivation," sit venia verbo—of the Will. The history of the world is but the history of the struggle of Will for consciousness and individuality. To attain this it fashions itself into a thousand forms, all tending toward the same goal, and all reckless of the existence of the lower types, of which they themselves are further developments. Stone and plant, animal and man, are the landmarks of this unceasing current of desire. In man, at last, Will obtains the highest stage of its objectivation. It becomes object proper, because the self-conscious subject has been created. This, then, is what we discover in looking at ourselves and the surrounding world, through the medium of Schopenhauer's philosophy. Will and interminable desire are the essence of our being, and the same desire is at the bottom of the phenemena of the world. These phenomena themselves, although we recognize their essence by analogy, surround us with bewildering horror. Everywhere we see struggle for existence, species devouring species, race contending against race; even the brute earth seething and bubbling with infernal fire ready to burst forth at any moment. Such is the spectacle of Will in contest with itself, and devouring its own children with insatiable hunger. Surely this is not a bright picture, and Schopenhauer has painted it with the sombrest hues of despair. He lays bare the revolting cruelty of nature, which at the cost of inconceivable individual suffering creates new types only to abandon them again to the universal doom of destruction. And the same tragedy is repeated in our bosom. Here, also, desire follows desire never fulfilled, or bearing disappointment and ever new desire in its very fulfillment. Here, also, quietude and contentment are vainly sought for, the very nature of Will being unrest and insatiable longing. The beauty and grandeur of Schopenhauer's language, rivaling the highest efforts of poetry, the force and vividness with which he depicts the nothingness and misery of existence, the halo with which he surrounds the sufferings of man as the truest and noblest aspirations of his being, all this has vastly contributed to carrying his name far beyond the circle of metaphysical inquirers. But is there no escape from this sea of troubles, no compass to guide us to a haven of rest? Schopenhauer has pointed out such a way; he names one, and only one, all-healing balm for the wounds of existence, and the name of his panacea is self-annihilation. We must retrace our steps for a moment. It has been shown that will in its lower forms is all but void of consciousness. It blindly pursues its struggle for individualization, and all its latent intelligent force (barely sufficient to account for the apparent teleology in nature) is consumed in this one aim. But the case is different in the human organism. Here Will at last has become conscious of itself, and its own miseries are mirrored in the intellect. By dint of this intellect Will is now enabled to paralyze to some degree its own action; it can intensify this intellectual or contemplative power to such a degree as at last to become a calm looker-on at its own deeds. By thus renouncing itself in its highest stage of conscious development, Will may at last find that freedom from suffering, that quiescent contentment which is forever denied to its affirmative efforts. ("Bejahung und Verneinung des Willens zum Leben.") Consistently carried out, this leads to the absolute deadening of individual desire, to be met with only in certain phases of Buddhism and Christianity; and Schopenhauer by no means hesitates in adopting the extreme consequences of his doctrine. The highest stage at once of happiness and sanctity he is prone to acknowlege in the monk of the order of La Trappe, or still more in the Indian devotee who, in passive contemplation awaits the dissolution of his embodied will to enter the realm of divine non-existence, Nirwana.—Fortnightly Review.

A BATH AT SCHWALBACH.—It is much to the credit of the waters that people can lead such a life with impunity, and yet go away rather better than worse. And as to the invigorating effects of the baths on those with whom they agree, we fancy there can be no difference of opinion. When time is hanging heavy with you, and you are passing into the possession of the blue-devils, the sure prescription is to take a bath. We cannot say that we consider bathing a lively occupation as a rule, for a man of an active habit of mind and body. We do not, of course, allude to the morning tub, or to a header in the sea or a rush of fresh water. And it was only when we were sore driven for occupation one dripping day, that it occurred to us to purchase a bath-ticket at Schwalbach. The entrance to the bath-cabinet was less than cheerful, while the cabinet itself was hermetically sealed, as the windows open full on a promenade. The water was all that it is described in The Bubbles. So far as we could see it through a steam-laden twilight, it was filthily ferruginous. But we had not gone so far to back out, and so we took heart of grace and immersed ourself. We hung our watch on the hook opposite, lit a cigar, opened a newspaper, and resigned ourself to pass the twenty minutes of our self-imposed sentence of confinement. When time was up we felt by no means so eager to be out and about as we had felt fifteen minutes before; and, indeed, it was with no little reluctance that at last we decided to dress. When we came out of the bath-house the weather was as dull and damp as before, but we had a sense of buoyancy within that could dispense with external sunshine. We had been disposed to growl as we went in; we felt inclined to sing as we came out. And when there is sunshine without as well as within, and when nature is launching to a fresh breeze—the effect of your dip is positively intoxicating. We ceased to wonder that the "old man" felt the sunbeams glance from him when thus fortified, as from a polished cuirass, and that he had set himself to breast the hills as it his bath had made him twenty years younger. Nor is the water applied internally by any means to be despised when you are treating yourself for one of those threatenings of the blue-devils. Chilly as it is, il va sans dire that it is delightfully refreshing when the heat is oppressive; and in the raw, damp weather that was so common in the last Summer, the glow after swallowing it was comforting in the extreme. As for the proportion of carbonates, chlorides, and sulphates, are they not written in a dozen of scientific treatises to which we could refer the reader were it worth while? Our own analysis was popular and practical, and we were satisfied when we found that there was no excess of those salts or sulphurs whose objectionably obtrusive properties poison so many of the Taunus springs.—Blackwood's Magazine.

AN OLD GERMAN CHRISTMAS CUSTOM.—At the close of the century before the Reformation the rocking of the cradle was in general vogue, both in the churches and at home. Catholic Martin Luther had a sincere liking for the poetry of the people. In his well-known hymn, "Von Himmel hoch da komm ich her," he embodies the popular tradition which represents Christ riding about on Christmas night, attended by an angel, or, as in the Lowlands, by St. Nicholas, and in the North, by St. Stephen—names chosen because of their symbolical meaning—to inquire into the conduct of the children during the past year. The child, which commonly carries a rod, introduces itself, telling the children that if they pray and sing diligently they will receive beautiful presents; but that if they do not they will get a beating. The angel then gives in the report, and after the due distribution of rewards and meting out of punishments the child takes its departure with the naïve farewell:

"Gute Nacht, gute Nacht in aller Frist,
Wir sind der heilge Krist,
Und haben wir was nicht recht gemacht,
So wünschen wir eine gute Nacht.

Gute Nacht, wir müssen scheiden,
Die Zeit will uns nicht leiden,
Gute Nacht, wir müssen fort,
An einem andern Ort."

But the hymn also alludes to the cradle song:

"Davon ich allezeit fröhlich sei,
Zu springen, singen immer frei,
Das rechte Susanine schon,
Mit Herzenlust den süssen Ton."

After Luther's death a change made itself gradually felt. Sour-visaged Protestantism, as might have been expected, frowned upon the proceedings, denouncing them as a rag of popery. The additions made to the existing collection were few and far between, and the old songs were spoiled by Protestant additions and omissions. The spell was broken once for all; it was impossible to revive it. Before another century the "Kindelwiegen" had become a thing of the past, though its memories lingered here and there, as for instance in Tübingen, where it was customary to rock a cradle on Christmas night, the people joining in an appropriate choral. It has shared the fate of many a hallowed custom and beautiful practice, doomed to death on the plea of superstition. The one solitary relic of those days which remains throughout the length and breadth of the "Fatherland" is the ever-green Christmas tree. Rooted in the old Teutonic love of those grand forests, under whose shadow superhuman forms loved to take up their abode, and the wisest and best of the people met in council—grown up in connection with the symbolism of Christianity—the mythical tree in Paradise lost, the mystical tree of the cross, the mysterious tree in Paradise regained—it points to the day when, religion having ceased to be a dogma, will have become once more simple poetry, and, as such, the common inheritance of the pure in heart and the childlike in spirit.—Macmillan's Magazine.

MELANCTHON'S WORKS.—He compiled his Grammar for his pupils at Heidelberg. Of this production, he used to express the wish that it had perished, as it was but a boyish production, and intended for boys. His countrymen seem to have entertained a different opinion of it, for, from 1518 to 1589 it passed through no fewer than 25 editions. His Latin Grammar appeared first in 1525. It was compiled along with a short tract, Encomium Formicarum, for the use of his pupils, and was published without his consent. In the preface to the second edition, he complains of the first as confused; allows that, while it may admit of additions, there ought not to be too many rules, as they will only frighten boys from the study of Latin. It contains also an eloquent plea for the training of boys in the languages and in the study of grammar, as an excellent way for making good citizens, and the only way to form a love for the Word of God; and he calls upon princes and cities to vie with each other in the support of learning and study, "those ornaments of the Church and human life." A Leipsic Professor of Latin declared this edition to be the final Latin Grammar. "It contains no errors, and it requires nothing to be added to it." It was at least the Latin Grammar of Germany for over 200 years. From 1525 to 1737 not fewer than 51 editions were issued; and in its definitions and arrangements it is to a large extent the basis of the popular grammars of the present day. His first book on Logic appeared in 1520, an improved and enlarged edition in 1527, and a third edition in 1529. It was intended for youth, and was meant to pave the way to the study of Aristotle. "We cannot," says Melanchthon, "be without Aristotle's logic. Those who are ignorant of the art tear the subject to be treated on as puppies do rags." His second book on Logic appeared in 1547, and in less than six weeks 3,000 copies of it were sold. His treatise on Rhetoric appeared in 1519, and a late edition in 1531. "It is a mistake," says he in the preface, "to suppose that the height of eloquence has been attained when a man can write a letter; it requires deep learning, great talent, long exercise and sharp judgment." He published also a book on Physics and a Chronicle.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE NEW SIRENS.

A PALINODE.

I shall not, I hope, be supposed unconscious that in coherency and intelligibility the following poem leaves much to be desired. It was published in 1849, in a small volume without my name, was withdrawn along with that volume, and until now has never been reprinted. But the departed poem had the honor of being followed by the regrets of a most distinguished mourner, Mr. Swinburne, who has more than once revived its memory, and asked for its republication. Mr. Swinburne's generosity toward contemporary verse is well known; and "The New Sirens" may have won his favor the more readily because it had something, perhaps, of that animation of movement and rhythm of which his own poems offer such splendid examples. In addition to Mr. Swinburne, the poem has had also several other friends, less distinguished, who desired its restoration. To a work of his youth, a work produced in long past days of ardor and emotion, an author can never be very hard-hearted; and after a disappearance of more than 25 years, "The New Sirens," therefore, is here reprinted. M. A.

In the cedar shadow sleeping,
Where cool grass and fragrant glooms
Late at eve had lured me, creeping
From your darken'd palace rooms;
I, who in your frain at morning
Stroll'd and sang with joyful mind,
Heard, in slumber, sounds of warning;
Saw the hoarse boughs labor in the wind.

Who are they, O pensive Graces,
—For I dream'd they wore your forms—
Who on shores and sea-wash'd places
Scoop the shells and troll the storms?
Who, when ships are that way tending,
Troop across the flushing sands,
To all reefs and narrows wending,
With blown tresses, and with beckoning hands?

Yet I see, the howling levels
Of the deep are not your lair;
And your tragic-vaunted revels
Are less lonely than they were.
Like those Kings with treasure steering
From the jewel'd lands of dawn,
Troops, with gold and gifts, appearing,
Streams all day through your enchanted lawn.

And we too, from upland valleys,
Where some Muse with hair curved frown
Leans her ear to your mad sallies
Which the charm'd winds never drown;
By faint music guided, ranging
The scared glens, we wander'd on,
Left our awful laurels hanging,
And came heap'd with myrtles to your throne.

From the dragon-waider'd fountains
Where the springs of knowedge are,
From the watchers on the mountains,
And the bright and morning star;
We are exiles, we are falling,
We have lost them at your call—
O ye false ones, at your calling
Seeking ceiled chambers and a palace hall!

Are the accents of your luring
More melodious than of yore?
Are those frail forms more enduring
Than the charms Ulysses bore?
That we sought you with rejoicings,
Till at evening we descry
At a pause of Siren voicings
These vext branches and this howling sky?

* * * * * * *

Oh, your pardon! The uncouthness
Of that primal age is gone.
And the skin of dazzling smoothness
Screens not now a heart of stone.
Love has flush'd those cruel faces;
And your slacken'd arms forego
The delight of death-embraces,
And those whitening bone-mounds do not grow.

"Come," you say; "the large appearance
Of man's labor is but vain.
And we plead as staunch adherence
Due to pleasure as to pain."
Pointing to earth's careworn creatures,
"Come," you murmur with a sigh:
"Ah! we own diviner features,
Lother bearing, and a prouder eye.

"Come," you say, "the hours were dreary,
Life without love does but fade;
Fain it wastes, and we grow weary
In the slumbrous cedarn shade.
Round our hearts, with long caresses,
With low sighings Silence stole;
And her load of encircling tresses
Weigh'd, like Ossa, on the aery soul.

"Come," you say, "the soul is fainting
Till she search, and learn her own;
And the wisdom of man's painting
Leaves her riddle half unknown.
Come," you say, "the brain is seeking;
While the princely heart is dead;
Yet this gleam'd, when Gods were speaking,
Rarer secrets than the toiling head.

"Come," you say, "opinion trembles,
Judgment shifts, convictions go;
Life dries up, the heart dissembles;
Only, what we feel, we know.
Hath your wisdom known emotions?
Will it weep our burning tears?
Hath it drunk of our love-potions
Crowning moments with the weight of years?"

I am dumb. Alas, too soon all
Man's grave reasons disappear!
Yet, I think, at God's tribunal
Some large answer you shall hear.
But for me, my thoughts are straying
Where at sunrise, through your vines,
On these lawns I saw you playing,
Hanging garlands on the odorous pines;

When your showering locks unwound you,
And your heavenly eyes shone through;
When the pine-boughs yielded round you,
And your brows were starr'd with dew;
And immortal forms, to meet you,
Down the statued alleys came;
And through golden horns, to greet you,
Blew such music as a God may frame.

Yes, I muse. And, if the dawning
Into daylight never grew,
If the glistering wings of morning
On the dry noon shook their dew;
If the fits of joy were longer,
Or the day were sooner done,
Or, perhaps, if hope were stronger—
No weak nursling of an earthly sun * * *
Pluck, pluck cypress, O pale maidens,
Dusk the hall with yew!

* * * * * * *

For a bound was set to meetings,
And the sombre day dragg'd on;
And the burst of joyful greetings,
And the joyful dawn, were gone.
For the eye was fill'd with gazing,
And on raptures follow calms;
And those warm locks men were praising,
Droop'd, unbraided, on your listless arms.

Storms unsmooth'd your folded valleys,
And made all your cedars frown;
Leaves were whirling in the alleys
Which your lovers wander'd down.
—Sitting cheerless in your bowers,
The tall spring-tide sunk head,
Do they gall you, the long hours,
And the hungry thought, that must be fed?

Is the pleasure that is tasted
Patient of a long review?
Will the fire joy hath wasted,
Mused on, warm the heart anew?
—Or, are these old thoughts returning,
Guests the dull sense never knew,
Stars, set deep, yet inly burning,
Germs, your untrimm'd passion overgrew?

Once, like me, you took your station
Watchers for a purer fire;
But you droop'd in expectation,
And you wearied in desire.
When the first rose flush was steeping
All the frore peak's awful crown,
Shepherds say, they found you sleeping
In some windless valley, farther down.

Then you wept, and, slowly raising
Your dozed eyelids, sought again,
Half in doubt, they say, and gazing
Sadly back, the seats of men.
Snatch'd a turbid inspiration
From some transient earthly sun,
And proclaim'd your vain ovation
For those frantic raptures you had won.

* * * * * * *

With a sad, majestic motion,
With a stately, slow surprise,
From their earthward-bound devotion
Lifting up your languid eyes—
Would you freeze my louder boldness,
Dumbly smiling as you go?
One faint frown of distant coldness
Flitting fast across each marble brow?

Do I brighten at your sorrow
O sweet Pleaders? doth my lot
Find assurance in to-morrow
Of one joy, which you have not?
O, speak once, and shame my sadness!
Let this throbbing, Pygmy pain,
Mock'd and baffled by your gladness,
Mar the music of your feasts in vain!

* * * * * * *

Scent, and song, and light, and flowers!
Gust on gust, the harsh winds blow—
Come, bind up those ringlet showers!
Roses for that dreaming brow!
Come, once more the ancient lightness,
Glancing feet, and eager eyes!
Let your bread lamps flash the brightness
Which the sorrow-stricken day denies!

Through black depths of serried shadows,
Up cold aisles of buried glade;
In the mist of river-meadows
Where the looming deer are laid;
From your dazzled windows streaming,
From your humming festal room,
Deep and far, a broken gleaming
Reels and shivers on the ruffled gloom.

Where I stand, the grass is glowing;
Doubtless you are passing fair!
But I hear the north wind blowing,
And I feel the cold night-air.

Can I look on your sweet faces,
And your proud heads backward thrown,
From this dusk of leaf-strewn places
With the dumb woods and the night alone?

But, indeed, this flux of guesses—
Mad delight, and frozen calms—
Mirth to-day and vine-bound tresses,
And to-morrow—folded palms—
Is this all? this balanced measure?
Could life run no happier way?
Joyous, at the height of pleasure,
Passive, at the nadir of dismay?

But, indeed, this proud possession,
This far-reaching, magic chain,
Linking in a mad succession
Fits of joy and fits of pain—
Have you seen it at the closing,
Have you track'd its clouded ways?
Can your eyes, while fools are dozing,
Drop, with mine, adown life's latter days?

When a dreary light is wading
Through this waste of sunless greens—
When the flashing lights are fading
On the peerless cheek of queens—
When the mean shall no more sorrow,
And the proudest no more smile—
While the dawning of the morrow
Widens slowly westward all that while?

Then, when change itself is over,
When the slow tide sets one way,
Shall you find the radiant lover,
Even by moments, of to-day?
The eye wanders, faith is failing;
O, loose hands, and let it be!
Proudly, like a king bewailing,
O, let fall one tear, and set us free!

All true speech and large avowal
Which the jealous soul concedes;
All man's heart, which brooks bestowal,
All frank faith, which passion breeds—
These we had, and we gave truly;
Doubt not, what we had, we gave!
False we were not, nor unruly;
Lodgers in the forest and the cave.

Long we wander'd with you, feeding
Our rapt souls on your replies,
In a wistful silence reading
All the meaning of your eyes;
By moss-bordered statues sitting,
By well-heads in Summer days.
But we turn, our eyes are flitting—
See, the white east, and the morning rays!

And you, too, O worship'd Graces,
Sylvan Gods of this fair shade!
Is there doubt on divine faces?
Are the blessed Gods dismay'd?
Can men worship the man-natures,
The sunk eyes, the waiting tone,
Of unsphered, discrowned creatures,
Souls as little godlike as their own?

Come, loose hands! The winged fleetness
Of immortal feet is gone;
And your scents have shed their sweetness,
And your flowers are overblown;
And your jewel'd gauds surrender
Half their glories to the day;
Freely did they flash their splendor,
Freely gave it—but it dies away.

In the pines the thrush is waking—
Lo, yon orient hill in flames!
Scores of true love knots are breaking
At divorce which it proclaims.
When the lamps are paled at morning,
Heart quits heart and hand quits hand.
Cold is that unlovely dawning,
Loveless, rayless, joyless you shall stand.

Pluck no more red roses, maidens,
Leave the lilies in their cell,
Pluck, pluck cypress, O pale maidens,
Dusk, oh, dusk the hall with yew!
—Shall I seek, that I may scorn her,
Her I loved at eventide?
Shall I ask, what faded mourner
Stands, at daybreak, weaving by my side?
Pluck, pluck cypress, O pale maidens!
Dusk the hall with yew!

CAPRICES OF THE NILE.—The Nile, as is well known, annually overflows its banks, and deluges a considerable part of Lower Egypt, such overflowing giving periodical fertility to the soil. These floodings, however, are by no means uniform in character. Sometimes the floodings are large, sometimes disappointingly small. Nor do they always take place at the same period in the year. Occasionally they are late and tardy in their rising and falling. When the river rises well, it is called "a good Nile;" when insufficient in volume, it is called "a bad Nile;" just as we speak of a good and a bad season. These caprices in the rise of the Nile have appeared to be so mysterious that certain astronomers are inclined to trace some connection between them and the absence or return of solar spots. But on this theory there are differences of opinion. While one astronomer thinks that spots in the sun lead to a heavy rainfall, others think just the reverse. Obviously, the sun-spot theory is somewhat visionary. The rise of the Nile depends on meteorological conditions near the sources of the river in Central Africa, of which we possess but imperfect information. A correspondent of the Times, Oct. 31, who, writing from Alexandria, gives a variety of curious particulars regarding the Nile, comes to the conclusion that the solar-spot theory is untenable. He says that, "so far as can be seen in Egypt, there does not appear to be any periodicity of high Niles agreeing absolutely with the acknowledged periodicity of sun-spots, and the cause or causes of maximum rainfalls must be sought for nearer home." A bad Nile followed by the heat and desiccation of an early Summer, such as occurred in 1869, is productive of that terrible result, a want of fresh water, either for domestic purposes, or for the lower animals. But that is not all. In consequence of the dryness of the ground in the region adjoining Alexandria, the salt water of the sea percolates inland, and gives a saline quality to the Nile and water-works for a distance of seven miles. The writer whom we have quoted, speaking of the drought of 1869, says: "At Rosetta the water was unfit for man or beast, the cattle died from it, and vegetation languished; people gave famine prices for a goat's skin of muddy sunking water from sand ditches in the country as the sun had not evaporated. There were just the elements for a plague or epidemic. At every low Nile period, the fresh water in Alexandria is bad, more or less; it was so this year; but after a very low Nile it is very bad, and may be the cause of an epidemic some day." The Romans, by means of gigantic tanks, of which remains are visible near Alexandria, did much to assuage the evil effects of a low Nile; but in the present day, though Egypt is in various ways advancing in a knowledge of the useful arts, we cannot expect to see anything like a revival of the energy demonstrated in the occupancy by the Romans. The miserably backward condition in almost every country that had the misfortune to fall into the hands of the Turks evokes the most painful emotions. The ingenious writer just referred to sees no prospect of the waters of the Nile being conserved by the present rulers of the country. "Had such a river," he says, "and such a Delta existed in any state of Western Europe or America, the thing would have been done long ago, if not by the State, by private enterprise. Look at Holland. Look at Lincolnshire, where, by private enterprise, seven hundred and fifty thousand acres of salt marsh and swamps and fens, under exactly the same conditions as those marshes of the Delta of Egypt (save wanting the rich Nile mud to hasten and increase the value of the returns,) have been reclaimed, and where an estate which sold for seven thousand pounds before the reclamation works were commenced, sold for fifty-seven thousand pounds after they were completed, and the value of everything was increased by a hundred per cent. The problem of the reclamation of the marshes of the Delta of Egypt is precisely identical, so far as the means of doing it are concerned, to that of the English fens; the only difference, in fact, being that in Lincolnshire the object is to keep out the tides when they are up, and open the sluices when they are down, in order to let out any rain-water in case of heavy rains when there is too much of it; here you want a bank and sluices to keep out a sea which has scarcely any tides at all, and the sluices to let out into the sea the Nile water after it has deposited all its mud into the marsh. To reclaim Lake Mareotis by a sea-bank and sluices about half the size of those used in Lincolnshire, and a small canal to let in the muddy Nile water, or clean out and extend the present ones, and reclaim its two hundred thousand acres, is a very small and simple matter. The barbor-works at Alexandria will soon be finished, and the plant and staff would be at liberty for the sea-bank and sluices—a rare opportunity of doing it cheaply. With the experience of what has been done in the Lincolnshire fens, and canals in India paying 39.7 per cent., 36.6, and 22.72 per cent. of revenue on capital, no one need hesitate to discuss a thing promising such safe results.—Chambers's Journal.

PEKING.—Peh-king, which means in Chinese, "northern capital," is divided into two parts—an inner or Tartar, and an outer or Chinese town—each surrounded by a battlemented mud wall with towers at intervals. But these walls lie close together, and the one does not include the other. A good idea of the shape of the city may be formed by placing a small brick beside a larger one. The smaller brick represents the Tartar, and the larger the Chinese quarter. The Imperial Palace occupies the centre of the inner town; and the circumference of the whole city, exclusive of the suburbs, is about 20 miles. We believe that the number given of the population is much exaggerated, for the houses are often wide apart, and there are numbers of ruins scattered about the town. In fact, Peking may be described in the words which an American applied to Rome, as "a city pretty considerably gone to decay." The stench of the streets is almost intolerable; "collectors of manure are continually moving about plying their trade with baskets on their arms; the smells are beyond description; and the water used for laying the dust is taken from the sewers." When a relative of our own visited Peking last year, he found his curiosity overcome by his disgust, and shut himself up in the house of the British Embassy to protect his nose from the offensive effluvia.—Blackwood's Magazine.

COL. BARRÉ, A FAMOUS SPEAKER IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Such was the condition of parties when Barré took his seat in the House of Commons. Much was expected during the session. Scarcely ever had matters of greater importance been placed before Parliament. The defense of an old war, the reasons against a new one, were to be debated with all the acrimony which broken party faith and broken family ties could inspire. In the Commons the Government was supported by a large majority, but it was for the most part a timid and dull herd. Pitt's eloquence awed them. His sarcasm scared them. Not one dared to enter the lists against him. Before the Christmas recess Barré had broken the spell. He had overwhelmed Pitt's person with abuse and his measures with reproach. He was a profligate minister, the execration of the people of England. "There he would stand, turning up his eyes to heaven, that witnessed his perjuries, and laying his hand in a solemn manner on the table—that sacrilegious hand, that had been employed in tearing out the bowels of his mother country." Pitt maintained a haughty but discreet silence. He, at all events, was not the man to cast the first stone. Perhaps his mind wandered back through the memories of nigh twenty years. He may have recollected the same grave assembly convulsed by an angry and acrimonious debate. The shadows of foes now passed away may again have surrounded him; and the voice of Sandys imploring him to spare the rank and authority of Carteret may have once more rung in his ears. This speech was applauded by Fox and by Rigby, but the House was disgusted. It was too savage for the bitterest partisan. On its conclusion Barré was seen to eat a biscuit. "Does it eat biscuit?" said Charles Townshend, "I thought it ate nothing but raw flesh." The court alone was pleased. Horace Walpole was a witness of this curious scene. As he approached the House of Commons the tones of a new voice struck upon his ear, as he passed the door the figure of a new speaker fell upon his eye. The House which for the last few years had scarcely ventured on a great debate, and which Pitt had tamed into such absolute submission, that, as Walpole himself had once remarked, a No! was as likely to be heard from the House of Commons as from an old woman, presented a scene of the most violent confusion. Walpole describes Barré as a black, robust, middle-aged man, of a military figure, a bullet, lodged loosely in his cheek, had distorted his face, and had imparted a savage glare to one eye; but unprepossessing as was his appearance, Walpole admits that his diction was both classic and eloquent. The harsh chord which Barré first struck never ceased to vibrate. Through his parliamentary career his speeches were marked by remorseless severity. Could anything have instilled a drop of mercy into his gall, it would have been the amiability of Lord North, surrounded as he was by the most unprecedented difficulties. But Lord North experienced no compassion. He was a wretch, a corrupter, a sycophaut. Nothing but his head would expiate his inquities. While these tirades were going on, Lord North probably slumbered peacefully as long as he could, but when he was compelled to answer he did so with a degree of good sense and self-command that must ever do honor to his disposition. The pre-eminence of Barré as a speaker was due principally to his extraordinary power of invective, but it would be a great injustice to suppose that there was nothing but invective in his speeches. On the contrary, some of them abound with wise maxims and good; sound, common sense. He was generally on what we should call the constitutional side, and as the great constitutional questions of that day have all been settled in his favor, it is naturally difficult for us to help being struck by his arguments. But Barré does not deserve our unqualified approbation. He was essentially a party man. He spoke for his party, and he voted with his party. Walpole called him a bravo, and nothing can so well illustrate the dependence of his position as the fact that, clever and eloquent as he was, the first trace we find of his making an original motion was in 1778, seventeen years after he entered Parliament. He was one of those mercenaries of the great political leaders of last century, who, after a tumultuous life of parliamentary conflict, were content to retire into oblivion upon a pension, men of vast abilities and too often of low morality, who flamed across the political heavens like meteors, and whose brilliant track, already beginning to fade in the lapse of time, alone remains to mark their former splendor.—Macmillan's Magazine.

TRAVELING IN THE HOLY LAND.—Every traveler in the Holy Land knows that the price of his safety in purse and person is in the subsidy he must pay the head Sheiks of the Bedouin tribes, who are the actual masters of Syria and Palestine outside the walled towns, in which is stationed a Turkish garrison. When last in Jerusalem, not many years since, the writer heard of the return of two adventurous Englishmen who, venturing on the road to Jordan without this potent safeguard from the Sheik, returned within twelve hours' time robed only in copies of the London Times, and despoiled of everything else except their boots, which the Bedouins had no use for, and, therefore, kindly allowed them to retain.

"Throughout that purple land,
Where law secures not life," is as true a description of the whole as it was of a part of the Ottoman's dominions in Byron's day; and there is, and can be, no remedy for it under the exceptional character of people and rulers. It is more apt to grow worse than to get better. From Damascus, late accounts are most deplorable, both from the city and adjoining country. No less than 14,000 persons, including half of the Turkish garrison, have been attacked by fever, and the rural population has been so pillaged by brigands that they have no desire to cultivate the soil for the benefit of Bedouin robbers.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE GREAT WALL OF CHINA.—Kalgan commands one of the passes through the Great Wall of China. It is there built of large stones cemented together with mortar. It tapers toward the top, being twenty-one feet high and twenty-eight feet wide at the foundation. At the most important points, less than a mile apart, square towers are erected, built of bricks. It winds over the crest of the mountains, crossing the valleys at right angles, and blocking them with fortifications. The Chinese estimate its length to be about 3,300 miles; but in parts more remote from Peking the wall is of very inferior construction. There it is nothing but a dilapidated mud-rampart, as Col. Prejevalsky saw it on the borders of Ala-shan and Kansu. It is said to have been built upward of two centuries before Christ, to protect the Empire against the inroads of the neighboring nomads; but the periodical irruptions of the barbarians were never checked by this artificial barrier.—Blackwood's Magazine.

SCHOPENHAUER'S LIFE IN FRANKFORT.—In 1831 he left Berlin definitely, the immediate cause being the approach of the cholera, one of the bugbears of Schopenhauer's fancy, which on a former occasion had driven him in mad flight from one city to another. Two years later he settled in Frankfort-on-the-Main, never to leave it again except on short journeys. His life there was one of almost absolute seclusion. He had no friends, and did not wish to make any; his interest in local affairs was null; and although he dined at the table-d'hôte of the best hotel, he seldom engaged in conversation, or, if he did, was soon silenced again by the commonplace replies he received in nine cases out of ten. For his talk, although never dull or abstruse, was always on high questions of literature, art, or philosophy. Small talk in the ordinary sense he despised. The only companions of his solitude were his poodle and his books. With the former he lived on terms of intimacy, observing with keen interest its canine individuality; only in cases of exceptional ill-behavior the opprobrious epithet of "man" was applied to it. Reading was the main occupation of Schopenhauer's life, for he did not write much, and only when urged by real inspiration. The results of his thought and study, noted down on pieces of paper, were carefully classified and kept in separate books. Each of these books or parcels had a label attached to it indicative of the contents, or of the time and circumstances of their origin. Some of these titles are curious, and characteristic of the author; for instance, Travelling-book, Cogitata, Spicilegia, Senilia, Cholera-book, (that is, book written on his flight from the cholera,) and the like. In this extreme accuracy, which also extended to the keeping of his accounts, we recognize the merchant's son.—Fortnightly Review.

THE NEAR-SIGHTED.—Among the very large class of those who are near-sighted, the great majority will be found in the upper and middle classes; and, of course, chiefly among learned men, professional men, authors, artists, students, &c. But, with the exception of those artisans and mechanics whose peculiar work demands a constant, and, therefore, injurious strain (particularly when it is night-work) upon the eyes, it will be found that near-sightedness to any considerable degree is extremely rare among operatives; while among the great mass of outdoor laborers, and the whole of the agricultural class, such a thing is scarcely known. With regard to the children of the upper and middle classes, near-sightedness, when they are not born so, is probably in a great measure attributable to premature straining of the optic nerves by minute and intricate toys, difficult puzzles, too early lessons in reading and writing; also to sleeping in over-heated and unventilated bedrooms, or bedroom windows throwing a glaring light upon the face, and to the want of sufficient out-of-door exercise, and atmospheric influences.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE WILD YAK OF NORTHERN THIBET.—This handsome beast is of extraordinary size and beauty, measuring, when full grown, 11 feet in length, exclusive of its bushy tail, which is three feet long. Its height at the hump is six feet, and the head is adorned with pendorous horns. The body is covered with thick black hair, which in the old males assumes a chestnut color on the back and upper parts of the sides. It roams in unrestricted freedom among the inhospitable wastes of Northern Thibet; but is found also further north. Although endowed with an acute sense of smell, its sight and hearing are defective,

FLORIDA HUNTING NOTES.

A DAY'S SPORT AMONG THE QUAIL.

SKETCH OF A FLORIDA HUNTER AND HIS PRIMITIVE DOG-CART—PECULIARITIES OF THE BIRDS AND THE GROUND THEY OCCUPY—WHERE PALM-LEAF FANS GROW—AN ADVENTURE WITH A WILD CAT.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

NEW-SMYRNA, Fla., Thursday, Dec. 21, 1876.

We came in half an hour ago from a quail hunt, one of several that I have taken part in. After breakfast this morning two of us started from the hotel and tramped up the soft, sandy road through the thick hummock for a quarter of a mile, until we came to an old cross-road. There we sat down and waited under a live-oak tree. Presently King, Capt. Frank Sams' brown setter, sprang out in front of us, and a few minutes later the jovial Captain himself came along with the team which was to take us out. We got in. What a sensation we would have created on Broadway! Imagine a large hand-cart of rude construction, with a meek buckskin pony between the shafts, a McClellan saddle on his back, and the Captain astride of that, clothed in a dingy white flannel hunting suit, a tattered Confederate army hat set rakishly on his long brown locks, and his breech-loader across his lap. We, clad in blue shirts, weather-beaten hunting suits, and hats and army shoes a size too large, were crowded up on the single seat in the cart, in the what is termed down here, the Georgia bend, our guns sticking straight into the air between our knees. The pony was fastened to the shafts by an iron chain in front, and by a broad piece of deerskin that went over the saddle and under the shafts. There were wooden pegs in the shafts which fitted into holes in the end of the deerskin. The cart was so constructed that an extra pound abaft the wheels would cause the shafts to tip, and the load would go spinning over the tail-board. To prevent an accident of this kind, the seat was lashed with ropes to the forward cross-piece. There were no springs and paint had been ignored by the builder. This is a specimen of the vehicles indigenous to Florida and the other extreme Southern States. We laughed heartily at the picture we presented, and wished that we could have had our photograph taken. Capt. Sims is one of the best hunters in this land, where every man is an expert with the gun. He is a man of intelligence, comfortably to do, the owner of many horses, cattle, hogs, and hunting dogs, several boats, numerous orange groves, and I don't know what all, and as pleasant a companion as you would wish to meet. He kept us in a continual roar of laughter with his comical stories of Florida life and customs.

After passing through about half a mile of thick hummock, where the broad palmetto leaves swept our faces, and the live-oak branches threatened to brush off our hats, we struck into the pitch-pine woods, and bumped along through soft sand, and over saw-palmetto roots, occasionally wading a shallow creek, for several miles. We passed three parties on horseback, with their rifles slung across their shoulders. The pony jogged at a slow walk, and it was past noon when we stopped and hied King into the scrub. Presently, the old fellow came to a point in the middle of a thick hummock surrounding a savannah, and before we could force our way to where he was, a flock of quail rose with a whirr. We all banged into them, but succeeded in knocking over only a brace, they were so strong on the wing. As they scattered, we marked them all down, and for the next hour were busy hunting them up, and popping away at them. We secured all but five of the covey, three of which we wounded, but could not find in the dense vegetation. We then lay down in the shade and partook of the refreshments we had brought with us.

Before I go any further, I had better describe the sort of country over which we hunted, as it is so different from anything North. The land is almost perfectly flat. The soil is sandy, and is covered with a tall wiry grass—excellent for cleaning out pipe-stems. Great Georgia pine-trees rear their evergreen heads in every direction, at distances of about 12 feet apart, making a delightful shade. Here and there there are oblong patches of black vegetable soil, in which grow saw-palmetto. Imagine a root as thick as a man's thigh, about three feet long, and covered with wooden scales. This lies along the top of the ground. From the upturned end grow numerous green fan-like leaves. Take a number of palm-leaf fans, lengthen their handles three times, and add, all around the edges, long points. Imagine these either a vivid or a light green—there are two sorts—and you have a clump of saw-palmettoes; for it is of these leaves, with the points cut off, the stem shortened, and the edges bound, that the palm-leaf fans are made. They grow sometimes as high as a man's shoulders, and so thick that walking among them is difficult. The hammocks are all sizes, from the length of a block to a half a mile or more. There are nearly always some scrub-oak and a few thorny vines among the palmettoes. A savannah is a long, narrow, low spot of soft mud, and oftentimes water, in which there is a dense growth of tall grass. A curious and useful fact is that savannahs, like ponds and marshes, invariably run north and south. The pine trees lean from north-west to south-east. To a person who knows these things a compass, even when the sun is obscured, is a superfluity. In the forenoon the quail—they call them partridges here—hide in the hummocks and savannahs. In the afternoon they come out into the open to feed. When alarmed they take to the hummocks again, but if carefully marked there is no trouble to rout them out. As a quail-hunting ground the pine woods of Florida afford one great advantage. Every shot is an open one, there being no foliage between the tops of the saw-palmettoes and the branches of the pines, forty feet in the air, to distract the view. The trunks of the trees are too far apart to be an obstacle.

Lunch finished and pipes lighted, we got into the cart again, and, leaving the road, made a circle backward through the woods in the direction of home. Old King now began to have all the work he could attend to. He was a beautiful picture, scouring the tall grass in front of us from side to side. Every 200 or 300 yards he would come to a dead point. Then we would stop, dismount, and, leaving the pony where he was, advance to where King stood stiff as a bronze statue. A short distance in front of his nose would be a flock of from 15 to 20 quail looking wonderingly at us. If we had shot at them then we could have bagged the whole of them. As we approached nearer they would run for a few steps, and then off they would go, followed by a hail-storm of No. 8 from our six barrels. After gathering the dead and wounded, we mounted the cart again and rode a short distance further to repeat the same performance. It was not worth our while to follow the escaped birds into the hummocks. A shot apiece at each covey we met filled our game-pockets and exhausted our cartridges before it grew too dark to see to shoot. Then King was called to heel, and we jogged homeward in the best of spirits over our glorious day's sport, and with appetites that played sad havoc among the bountiful provender that awaited our coming. This is the only hunting-ground I have ever known where one exhausts a belt-full of cartridges in a single afternoon.

The trip I have described was the most extensive one we have yet taken. We have been out several times after quail on foot, within a range of five or six miles of the hotel, with and without a dog, and have always returned satisfied. On one occasion we came across a flock of eight or ten parroquets feeding on the seeds that lie between the layers of the pine cones. I gave them both barrels, one while roosting and the other on the wing, and knocked over three. Two were but slightly wounded. One had his wing broken and a shot had grazed the top of the other's head, dazing him. They set up a tremendous squawking as we approached and fought lustily with beak and talons against capture. Their comrade circled about out of gunshot, yelling like a troop of Comanche Indians and kicking up a terrible fuss generally, until we had bagged the dead and wounded birds and turned to pay our attention to them, when they flew off screaming. As it was getting late we did not follow them. We skinned the dead bird for his feathers; the other two are at present trotting around the floor very contentedly, having just been let out of their cage. Their wounds are almost healed. They are exceedingly beautiful birds, with red and orange heads and green bodies. They are easily tamed. A gentleman from New-York now in the hotel has one that he shot, a few miles back here in a willow swamp, last year. It is perfectly at home, sits continually on his shoulder, and screams if he leaves its sight for an instant.

The woods are also full of doves—a bird with all the features of our Northern wild pigeon, but much smaller. These afford excellent shooting. About a mile back of here there is a dense thicket of bay trees which is used as a roost by a large colony of them—estimated at 1,000. To get to the thicket they are compelled to pass over an open field. We went there the other afternoon, a little before sundown. We had not long to wait. The birds began to come singly, in pairs, and in groups, and oftentimes we could not change cartridges fast enough for them. For half an hour the fusilade was continuous, and we secured a very fair bag. They were as fat as butter, and proved excellent eating. The sport was magnificent. The birds came on with the velocity of the wind, and the greatest quickness and steadiness were necessary to insure a hit. Meadow larks are met with very frequently and are good shooting. Then there are fox and gray squirrels in quantities to suit; black and ivory-billed woodpeckers as large as chickens, possums, raccoons, a few woodcock, bustards, hawks of all kinds, robins, highbolders, brown thrushes, bullfinches, kingfishers, mocking birds, Florida jays, catbirds, cardinal grosbeaks, buzzards, eagles, crows, and I don't know how many others. There is an eagle's nest in a dead tree in the woods about a mile and a half from here. The young birds will soon be hatched out. I gave the male eagle a load of No. 6 as he was circling around, yelling at me, and knocked a shower of feathers out of him. One is apt to startle a deer at any moment. On Friday last a New-Yorker staying here, while creeping up on a doe that he saw in the distance, was knocked heels over head by a buck that sprang up from the bushes just under his nose. He lost both. They are killed every day all around the village. One night last week, Mr. Lewis, an Ohioan, who has settled about a mile to the north of the hotel, shot six by fire-light. On Monday, another resident, Dr. Fox, killed three with three successive discharges of a Winchester rifle. They are smaller than our Northern deer, but their flesh is much tenderer. Wild turkeys, to judge from the quantities brought in and from the numerous "signs" one comes across in the tree hummocks, where they have been scratching, are quite plentiful. I have not seen any myself, but I have not come out on the purpose to shoot them. They are better eating than a tame turkey. The noise of their scratching can be heard a long distance, but they are very shy and great care is needed to get within gunshot of them. To step on a dried palmetto leaf is fatal.

If the natives are to be believed, wild cats are as plentiful as blackberries North. They are constantly telling of seeing one in this place or that place, and the number said to have been treed by dogs since our arrival is too great a tax for my memory. I myself, had an adventure with a wild cat. We were returning last Tuesday evening from fishing at McLean's wharf. It was shortly before sundown, there was not a breath of wind, and we were drifting slowly with the tide. The bank, for several miles, is low and thickly covered with scrub oak about as high as a man's head. The beach in front was strewn with dried branches. About a hundred feet ahead of us a wild cat walked leisurely out of the thicket, sat down on his haunches at the water's edge, looked slowly at us, yawned, and began to lick himself. We had buckshot cartridges in our breech-loaders, and the helm hard down in an instant. As we slowly approached the shore the cat ceased performing his toilet and returned our stare. I believe we could have got within 20 feet of him, so ill at ease did he seem alarmed. When about 50 feet off I took deliberate aim at his breast, and gave him the contents of the right-hand barrel. He jumped two feet in the air, turned like a flash, and darted into the brush. We landed, and found a streak of hair and several spots of blood near the prints of his feet in the sand. In front of us was a round opening in the bushes which he had made to facilitate egress from his den. We crawled in—there was no use trying to force our way through the brush. After proceeding three or four feet, a violent rustling of the branches halted us in double-quick time. The cat had dropped back to look at us, and on our approach had turned round facing us, and was growling and spitting at a furious rate. I lost no time in giving him another dose of buckshot. There was a terrible commotion for a minute, but when the smoke cleared away, a few feeble kicks indicated that it was all over with my first wildcat. He was four feet six inches long from nose to the tip of his stumpy tail. Everybody said he was one of the largest wildcat's they had ever seen. His skin is now drying against the edge of one of the outhouses. The place where we found him is a great resort for wild-cats. There are said to be seven or eight in the town. They feed on birds, chickens, young hogs, and dead fish left on the beach by the receding tide. The tiger-cat, a larger variety, is also found here, and there are occasional pumas, they call them panthers—in the woods. Mr. Lewis' dogs treed one on Sunday afternoon only a few hundred yards from the house. My friend saw one killed at Dunlin last month that was 13 feet long. The natives pooh-pooh the notion that one of these animals will attack a human being, although a case happened but a short distance from here, a few weeks ago, where a wild-cat chased a small dog into a negro cabin and jumped on a bed where the mistress of the shanty and her two children were sleeping. He had to be driven off with clubs.

Black bears are numerous. During the first week in December last year six were killed within 600 yards of the hotel. They are hunted with dogs and on horseback, and the "crackers" consider this the acme of sport. Some seven or eight have been shot since we have been here, and bear steaks have been a frequent dish on the table. Sometimes they are trapped. They dig wells on the beach to get brackish water, of which they are fond. The hunter finds one of these, sets his trap in it, covers it neatly, and when Mr. Bear comes along again he is taken in and done for. Wild hogs are plentiful back in the woods, and are regularly hunted. The boars are dangerous, and will attack a pedestrian without provocation. The hound dogs here are specially trained to follow them. A still more unique sport of this region is wild cattle hunting. All the cattle here are more or less wild, but there are large herds in the swamps that have never been branded, and that are even less accustomed to the sight of man than deer, bears, or other legitimate game. They grew so numerous recently as to be troublesome, and an expedition was organized to kill them off. The dogs were put on the trail, and tried to drive them into the open, which they soon did. The hunters then, mounted on fleet ponies, dashed down upon them, pouring lead into them right and left from the saddle, until about fifty head had bitten the dust. One pony was badly gored. It was a sight to see some of the riders slam through a thicket that looked as though it could not be cut with a knife, and rush over gopher holes, thick roots, and fallen logs at full gallop. It is a wonder some of their necks were not broken. I ate some of the meat and found it good, but a little tough.

There are alligators in the marshes and fresh water ponds all about here, but they are not so plentiful as before the Northerners began to come down and shoot them on sight. Captain Sims tells a good story about shooting three large ones while out on the bear hunt that I have mentioned in former letters. The Captain says he thought they were pretty tame. Meeting Conner, near whose cabin the camp had been pitched, Sams told him about the alligators. Conner's jaw fell, and he threw up his hands, exclaiming, "Good Lord! There, I've been savin' them 'gators all summer for the Yanks."

The people of New Smyrna know nothing and care nothing about a fish and reel. Every man, however, is a gunner, and good guns can easily be found in almost every house. Dogs are as plentiful as chickens North—deer hounds nearly all of them, but equally good on bear, wild-cat, hog, or cow. There is one other setter here, besides King, a coal-black beauty named Beppo, who did me good service on the last two occasions. The usual charge for a guide's services is $3 per day, a saddle horse is $1 extra and his feed. Boat and dogs are furnished but the stranger must provide his own camp equipage. Some men bring down very elaborate fittings—a few have even sent to Paris, and imported their traps—and the least amount of luggage consistent with comfort is the best. An A tent, pots, kettles, and pans, cork mattress, two woolen blankets and a gum blanket or long rubber overcoat, are needed. Plain provisions such as flour, tea, coffee, bacon, hominy, sugar, canned vegetables, &c., can be purchased here. Luxuries of all descriptions must be imported.

There is no need to offer any advice on the subject of ammunition, but it may be as well to mention that the fish hooks I have found most serviceable are Nos. 7 o and 8 o, Cuttybunk, bought loose. They are easily snelled on a piece of line by taking a couple of half hitches around the shank. These with a few spare hooks and a few small lead sinkers for emergencies—should bait run out while fishing—are all that is needed, but a sufficient number should be taken, as it is no uncommon thing to loose several hooks and sinkers per day. A two-inch sliding sinker is the best. The largest sized reel and a heavy bass rod are the only ones that will suit, and it is well to have an extra second-joint and an extra tip or two made for fear of accidents. Once in a while a stout fly rod may come into play, but generally it is only an incumbrance. Six hundred feet of braided linen line will just about outlast the Winter. This is an extraordinary hard climate on guns and rods; they be wiped and greased twice a day, whether in use or not, they are in a perpetual state of rust. It is said that a coat of blue ointment is an effectual preventive, and that another is a couple of coats of paint-oil, well dried on, but I cannot vouch for either, not having the means of testing them at hand. See that all equipments are in the best order before starting, as it is difficult under several weeks to have repairs made here. There is a new settler named Spencer in this place, a sort of jack-of-all-trades, who made a spring for my gun, and made it well, but such persons are not to be found every where.

I stopped writing a few minutes to look at a flamingo, shot by a resident of this place with a rifle, while feeding at a creek about three miles from here. He is over four feet high, and exceedingly handsome in color, with crimson and black "trimmings." He is not indigenous to Florida, and, it is thought, must have been blown across the ocean in one of the recent gales. The weather continues delightful—warm, with a delicious breeze. There have been only two slight showers since our arrival in the State. All days are pleasant for out-door exercise, and all nights are cool enough for a sound enjoyable sleep. Don't you envy us?

THE VILEST OF THE VILE.

THE EXTREMITY OF DEGRADATION.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF THE TRAMP—HIS INEVITABLE CHARACTERISTICS LAZINESS AND FILTH—HOW HE LODGES, EATS, AND DRINKS—THE SHABBY GENTEEL TRAMP—HOW TO BANISH ALL TRAMPS.

The "tramp" may be both beggar and thief, but his distinctive character is not derived from the practices of either of these classes, and, indeed, his points of likeness to them are very slight. He lacks the persistency and providence of the professional beggar; he is devoid of the enterprise and the ingenuity necessary to the successful prosecution of the business of the thief. When he begs, it is to meet the small necessities of the day; when he steals, he simply takes the most unconsidered trifles which happen to be lying about loose in his vicinity; things that are scarcely deemed worth guarding by their owners, but of sufficient value to be exchangeable for the few pennies he actually needs. What, then, is the distinguishing characteristic of the "tramp" which makes him "of man's life a thing apart?" Simply the most utterly hopeless laziness—a laziness so all-pervading and controlling that the wretched being possessed by it is actually incapable of memory, hope, ambition, love, and gratitude; too infirm of purpose to even care for himself or seek to improve his wretched existence; too indifferent alike to his own comfort and the opinion of others to even maintain the slightest semblance of personal cleanliness. Foul to the eye, loathsome to the nostrils, revolting to the moral sense of all decent people who behold him, the tramp slouches through life, a continual reproach to the inscrutable Providence who has permitted him to exist, yet has not made him a crawling thing. He seems to feel that a crawl should be his natural mode of progression, for he adapts his members to it as well as he can. He does not lift his feet and set them down again as a man does; he dangles one out before him, rests his weight upon it, and drags the other up to it. He does not walk erect, but bows himself, not because of age or illness, but for the simple reason that his torso—however light—is still far too heavy for his resolution to support it. His favorite posture is a recumbent one. His best amusement is sleep. As a rule, with few exceptions, he has an inordinate fondness for whisky. As a rule, with no exceptions, he hates water.

There were comparatively few tramps before the war. Some there were, of course—as in all ages and in all lands—creatures who seemed born to vagrancy and degradation, but where there were a hundred in the years preceding the war, there appeared thousands in the succeeding years. In the Army, men learned how much of what they had deemed the necessities of life were in reality its luxuries. They found that sleeping upon the ground was not so great a hardship as they had once believed it; that nice distinctions in choice of food were not necessary to existence; that it was possible to become so inured to cold and hunger that those conditions would seem trivial. To very many of them, from the lowest ranks of life, and even to some of a better type, already predisposed to an avoidance of physical exertion, this newly acquired knowledge opened up the blissful prospect of a life of lazy irresponsibility and lack of care, into which they plunged—or, to speak more correctly, sank—as soon as they were at liberty so to do. To this great army of tramps, or "hummers," there came—as the years of financial distress throughout the country rolled on—hordes of recruits from the unemployed, the bankrupt, the dissolute, and the petty criminal classes. These all dropped to the same level, all manifested the same characteristics of "shiftlessness" and an utter lack of self-respect and cleanliness. So perfect is the similarity among them that intelligent Police officers do not hesitate to pronounce the "bummer" the victim of a disease, and affirm that his malady is a thing for which he is as little responsible as is a sufferer from rheumatism for the affliction that has befallen him. "He couldn't help it; he was born for it," say others, with an easy fatalistic philosophy which arrives at the same result.

There is no place in the City where, at this season, the tramp may be seen and appreciated as he deserves, more perfectly than in the old Police station building No. 53 Spring street, which has now been turned into a lodging-house of the cheapest kind. Passing through its long entrance-way and up a flight of narrow stairs, one arrives at a window where the proprietor sits each evening to receive from his patrons the nickels and pennies which pay for their night's lodging. As each lodger pays here his few coins, a door beside the window is opened and an attendant hands out to him a sheet of paper, if he happens to be one of those who take the cheapest accommodations. That sheet of paper is his bed. With it in his hand he wends his way up another flight of stairs, opens a door, and enters his bedroom. It is a large room, probably 20 feet wide by 40 in length. There is a window, but the tramp's prejudice against fresh air is almost as great as his detestation of water, and the window might as well be a wall, so far as any use of ventilation are concerned. A platform about seven feet wide, and at a height of three and a half feet from the floor, runs along three sides of the apartment. Its purpose is that he is to sleep. A large stove, red hot, stands in the foreground. The air is oppressively warm, and the stench indescribably horrible. Some of the men who sit about the stove are naked to the waist. A few, who have retired to rest, have made pillows of most of their rags. One lies below, as did Don Quixote, his half-recumbing upon the edge of a platform and stretches out a naked foot which, although he is a white man, is much blacker than the face of the full-blooded negro who sits near a smoky lamp mending his tattered coat. Two of the gang are enjoying a drunken wrangle about—they themselves know not what. This is the 10-cent room and its inmates are simply specimens of the lowest types of the "bummer." In their faces, some of which are bloated, others haggard, and all stolidly indifferent in expression, there is such an utter lack of human purpose or ambition that one is sickened by the sight of them. The fifth that covers them seems to have saturated their minds. But one gleam of interest in anything is manifested by them. That is when one ragged wretch pulls a bottle from some place of concealment among his tatters and takes a drink from its mouth. The others look at him wistfully, but when he hides the flask again, without inviting any one to partake of its contents, even that passing interest is gone. One not accustomed to such an atmosphere as this will be glad to hurry from it into the street. Somewhat better the air is in another and smaller room, where the price for a night's lodging is 15 cents. Here the platforms are covered by great bags of straw. This is the apartment, as in the other, several of the inmates are in a state of semi-nudity. In still another room there are single cots placed very closely together. These have bed-clothing upon them, and the charge for occupancy is 20 cents. For that sum one may have a room all to himself, so far as companionship is concerned. All the lodgers here are bummers. A small proportion, say one in 50, are very poor men, possibly strangers in the City, or persons who are sinking into the tramp class, but there is not much hope for them after they enter this gate.

The statistics of admissions show that this cellars down about the head of Mulberry street off Baxter street, in Cherry, Worth, and Greenwich streets, and other low haunts where there is equal degradation, and, in a few instances, even a lower depth exists—places where male and female tramps, indiscriminately drunk and filthy, herd together in the most revolting association and that degradation beyond all fathoming which is born of the absolute death of self-respect and moral consciousness. Ryan's, a "distillery" nearly opposite the Cathedral on Mott street, used to be probably the worst of these places. It was a vile liquor shop, with an apartment at the back technically known as the "velvet room," where men and women in the last stages of drunkenness used to sleep off their torpor, and where they sometimes cooked the food they begged, stole, or found in the ash-barrels. The Board of Health expelled the inmates of Ryan's tumble-down shanty, and he now runs a tenement-house in the Sixth Ward, and keeps a liquor shop, but the Police have toned down the exceptionally abominable character of his "velvet room," and also of many imitators of its style in other parts of the City. There are still dens of these low types of the "distilleries" where drunken customers are thrown upon the floor to sleep off their intoxication, and in some of these, as at Lynch's—familiarly and aptly known as "the Morgue"—on Mott street, they may enjoy the luxury of a pile of wet straw to lie upon. The female tramps, who are in numbers about in the proportion of three to five to the male tramps, haunt the cellars of the Fourth, Sixth, and First Wards for their lodging-places, and also frequent the station-houses a great deal. They are in all respects like their male associates in laziness, filth, and hopelessness, but are generally more repulsive from their greater moral pollination and their habits of drunkenness. About Nov. 1, 1876, the Police Commissioners issued an order excluding lodgers from the station-house lodgings, but that order has now been modified by verbal instructions, so that no applicant in this inclement season is refused shelter. If one appears who is manifestly a worthy object of charity he is sent either to the old asylum on the corner of Prince and Marion streets, the Schiffelin's charitable lodging-house—or to the new place opened by the department to accommodate such cases at the corner of 32d Tenth street and Avenue D. Even if the applicant is suspected of being a "bummer" he will be given shelter for one, two, or, possibly, three nights in the lodgers' room at the station-house. If he appears oftener, however, he will be included in the list of prisoners sent before a magistrate some morning, and will find himself at the Workhouse on Blackwell's Island very speedily. It would seem that to men who live as these do, ill-clothed, ill-fed, and badly lodged, the Work-house would not be a place of much terror. Work there is very light, food is good and sufficient, and they can sleep in warm rooms with comparatively pure air about them. But they have a perfect horror of that institution, for the simple reason that upon entering it they have to submit to a bath, and to force a tramp to wash himself is to penetrate upon him an exquisite torture. So the thorough tramp seldom ventures to the same station-house more than two nights in succession. Then he goes to another, always with the least amount of luggage consistent with comfort is the best. An A tent, pots, kettles, and pans, cork mattress, two woolen blankets and a gum blanket or long rubber overcoat, are needed. Plain provisions such as flour, tea, coffee, bacon, hominy, sugar, canned vegetables, &c., can be purchased here. Luxuries of all descriptions must be imported.

There is no need to offer any advice on the subject of ammunition, but it may be as well to mention that the fish hooks I have found most serviceable are Nos. 7 o and 8 o, Cuttybunk, bought loose. They are easily snelled on a piece of line by taking a couple of half hitches around the shank. These with a few spare hooks and a few small lead sinkers for emergencies—should bait run out while fishing—are all that is needed, but a sufficient number should be taken, as it is no uncommon thing to loose several hooks and sinkers per day. A two-inch sliding sinker is the best. The largest sized reel and a heavy bass rod are the only ones that will suit, and it is well to have an extra second-joint and an extra tip or two made for fear of accidents. Once in a while a stout fly rod may come into play, but generally it is only an incumbrance. Six hundred feet of braided linen line will just about outlast the Winter. This is an extraordinary hard climate on guns and rods; they be wiped and greased twice a day, whether in use or not, they are in a perpetual state of rust. It is said that a coat of blue ointment is an effectual preventive, and that another is a couple of coats of paint-oil, well dried on, but I cannot vouch for either, not having the means of testing them at hand. See that all equipments are in the best order before starting, as it is difficult under several weeks to have repairs made here. There is a new settler named Spencer in this place, a sort of jack-of-all-trades, who made a spring for my gun, and made it well, but such persons are not to be found every where.

I stopped writing a few minutes to look at a flamingo, shot by a resident of this place with a rifle, while feeding at a creek about three miles from here. He is over four feet high, and exceedingly handsome in color, with crimson and black "trimmings." He is not indigenous to Florida, and, it is thought, must have been blown across the ocean in one of the recent gales. The weather continues delightful—warm, with a delicious breeze. There have been only two slight showers since our arrival in the State. All days are pleasant for out-door exercise, and all nights are cool enough for a sound enjoyable sleep. Don't you envy us?

There were comparatively few tramps before the war. Some there were, of course—as in all ages and in all lands—creatures who seemed born to vagrancy and degradation, but where there were a hundred in the years preceding the war, there appeared thousands in the succeeding years. In the Army, men learned how much of what they had deemed the necessities of life were in reality its luxuries. They found that sleeping upon the ground was not so great a hardship as they had once believed it; that nice distinctions in choice of food were not necessary to existence; that it was possible to become so inured to cold and hunger that those conditions would seem trivial. To very many of them, from the lowest ranks of life, and even to some of a better type, already predisposed to an avoidance of physical exertion, this newly acquired knowledge opened up the blissful prospect of a life of lazy irresponsibility and lack of care, into which they plunged—or, to speak more correctly, sank—as soon as they were at liberty so to do. To this great army of tramps, or "hummers," there came—as the years of financial distress throughout the country rolled on—hordes of recruits from the unemployed, the bankrupt, the dissolute, and the petty criminal classes. These all dropped to the same level, all manifested the same characteristics of "shiftlessness" and an utter lack of self-respect and cleanliness. So perfect is the similarity among them that intelligent Police officers do not hesitate to pronounce the "bummer" the victim of a disease, and affirm that his malady is a thing for which he is as little responsible as is a sufferer from rheumatism for the affliction that has befallen him. "He couldn't help it; he was born for it," say others, with an easy fatalistic philosophy which arrives at the same result.

There is no place in the City where, at this season, the tramp may be seen and appreciated as he deserves, more perfectly than in the old Police station building No. 53 Spring street, which has now been turned into a lodging-house of the cheapest kind. Passing through its long entrance-way and up a flight of narrow stairs, one arrives at a window where the proprietor sits each evening to receive from his patrons the nickels and pennies which pay for their night's lodging. As each lodger pays here his few coins, a door beside the window is opened and an attendant hands out to him a sheet of paper, if he happens to be one of those who take the cheapest accommodations. That sheet of paper is his bed. With it in his hand he wends his way up another flight of stairs, opens a door, and enters his bedroom. It is a large room, probably 20 feet wide by 40 in length. There is a window, but the tramp's prejudice against fresh air is almost as great as his detestation of water, and the window might as well be a wall, so far as any use of ventilation are concerned. A platform about seven feet wide, and at a height of three and a half feet from the floor, runs along three sides of the apartment. Its purpose is that he is to sleep. A large stove, red hot, stands in the foreground. The air is oppressively warm, and the stench indescribably horrible. Some of the men who sit about the stove are naked to the waist. A few, who have retired to rest, have made pillows of most of their rags. One lies below, as did Don Quixote, his half-recumbing upon the edge of a platform and stretches out a naked foot which, although he is a white man, is much blacker than the face of the full-blooded negro who sits near a smoky lamp mending his tattered coat. would stand up, hold the paper, wag one foot steadily, and still sleep soundly, and some of them, it is averred, acquired such practice in the art of deception that they could even do all this and sleep—with their eyes wide open.

There is no doubt that the soup-houses which were in past Winters opened in this City relieved some cases of real destitution, but the evil they have done has far more than balanced all the good. They attracted here from all parts of the country those idle and dissolute persons, kept them in a condition of, for them, unbounded luxury, and established them as a permanent burden upon the community. The tramps who live here one Winter almost invariably return from their Summer jaunts to Winter here again. The same old faces are recognizable year after year. And what finally becomes of them? They die, of course; but where do they die? Generally if one does die his demise seems to be the result of an accident rather than an event in the course of nature. About the middle of November one who was drunk and had been refused lodging in three station-houses perched himself on the high stone coping of the Lower Reservoir, and managing to roll down thence to the pavement, cracked his skull and died. Another, who was attacked by heart disease, was carried out of a cheap lodging-house on Spring street and laid upon the street. The keeper of the lodging-house was not wishing to have the bother of his dying there. Two young men, finding him seemingly dying on the sidewalk, carried him to the door of the Fourteenth Precinct Station-house, and there left him and ran away, for fear that if he died they "might somehow get into the House of Detention as witnesses." The doorman of the station found him and took him inside. He died before he could be sent to the hospital. The hospital, by the way, is the bummer's Elysium. If he has the art to simulate fits he is an envied being among his fellows, for all he has to do at any time to win a week or two of princely fare, lodging, and laziness is to fall down upon the street and squirm in a few minutes. Then the doctors are liable to kick him out if they find him a fraud, but frauds on epilepsy are not always immediately discoverable, and, even at the worst, the chances are worth the taking.

All in all, the tramp is a very dirty and objectionable being, against whom two forces should be brought to bear, and kept at him until he is either exterminated or driven away. Make him wash himself and make him work. He will not stay long where he is so treated.

HEAD-MONEY ON IMMIGRANTS.

THE BILL RE-ESTABLISHING THE TAX ABOUT TO BE REPORTED IN CONGRESS—THE ATTITUDE OF THE STEAM-SHIP COMPANIES.

A dispatch from Washington yesterday announced that the Committee of the House of Representatives on Commerce was about to report the bill imposing upon alien passengers a tax of $2 per head. This bill was offered by the Commissioners of Emigration of this City, and was designed to affect all ports in the United States. It not only provides for the imposition of the head-money tax, but also empowers the authorities of the several States to compel the steam-ship or packet lines bringing paupers, convicts, or idiots to ports of the United States to return them to the ports from which they sailed. The bill was opposed by the steam-ship companies of this City and Boston, and was sustained before the Committee by Mr. John E. Devlin, counsel for the Commissioners of Emigration, and Mr. Jackson, the Secretary of the Emigration Board.

When asked for their opinions about the merits of the bill, and the demands of the Emigration Commissioners, and whether a conference of steam-ship companies was to be held to consider the probability of the passage of the bill, the agents of several lines said yesterday that the steam-ship companies had long ago waked up to the fact that there were measures afoot to reimpose the head-money abolished by decision of the Supreme Court. Mr. Oswald, of the Bremen Line, said he did not suppose the bill in its demand for power to send back to their old homes the poor and imbecile or crimin

The revelations before the Senate Committee in the Oregon case begin to be racy. Gov. GROVER, in his over-eagerness to shield his party and himself, inadvertently tells more than he can easily explain. He had no communication from New-York, he says, with regard to WATTS, and received no money. But opinions and hints, favorable to Mr. TILDEN'S claim, were showered upon him from quarters he knew and from quarters unknown, and there was a remarkable desire to enlighten him as to his duties and powers, on the part of Democratic Judges and lawyers of every degree. It is evident from GROVER'S admission, that in the first instance he was prepared to sign WATTS' certificate, and that the change which occurred in his mind resulted from the intervention of the Tildenite agents, at home and abroad. Of course, GROVER is innocent of all knowledge of the receipt of money from New-York to meet CRONIN'S expenses, or for any other purpose. What was actually raised was obtained from Democrats in Oregon. At least, so Gov. GROVER asks the committee to believe.

Another witness, however, shows either that Gov. GROVER has a poor memory or that he was kept in the dark upon the essential point of money. Mr. RUNYON, of the firm of MARTIN & RUNYON, of this City, testified that on the 6th December, his firm drew a certified check for $8,000 in favor of LADD & BUSH, of Portland, Oregon. At whose instance the check was drawn he declined to tell, although Senator KERNAN, as his legal adviser, recommended him to answer the inquiry. Mr. BURTON HARRISON, JEFFERSON DAVIS' ex-Secretary, on whom MARTIN & RUNYON had called with reference to their appearance before the committee, unwillingly shed a ray of light upon the subject by explaining that the mutual friend who had informed him of the call was Mr. W. T. PELTON, Secretary of the Democratic National Committee, and nephew and confidential agent of Mr. TILDEN. We are getting very near Gramercy Park. RUNYON'S refusal to state under whose instructions his firm remitted the $8,000 to Oregon is to be reported to the Senate, which may with great propriety use all its powers to exact the required information. The name ascertained and the transmission of the money established, the next inquiry will be, who got the $8,000, and what was done with it. By and by we shall know the inner history of the Oregon case.

Acting Vice President FERRY has discreetly abstained from any public expression of opinion touching the right or duty attaching to his office in the matter of counting the Electoral vote. It is therefore necessary to accept with some reservation any statement purporting to convey his views which has not his direct sanction. The most consistent, and withal the most probable, statement comes through the Washington correspondence of the Evening Post, as from "a perfectly trustworthy source." The substance of it is, that if the Senate and House agree as to the course to be pursued—in other words, if they adopt a joint rule which shall take the place of the lapsed twenty-second—he will act in accordance with its terms; that if no agreement of this kind be effected, he will open and count the votes of the States and declare the result. To this purpose no objection can be reasonably offered. It is an acknowledgment of all that is due to Congress as the law-making power, while it asserts the constitutional rule that the President of the Senate may, of his own right, dispose of the difficulty with which the country is threatened.

The memorial to Congress adopted by the Boston Board of Trade suggests the only rational plan to be pursued upon the silver question. Inquiry in regard to it having been declared desirable, it is clear that persons specially qualified should be intrusted with the investigation, and that they should confer with representatives of other Governments as to the international bearings of a silver basis. Nobody attributes to the committee, which acts under the guidance of a Nevada Senator, even average capacity for studying the complicated problem; and the labors of the committee are rendered of still less importance by the want of authority which distinguishes the "experts" who have been called in as aids and advisers. It is admitted, moreover, by the really able advocates of a double standard of value that no nation can alone attempt to remonetize silver with a fixed relation of value to gold, without incurring greater risks than prudent legislators would willingly encounter. Hence the wisdom of the Boston proposal, that a commission be appointed to unite with European Commissioners in a thorough examination of the subject. The conclusions of such a body would be entitled to a respect which the preconceived notions of Senator JONES' committee will never obtain.

If the New-Jersey Secretary, who is ex officio Insurance Commissioner for that State, desires his investigation of the affairs of one of its life insurance companies to have any value or to carry any weight, he will not allow the Directors to dictate by whom the professional part of the investigation shall be carried on. The question is, not who would be most agreeable to the managers of the company—for they would probably prefer no inquiry at all—but who is capable and trustworthy; and this point Mr. KELSEY must decide. There is need, we beg to remind him, of firmness and energy in the task he has undertaken. Politeness can be dispensed with if the more important requisites are there.

Police Commissioner NICHOLLS is reported to have explained the failure of the Street-cleaning Bureau to remove the snow from the streets, after the following fashion: "The fund for cleaning the streets is not applicable to the removal of snow, for which a special appropriation is needed. When the latter appropriation is exhausted or, as in the present case, has never been supplied, we must leave the snow alone, otherwise we should be liable to impeachment and imprisonment for diverting a fund voted for one purpose to another totally different." In other words, until snow has been reduced to slush and mud it cannot be said to dirty the street, and its removal cannot properly be designated street-cleaning. It would be difficult to imagine a finer example of official pettifogging than this defense of Commissioner NICHOLLS. That person must evidently be a curious compound of Dogberry and DUDLEY FIELD—a combination too rare and interesting to be thrown away upon any such position as that of head of the Street-cleaning Bureau. A more public sphere of usefulness must be found for Mr. NICHOLLS.

CONGRESS AND THE ELECTORAL COLLEGES.

The Constitution framers of 1787 first decided that the chief magistrate should be chosen by Congress. Subsequently, after mature deliberation, the evils of placing the Executive branch under the unlimited control of the Legislative branch of the Government having been pointed out, the Convention decided finally that Congress should have nothing to do with the selection of the head of the Executive Department in the first instance. The framers, after the fullest discussion, determined that the choice of a President should be placed in the hands of an entirely different body of men, so distinct from, and independent of, Congress, that no member of either house of Congress could ever become a member of an Electoral body. It was ordained that "each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct" the Presidential Electors, and all participation of the National Government in their appointment was so rigidly excluded that a State was prohibited from selecting any officer of the United States to take part in the choice of a President. The Democratic theory is that a member of Congress can do indirectly what he cannot do directly; that while he cannot vote himself as an Elector for President, he can make and unmake Electors at will, and accept or reject Electoral votes at discretion. In other words, the reformers of the Constitution claim that the framers adhered to their original proposition to leave the choice of the President to the National Legislature, and not to Electors appointed by the States. For it is palpably evident that if Congress, or one-half of Congress, can determine who shall be State Electors and who shall not be, whom it will recognize as such, and whose votes it will count and whose reject, Congress has as clear control of the election of the Executive as if the supreme law gave it the powers belonging to the Electoral bodies. To suppose that the framers in express terms excluded a member of Congress, that is to say, Congress, from ever casting a vote in the Electoral Colleges, and at the same time gave Congress the power to negative or cast out every vote in each College, is to suppose the framers men of feeble understandings.

We may safely presume that when HAMILTON, MADISON, WASHINGTON, FRANKLIN, RANDOLPH, and WILSON attempted to take the election of the Executive out of the hands and control of Congress, they succeeded. If they and their co-workers were able to make themselves intelligible, they placed the selection of a chief magistrate in the hands of totally independent constitutional bodies, which Congress could neither create, curtail, destroy, nor in any way control. From the use of the word "appoint" in the Constitution, it is evident that the framers contemplated the appointment of Presidential Electors by the Governors or the Legislatures of the States. If appointed directly by the State Legislatures, as was the case originally in many of the States, and as might be the case to-day, where does one house of Congress get the authority to review and revise the action of the State Legislature and determine who should or should not have been appointed as Electors of President or Vice President? As the Legislature of a State is made the sole judge of the "manner" in which State Electors shall be appointed, if a State has not exclusive control of this matter under the Constitution, it has control and jurisdiction over no subject or matter that the mind can conceive of. This rudimentary fact must be borne constantly in mind, that the Constitution places the election of a President in the hands of neither Congress nor the people, but in the hands of independent bodies or men appointed or created by the authorities of independent States. The proposition to elect the President by a direct vote of the people at large received in the Constitutional Convention the vote of one State—Pennsylvania. The motion to choose the Presidential Electors "by the people," instead of by the direction of the State Legislatures, received the vote of two States—Pennsylvania and Delaware. If an Elector for President has been appointed in the manner directed by the Legislature, and the fact of his appointment ascertained by the State authorities designated to ascertain the fact officially, all control over the Elector there ends, and neither Congress nor State Governors nor State Legislatures nor the people, nor all combined, can constitutionally prevent whatever vote the Elector sees fit to cast from being counted and recorded. The Constitution contemplates the possibility of each Elector voting for a different candidate. The best evidence of how he voted is his own certified statement and that of his colleagues. That he can be prohibited from voting at all, by a State Executive or Congress refusing to recognize or count his vote, was never contemplated as a constitutional possibility by the makers of our highest law.

Supposing, for argument's sake, that Congress has authority to count the Electoral vote, and that either house can reject Electoral votes at discretion, where is the remedy to the Electors or to the people if the Senate or House commits a gross injustice or great wrong? Neither house is disinterested—the one having the President and the other the Vice President to elect in a contingency they can control; and are interested umpires always just and impartial? The members of the House who were chiefly instrumental in electing Mr. JEFFERSON President were rewarded by that immaculate politician with the best offices at his disposal. If a decision of the House in so grave a matter as disfranchising entire States were notoriously venal and corrupt, can it be reached or punished? Does the Constitution contemplate wrongs without remedies?

On the other hand, suppose, what is the veritable fact, that the President of the Senate counts the votes cast by the Electors, and suppose he is guilty of corruptly discharging his sworn duty and refuses to count votes for President which have been legally and constitutionally certified and placed in his hands, a constitutional remedy for this wrong exists. The Vice President can be impeached and removed from office, and disqualification from ever after holding office, and other punishments, can be imposed. This is cumulative evidence that the fathers and founders understood what they were doing when they established the precedent, that the votes of Electors should be opened and counted by a responsible executive officer, and not by an irresponsible legislative assembly.

THE CONTINENT OF AUSTRALIA.

In view of the inter-colonial exhibition to be held in Sydney, April 10 next, the following facts, culled from the most trustworthy official authorities on Australia, may be found interesting. That largest island on the globe is about one-fifth smaller than Europe, and more than three times as large as India, its dimensions being 2,400 by 1,930 miles, with 8,000 miles of coast line. It extends over 28½° of latitude and 40° of longitude. Laid with its northern extremity touching this City, it would reach southward to South America, eastward to the further end of Nova Scotia, and westward to the further edge of Nebraska. Including the near-by island of Tasmania, or Van Diemen's Land, its area is about 3,000,000 square miles, about the same as that of the belt across this continent from ocean to ocean constituting the United States, excluding Alaska. The following shows some particulars as to the six colonies, including Tasmania, but omitting North Australia, which is yet almost unsettled:

New South Wales	356,430	584,378	474,957
Victoria	86,940	848,407	1,011,799
South Australia	325,000	204,881	1,330,484
Queensland	450,780	136,160	64,218
West Australia	978,000	27,371	45,292
Tasmania	22,629	104,176	326,486
Total	2,219,829	1,865,275	3,253,236

Settlement has merely skirted the eastern and southern coasts. A company of nine started to cross from east to west, thirty years ago, but disappeared, and repeated search failed to trace their route; since then explorations have been successfully pushed across in both directions, and the colony of South Australia, having then but 180,000 population, undertook and accomplished, in the two years ending Aug. 22, 1872, the daring feat of constructing a telegraph across the island from south to north, nearly 2,000 miles, importing and carrying by teams all materials used, in order to get a direct communication with England. Yet the interior is still nearly unknown, and some portions vie with inner Africa in interest and romance. Rivers, bays, and lakes are few, although the existence of a great inland lake is conjectured, and the hot winds blowing outward from the north and west indicate that the interior is a desert plain. But if a strip along the coast 250 miles wide, omitting the northern side, is taken as the habitable portion, this strip contains 785,000 square miles, and nearly equals the area covered by the twenty-six States of this Union lying east of the Mississippi; hence there is room enough, even if the interior, like some spots on the American belt, is found to be "bad lands."

Within the known area there is ample variety. The coast region has several high mountain ranges, with deep fissures, suggesting our own Western cañons. The three principal colonies are wholly, and the island itself about one-half, outside the tropics; New South Wales has the latitude of Georgia and the Carolinas, and Sydney that of Colombia. The products of both tropical and semi-tropical countries are claimed to thrive, and New South Wales produces also our Northern apple and its companion fruits. That colony sends her neighbors annually $200,000 worth of oranges, which particularly flourish around Sydney, and we read of trees 40 years old, 35 feet high, and of a spread of 100 feet, producing 12,000 oranges each. Victoria grows nearly everything which England does and in that colony, as stated in a succulent sentence, "the apple, pear, peach, nectarine, apricot, almond, gooseberry, currant, fig, cabbage, cauliflower, turnip, carrot, parsnip, asparagus, pea, bean, water-melon, rock-melon, and tomato may be seen all growing together in the same plot of ground, while the borders bloom with the fuchsias, geraniums, and other common flowers of the English garden." The average yield of wheat is seventeen bushels per acre, of oats, twenty-five bushels, and of barley, eighteen bushels; but fifty and sixty bushels of wheat are got, and the weight runs as high as sixty-nine pounds per bushel. The mineral resources of the island, chiefly in New South Wales and Victoria, are apparently inexhaustible; besides gold and silver, there are tin, copper, iron, lead, coal, and zinc, and also, as is claimed, abundant petroleum. The staple productions are gold, wool, and meats.

It so happened that the Australian gold discoveries and the consequent rush thither were almost exactly parallel in time with the similar occurrences in California. Up to 1875 the quantity exported (which does not fully cover the production) was $222,364,625 from New South Wales; $20,405,800 from Queensland; $89,055 from Tasmania, and $889,105,625 from Victoria, whose capital city, Melbourne, is familiarly known in connection with gold-seeking. New Zealand, 100,000 square miles in extent, and lying 1,200 miles to the south-east, is reckoned one of the Australian colonies, and exported $151,407,045 gold, up to June 30, 1875. Omitting it, however, as it is omitted in other statistics, the gold product, as measured by exports, was $1,131,965,105 up to 1875, against $905,356,572 in California during the 13 years, 1848 to 1860. Of New South Wales we read that gold has been found in the gizzards of fowls and picked up in the streets of Bathurst; it has been brought up by sounding-lines from the sea-bottom, off the coast; it has been even found glittering among the pebbles on the beach; but most of the product has been got, not in the alluvial fields, but in the quartz rock. As to coal, up to the end of 1871, (the last year for which returns are procurable,) the production in New South Wales was 9,816,693 tons, and the export was $18,951,115 in value. Tin was discovered in New South Wales in 1870 and its quality is reckoned high in the London market; the quantity received in Sydney in 1872 was 1,730 tons, of $616,370 in value. The following table contains sundry important details:

Australia has 1,000 miles of railroad and 19,000 miles of telegraph. The land under tillage is 3,253,236 acres, less than one-third that of the State of Ohio alone, twenty-five years ago; but Australia is eminently a pastoral country, having 47,000,000 sheep, against 27,000,000 in the United States. Her public debt, incurred mainly for railroads and public works, is $86 per head, against $52 per head in the United States. The revenue is $28 per head, against $7 in the United States. The imports and exports are $100 each per head, against $14 each in the United States, approximately. A population considerably less than one-half that of the State of New-York, occupying a territory as large as the United States, much of it never trodden by white men, have a commerce nearly one-third as great as that of our forty millions of people; measured per capita, the inhabitants of that extraordinary island pay four times as much to public revenue, and consume seven times as much of imported goods, as do the people of this country.

The commerce of Australia is mainly with Great Britain and with the other Australian colonies. The imports from Great Britain are about $75,000,000, and the exports about $68,000,000, the former consisting mainly of textile manufactures and iron. In New South-Wales ad valorem duties have been abolished. Victoria, Queensland, and South Australia have a long free-list, in which are steam-engines, and manufacturing, sewing, agricultural, and mining machinery; gutta-percha goods, kerosene, boots and shoes, skins, glass, hats, hardware, and a number of forms of manufactured iron. So far as the United States are concerned, Australia is still an unknown country, trade with it being almost nothing. Whether a profitable trade can be built up—the obvious condition thereto being the ability to compete with Great Britain—is a question we would not attempt to answer; but it may certainly be worth while for American merchants and manufacturers to look into the subject and to make something near as adequate a presentation of this country at Sydney next April as Australia made at Philadelphia last April.

"BETTER THAN NOTHING."

It is reported of the late Gen. W. F. BARTLETT, of Massachusetts, that he held to the opinion that the variety of literature known as "yellow-covered" was better than none; that it leads to something better. There is a homely New-England proverb which runs thus: "If you can't get butter, you must make salt pork do." The practical New-Englanders have usually accepted the spirit of this saying in art, literature, and in all that wide range of subjects which are called æsthetic. It has been thought better that a poor, uneducated man should have a cheap wood-cut pasted on his wall than none; better that there should be a pink plaster "Infant Samuel" on the mantel-piece than an iron candlestick. And at least one Boston Brahmin has noted as evidence of a blind groping after better things, that a villager had a hideous plaster vase of painted tomatoes and apples where there had been nothing before. Of course, all this is heresy, possibly of a ridiculous sort. Those who have an educated taste, and learning, and money wherewith to gratify the same, consider it monstrous that there should be a bad style in literature, low art, clumsy imitation of pure architecture, commonplace poetry, and such music as may be extracted from the humble accordion or vulgar banjo. These severe critics sternly say that it is better that there were none of these.

It is easy and comfortable for the disciples of high art to show their scorn for all that does not come up to their standard. It is fine to hear the satirical denunciation which the snobs in art launch upon the humblest beginnings. But poverty and ignorance have some rights. It is a creditable and a hopeful sign that out of their darkness the poor and ignorant reach for something better than the squalor and sordidness which have been their portion. There is no more apt occasion of the cheap delight on the one hand, and the thoughtless contempt on the other, than the chromo. Any true artist will say that it is better to have an oil painting than a chromo, or that a good engraving is a more admirable substitute for an original work than the much-derided chromo. To most highly-educated people, indeed, one cannot convey a more repulsive suggestion than that of the chromo. It is associated with cheapness and imitation—flaunting color and commonplaceness. Some impertinent person, too fine for this vulgar world, has invented the phrase "chromo-civilization." It is the silly suggestion of one who thinks that the civilization which cannot have GEROME, G. EASTMAN JOHNSON, or FREMIET, must have bare walls. The chromo and the plaster cast are vicious and vulgar.

In like manner some well-meaning but over-fastidious people have lamented the fact that the crowds of common people who went to the Centennial Exposition did not seem to appreciate high art. Is it therefore a melancholy thing that the art of Japan was stared at because it was grotesque, and that WINTERHALTER'S fashion-plate picture of the marriage of the Prince of Wales should have the greatest crowds before it in Memorial Hall? The critics do not seem to see that it is better so than that the "uncultured multitude," as these are superciliously called, should have utterly deserted the picture gallery and the bizarre show of Japan. It is true that the mass of the American people are not highly educated in art, music, and literature. It will be many years, many generations, before there can be any such thing as a popular appreciation of high art. In the meantime, we may be glad that people learn their letters and read yellow-covered literature, or that they blindly reach out for something to gratify their undeveloped love of art and buy chromos and heliotypes, or that the uncultivated ear is soothed with "The Devil's Dream" and "Roll on, Silver Moon," extracted from the painful chords of fiddle, flute, or accordion.

There was something pathetic in the sight of the half-educated pilgrims who thronged the Centennial Exhibition. It is true that most of these passed by the finest works of art without a look; that they regarded the Castellani collection as curious gew-gaws, and hung with delight over the meretricious beauties of painters who are not great artists. But it was better so than that these pilgrims should have found their highest joy with the glass-blowers, the washing-machines, or even "the butter woman" from California. When one considers how bare and naked is the life from which so many went to the Exposition, and how long a stop in their art-education they made at Philadelphia, there is reason for congratulation. It may be that much of their admiration was misdirected and unintelligent. This was better than nothing. It was an advance in refinement, though it may have left the Centennial pilgrim in the midst of crude color, bad drawing, and chromos.

If the impracticables had their way, they would replace the cheap wood-cut, the chromo, the newspaper novel, and the plaster "Infant Samuel," with DURER'S engravings, CHURCH'S canvas, DANTE, and copies from the Louvre. These or nothing. A severe censorship will tolerate no work which shall lead up from the barbaric art of a Chinook Indian to the master-pieces of the greatest painters and sculptors of the world. They refuse to recognize in art and literature any theory of development. The sign-painter, who delights his village admirers with his poor work; the village editor, whose logic limps and whose wit is cheap; the village poet, whose lines are faulty and whose sentiment is thin, are all objects of ridicule or execration to the apostle of high art. But these are better than none. It is better to read BUCKLE than SYLVANUS COBB, Jr.; better to form the taste on UNGER'S stchings than on STRONG'S valentines and "The Sailor's Adieu." But it is better to have these humble beginnings than nothing. It is a long way from the colored lithograph to the work of RAPHAEL MORGHEN. Let no man despise the intermediate steps.

VICTIMS OF WALL STREET.

Gambling, in one form or another, seems to be a universal passion. Many men who are virtually gamblers would be indignant and shocked to be called such, the name rather than the thing signified giving the offense. All speculation which departs from the legitimate and arrives at the reckless is as much gambling as playing at roulette or betting against faro. But, denominated business, it is associated with respectability and blunts the edge of criticism.

The desperate speculation of Wall street is, as everybody knows, gambling pure and simple, and the fact that it is often conducted on a vast scale adds to, instead of diminishing, its enormity. That it is gambling of the worst kind is shown by the passion it excites. No man of ordinary strength of mind and self-control can take several turns in stocks without being morally injured thereby. If he should make money, he wants to make more; if he should lose, he is determined to get back what he has lost. In either case, his mind is debauched; he is unfitted for the common method of converting industry into dollars. He cannot return to humdrum work after experiencing the seductive sensations of the Gold Room or Stock Exchange; it is like drinking water after long quaffing the finest brands of champagne. His natural taste is destroyed; he craves and demands a stimulant as artificial as it is dangerous. In other words, a few ventures in Wall street arouse the gambler's passion, and no amount of reasoning can quench or materially modify it. This passion is compounded of love of excitement and love of gain, with an incapacity of belief that the ill luck of to-day will not be repaired by the good luck of to-morrow.

How many examples there are of this financial infatuation! The victims of Wall street are not confined to the City or the State. They are scattered all over the Union. The fluctuations of the Exchange tear the American pocket from sea to sea, from Lake Superior to the Gulf of Mexico. For the most part, the resident Manhattanese are not to be pitied when they are gored by the bulls or torn by the bears. They have been long on the spot. They have means of judging soberly of cause and effect; they have had abundant opportunity to profit by the experiences of others. It is the out-of-town folk who seem to deserve commiseration, and yet it is doubtful if they really deserve it, on account of their imperfect vision, their excessive confidence, their overweening vanity. By the out-of-town folk we mean those who do not belong here, but are temporarily drawn hither by the fascinations of the Stock Exchange. Most of them are from the West, notably from Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul. Discontented with their narrower field at home, they come to the Metropolis, where their financial genius can expand; where big operations are the rule, and where big men, as they imagine themselves to be, find their proper place. They are unquestionably shrewd, energetic, and sagacious; but they seldom see Wall street in all its proportions and ramifications. They overrate their own power and foresight. They try and enter into open combat with the street; and while they are one, the street is many, and therefore they must be eventually overcome.

The courageous fellows rarely seem to understand the tremendous odds they are contending against—not in numbers only, but in capital. What hope have they, with their thousands, tens of thousands, or even hundreds of thousands, in opposition to combined millions? There are always old operators in the street who can draw their checks for millions, while the new adventurers cannot go beyond one or two hundreds of thousands. These may perceive the end; they may have forecast the result; but, unfortunately, they cannot hold on. The monetary tide goes down; they know it will rise again; but their strength has gone, and, falling, they are hurt irremediably. He who can buy outright, and hold, and wait, must be the final winner in the street; and he who is forced to sell, though he had purchased double-eagles at a discount, might be ruined, since it is not what a thing is worth, but what the market decides to be the rate.

One of the peculiarities of the smaller gamblers is that they invariably believe beyond wavering that they are more astute than their fellows. They acknowledge the perils of their pursuit; they admit that they walk amid pit-falls; that counselors are untrustworthy; that friends cannot be counted on. But they are wily. Other men are constantly failing. O yes; they admit this; but then some men are not like other men. Their faith in themselves is superlative; but bitter experience demonstrates ere long that their faith is sorrowfully misplaced.

Every year or two such ardent gamblers come to grief, and are succeeded by others equally ardent, equally sanguine, equally fated to win. Have you not met Smith, of Cincinnati, in Broad street, and inquired after Simpson, of the same city? "Poor Simpson," is his response; "they've cleaned him out. That last operation in St. Paul broke him flat. He's gone home to die in peace." "Where's Parker, of Louisville?" you may ask. "I haven't seen him for some time. Parker's gone up. He was a little too rash. He went heavily into Michigan Central; couldn't carry it, and had to succumb." "Wiggins, of St. Louis, is still bellowing with the bulls, I presume?" "Well, no; he isn't bellowing as much as he was. The fact is, he bought a big lot of Jersey Central at over par, and when it went down with a run Wiggins had to squat. Indeed, he's completely used up." "Robinson, of Chicago, still keeps on top, doesn't he? The last time I met him he told me he was worth at least a million." "Probably he was then; but that's seven or eight months ago. Lake Shore scooped him in. He lost all he had, and several hundred thousand more. He's gone to Colorado, and is trying to do something in silver-mining."

You may suggest to Smith, of Cincinnati, that since such a fate has overtaken Simpson, Parker, and Wiggins, he may not be quite safe himself. Smith laughs with the insolence of a full-blown pride as he says: "Never fear for me. I've had my eye-teeth cut; I know the street thoroughly; Wall street doesn't get up in the morning any earlier than I do. You can bet on me." Some months later, you encounter Brown, a near friend of Smith, and you ask affectionately after the Cincinnatian. "Smith, poor devil, they've got his scalp. A few weeks ago he was in Washington looking for a $1,500 clerkship."

So it goes with the confident gamesters in one continuous round of disaster. They exceed the Bourbons: they learn nothing and forget everything.

AN AFFAIR OF HONOR.

There is a villainous smell of gunpowder in the air. With two feet of snow on the ground, frost in the breeze, and the mercury hovering just above zero, one would think that men's passions might be cooled. But not even during the heated term of 1876 was there any such indication of febrile excitement. To paraphrase one of JOHN G. SAXE'S figures of speech, Mars comes up as Mercury goes down. Rumors of hostile meetings drift lazily through the clubs, and the gilded youth, with the usual spirit of adventure, bet heavily on the chances of a duel in the snow. In our Vanity Fair there are always odds to be given and taken in favor of somebody's doing a thing utterly ridiculous and fantastic. It is even possible for a man to call a meeting of his friends, a sort of board of experts, to decide whether or no he has been insulted. So highflown is the popular notion of honor that it requires grave deliberation to fix the line where a simple assault is merged into a deadly insult, which can only be washed out in blood. Or, to put it more accurately, it is necessary to say whether a Police Justice or a hostile meeting shall readjust the disturbed social balance. Nay, more, a man's life, or the risk of it, may hang on the construction of a word. If he used the Puritanic "darn," he may pass as a jester. If he used the blunt Anglo-Saxon "damn," he may not hold his life at a pin's fee. It is melancholy to think that one's chances for existence in this crowded and struggling world should ever hang upon one of four letters in a single word.

But when ROOT wrote to BARLOW, in reply to a curt demand for a certain legal document, that he, BARLOW, should not make a —— fool of himself, there was a world of peradventure in that word. We represent it by a dash because there is a horrible uncertainty as to what it really was. Like another illustrious person who has contemplated recourse to "the code," the aggrieved gentleman referred the matter to his friends. The word, which began and ended with a d, was voted to be "an offensive epithet." Some of the board of experts who acted as referees were of the opinion that "darned," as adjectively applied to "fool," was not strictly a fighting word. But if the adjective were spelled with an m instead of an r, the insult was studied, grave, and only eradicable by a deadly combat, or, what is quite to the same purpose, a show of deadly combat. The world ought to be grateful to these eminent legal lights for drawing this nice distinction. A man may be called a fool, or even a "darned" fool, with comparative impunity. That epithet is innocuous. But when the fool is described as "damned"—that is to say, condemned—a sensitive honor demands bloody reparation.

When BARLOW had taken counsel of his jury of experts, he demanded two things of ROOT: First, he must explicitly, and in intelligible characters, state exactly what the suspicious word really was; second, if it was "damned," and all that the word implies, he must withdraw it with a handsome apology. Failing to meet these two requisitions, he must go to Canada. And it is very well understood that people do not go to Canada at this time of year except to fight duels. The belligerent BARLOW further added, that if his well-nigh unintelligible correspondent remained inert and evasive, he must be prepared to be shot on sight. It is probable that a mediæval knight would have considered Mr. ROOT'S rejoinder to this as being an avoidance, if not an abject piece of shuffling. The high-toned terms of BARLOW were characterized as "dictation," and the proposition to lay him low on the floor of the referee's office was stigmatized as a threat of assassination. Has it come to this, that two honorable gentlemen cannot go to Canada and shoot at each other, in a perfectly friendly manner, without reference to manslaughter and homicide?

The painful part of this whole business, however, is that the original cause of hostilities has been lost sight of. In their eagerness to know just the proportions of BARLOW'S sanguinary joke, and the depth of ROOT'S terror, the public have forgotten to ask if it was a "darned" or a more strongly described fool in the case. It is evident that there will be no fight. The District Attorney has interfered in behalf of a despised Criminal Code. But it is due to the cause of public morals that Mr. ROOT shall formally declare whether he spelled the suspected adjective with an r or an m. If he were now looking down the barrel of the pistol of his learned brother (in the law) in the snows of Canada, instead of reading THE TIMES by his peaceful hot-air register, this morning, he would doubtless resolve that he would never call a man by a condemned adjective, nor write the harmless "darned" so that a wayfaring man, though a fool, should not read it at sight. Meantime, for the sake of precedent, so dear to all lawyers, it is necessary that there be a clear legal opinion as to the responsibility in this vexed case. If dueling is to be the fashionable amusement this winter, let us know if the rawhide and the "darn" are to be causes of war.

THE EMIGRATION COMMISSION.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The paragraphs in regard to the Commissioners of Emigration which make part of every Governor's message, and which are invariably recommendations to give them more money, are, it is well known, either written at or inspired from Castle Garden. The reference in Gov. Robinson's Message seems to be no exception. So much at least is to be hoped for the sake of his reputation as a student of the laws which he is sworn administer. The Message says:

"Out of the moneys heretofore collected by the Commissioners of Emigration, as agents of the State, the public faith is pledged to provide for all emigrants—in behalf of whom contributions to the fund were made—who may need assistance within five years from the date of their arrival."

If Gov. Robinson had taken the trouble to look at the Laws of 1873, chapter 392, section 4, he would have found that "the Commissioners of Emigration shall not be required to support any person capable of earning a livelihood for a longer period than two years." And everybody who knows anything of the way things are done on Ward's Island knows that this class being weeded out, the proportion of emigrants kept and coddled there at the expense of the State would be very much smaller than the Commissioners see fit to make it. As for the public faith being pledged in the matter, that is a ridiculous fallacy which the Commissioners have industriously promulgated for years, and which it is their interest to keep up. It is of a piece with the other absurdity in the Message that the practice has been to accept in lieu of the bond (a bond, be it observed, exacted from the ship-owner) "a certain sum in cash from each passenger, which money constituted the revenue of the commission."

The fact is that the ship-owner always paid the commutation, as the ship-owner would otherwise have had to give the bond, and it the amount of the head-money was paid indirectly by the emigrant as the price of his passage, it entered into and made part of that price just as, and no more or less than, any other expense of the voyage. So at Boston; so at Baltimore. The public faith had nothing to do with the matter at all. The law said to the ship-owner, "If you land a certain class of passengers at this port you must bind yourself that they shan't be a charge on the people of this State, or you must pay to the agents of the State $1 or $2 a head for them." The law was plainly unconstitutional, and it has, at the very first opportunity, been so declared by the highest judicial authority in the land. If the public faith is pledged to anything in the premises, it is pledged to return the moneys so illegally extorted.

As for the Commissioners of Emigration, their day of usefulness has plainly gone by. An inclosed landing depot and an expenditure of $25,000 a year would fully meet all the necessities of the present immigration to this port, now not one quarter of what it was formerly, yearly diminishing, and yearly improving in quality and health. The County authorities could well take care of the few cases needing assistance, and the transfer to them of the buildings on Ward's Island would fully repay them for the slight trouble and expense so incurred. The Emigration Commission is a cumbrous and costly anachronism, and if Gov. Robinson had carefully examined its history, and the legislation in regard to it, he would have shown his wisdom by recommending its abolition. DACE.

A SOUTHERN WAR STORY.

The Savannah (Ga.) News says: "Everybody has heard of the Georgian named Godwin, who received 13 bullets in his clothing during the war, yet was unhurt. Mr. John M. F. Erwin, of Greenwood, Fla., says this is a fact, compared with which the Georgian's adventure was a trifle: 'A Florida Lieutenant at Petersburg, in 1864, got 17 bullet-holes through his coat in one day, yet was unhurt. He was going to the rear, quick time, coat folded under his arm, when a sharpshooter took a hand in him.'"

SUFFERING AT SEA.

FIFTEEN DAYS ON A WATER-LOGGED SCHOONER.

THE SUFFERING OF THE CREW OF THE SCHOONER SCOTIA OFF NEWFOUNDLAND —THE VESSEL AT THE MERCY OF THE RAGING ELEMENTS FOR FIFTEEN DAYS —HEARTLESS CONDUCT OF THE OFFICERS OF A STEAM-SHIP—THE UNLUCKY CREW FINALLY RESCUED BY THE ANCHORIA.

The steam-ship Anchoria, of the Anchor line, from Glasgow, arrived at this port yesterday morning, bringing as passengers the Captain and crew of the wrecked schooner Scotia, rescued on Dec. 21, in latitude 44° 42', longitude 52° 13'. The Scotia was from St. John's, Newfoundland, bound for Catolina, Newfoundland, with a general cargo of provisions, lumber, &c., The schooner was owned by Capt. George Reed, who commanded her, and the total loss will fall upon him. The Scotia was of 45 tons burden, and was built at Trinity Bay, on Smith's Sound, about nine years ago. She hailed from Catolina, and was a strong, well-built schooner, fore and aft rigged, and engaged in the coasting trade. The vessel was insured in the "Bruzger Insurance Schems," of Newfoundland, for £270, and was valued at £350. The Scotia left St. Johns on Dec. 16, with a full cargo, bound as before stated for Catolina. The distance is only about 63 miles. Soon after leaving St. John's the schooner encountered a very heavy gale, blowing from the north-east. Captain Reed and his crew strove by every means in their power to bring her about and put her head to the wind, but despite all their efforts she was blown ont to sea, and her stavsail and mainsail carried away, although the latter was double-reefed. The weather at this time was extremely cold, and as wave after wave broke over the little schooner, soaking the sailors to the skin, their wet garments froze, and they were soon in a pitiable condition, their hands, feet, and ears being frozen. The little craft drifted at the mercy of the wind and waves for three days, the gale changing to due north in the meantime, and increasing in violence. The vessel by this time resembled an iceberg more than anything else, the ice being three feet thick forward and about a foot thick aft. The masts and cordage were also enveloped with a heavy coating of ice, the weight of which made her sink very deep in the water and exposed the crew to the full fury of the sea. The crew were continually drenched to the skin, and, as they had no change of garments, they had to use an axe to break the constantly accumulating ice on their clothing, which impeded their working at the pumps. The men kept bravely at work, however, until the pumps became choked with ice and had to be abandoned. Then all hope seemed to be gone. The schooner was now 180 miles from land, and leaking badly. Gaping seams had been opened by the sea in her sides and on deck, through which great volumes of water poured. The cabin was filled with water to the depth of two feet, and prevented the keeping of a fire. The provisions were ruined by water, and the men were obliged to live on sugar and hard bread with a "daily allowance of a pint" of water per day for each man. The schooner was buffeted about by the winds and waves until the 20th or 21st, when the gale changed to the southeast and she began to drift toward the Newfoundland coast. The men's spirit began to rise and their flagging courage once more strengthened by the faint hope that they might be washed ashore. As night closed around them, and as the horrors accompanying a dismantled vessel at sea, completely encrusted with ice, without rudder or compass to guide or direct its course, and subject to the mad fury of the waves, dawned upon their benumbed minds, they gave up the last faint hope of being saved, and huddled together in the cabin to await their almost inevitable fate. A watch was kept, however, and the signal of distress was still flying at the mast head. The next morning hopes were again raised, as the lookout sighted a sail crossing the schooner's starboard quarter. The crew all rushed on deck, frantically waving their hands, and shouting to attract the attention of the passing steamer; for such she appeared to be. She apparently saw the signal of distress, for she bore hard down and hove to. The men made every effort to get her to understand that they were in great distress and needed assistance. She was so close that they could distinctly see the officers on the bridge using their glasses. Notwithstanding all attempts to convey to those stationed on the bridge the utter helplessness of the Scotia's crew, the steamer suddenly hoisted sail and bore away to the south-east. The men called on God to curse the man who could thus heartlessly desert his "mates" at such a time and under such circumstances. It seemed as though they would go raving mad in their wild endeavor to bring back by yells and shrieks the vessel that was now almost invisible. The men had now become satisfied that their fate was sealed. For ten days longer the Scotia drifted, the weather never moderating nor the gale abating. Three days before they were reached the men became perfectly exhausted. Their clothes had been constantly wet for a period of fifteen days. By this constant exposure their hands, feet, and ears had become frozen, and various parts of their bodies were severely frostbitten. Two of the men were laid up and unable to stir, and have not yet recovered. On Dec. 31, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the steamer Anchoria hove in sight. She saw the signal of distress and the Captain sent a boat to the rescue. The sea at this time was running very high and was making a clean sweep over the schooner, and the men became frightened lest the boat should not be able to reach them in time. The Scotia was rolling so heavily that the boat could not go very close to them, but getting under the schooner's lee the men jumped a distance of about six feet to the boat. Each man successfully accomplished the feat, and in a few moments they were all safe on board the Anchoria. After a few days rest the crew will be forwarded to St. Johns, and thence to their homes in Catoing. Capt. Reed says he cannot speak too highly of the kindly conduct of the officers of the steamer, which left them in their dire distress, as they undoubtedly knew the condition of the Scotia, for they came almost within speaking distance, and then sailed away, leaving them to their fate. The steamer was a screw propeller, brig rigged, with two masts, and not quite as large as the Anchoria. When last seen she was headed west by south-west, and in addition to having all her sails set was under a full head of steam, as though endeavoring to get out of the way of any craft that should chance to come in sight. The crew of the Scotia were unable to make out the name of the steamer, as they had no glasses and the sea was running very high at the time. The Scotia was so water-logged at the time the Anchoria rescued the crew that all hope of saving her was abandoned, and she was left to her fate. The following are the names of the Captain and crew: Captain, Gorge Reed; mate, William Reed; seamen, Joseph Cornender, William Gudger, M. A. Dalton, and William Steed.

DAMAGED VESSELS AT BERMUDA.

A LARGE NUMBER OF VESSELS IN DISTRESS FIND REFUGE IN THE HARBOR OF BERMUDA—ARRIVAL OF CREWS OF WRECKED VESSELS AT THIS PORT.

The steam-ship Alhambra, seven days out from Bermuda, arrived here yesterday. She reports that her voyage was made perilous by a succession of severe gales. She brings 39 passengers, of whom 19 belonged to vessels that were crippled by the late storms, and driven or towed into Bermuda. That West India port, it would appear, is now the refuge of more distressed craft than were ever before in any harbor at one time. The marine railway there is in continual use, and about a dozen vessels are now waiting their turn to be put upon it for repair. Several vessels that put into Bermuda within the last month were so badly damaged that they were abandoned and sold at auction, to be broken up. Most of the 19 distressed seamen who have been brought to this port by the Alhambra belonged to the American schooner Georgie Staples, and the brig Geo. S. Berry and the French bark Misti. The experience of the schooner Georgie Staples, in the storms that have raged at sea almost without cessation since the middle of November, was peculiarly bitter. That vessel sailed from Brunswick, Ga., for this port, about the middle of November, with a load of lumber. She encountered strong winds daily, but crept up the coast without meeting with any mishap greater than the loss of a sail. As she approached this port, however, the winds became stronger, and she began to labor heavily. A particularly strong "blow" came up, and the schooner was driven off the land to the south-east. In this gale she lost her suit of sails and was otherwise damaged. She drifted at the mercy of the elements. Only the buoyancy of one of her cargo prevented her from foundering. While she was thus drifting her boats were stove in, and the crew were left without the hope of saving themselves if the schooner should go to pieces. Worse than this, there came before them the prospect of starvation. Their provisions had begun to fail in the latter days of November, and on Dec. 1 were wholly gone. Nothing was left with which to sustain life but some flax-seed, of which tea was made and some slush. For 20 days the crew barely kept themselves alive; day by day, they became weak, and soon some of them became unable to move. After being blown off shore five times, the schooner was borne to the south, and struck on a reef to the north-west of Bermuda. There she bilged and filled, but did not sink. Her condition was observed from the island and her crew rescued by small boats. They were in a pitiable plight, and could not have survived much more suffering. After they had been cared for, the schooner was got off the reef, and on Dec. 20 was taken into Great Sound, Bermuda, and anchored. She is there at the present time, and it is believed that her damages can be repaired.

The French bark Misti, Capt. Rigaeau, was towed into Bermuda Dec. 21, by Her Majesty's steamer Spitfire. The bark had been at sea many days, having left Iloilo for New-York on June 30. She beat up against fierce storms, and on Nov. 30 was only 200 miles off Sandy Hook. She was then in a disabled condition, having had her rails blown away and her boats stove in and timbers strained. She leaked and no command over her was had by the crew. In this state she met the gale of the last day of November, which threw her on her beam-ends, snapped her mainmast, and sprung her rudder. She was carried to the south by the storm, and her running and standing gear, and every bit of her canvas, were destroyed. Her mainmast was again broken, and her water-ways were opened by the continuous beating of the waves. The crew had almost given up hope of ever seeing land again, when their vessel was approached by the war-steamer Spitfire, and preparations were made to tow her into Bermuda.

The schooner Jonas Smith, from Wiscasset for Havana, put into Bermuda on Dec. 28, in distress, leaking badly and otherwise damaged. She had been 16 days out.

The schooner Frederick J. Collins, from Carthagena for this port, entered the harbor of Bermuda with her main boom broken and other damages, on Dec. 19. Her crew were greatly distressed by a lack of provisions which had existed for several days.

The British bark Modists, from the Western Islands for New-Bedford, laden with sperm oil, anchored in Castle Harbor, Bermuda, Dec. 18. She was leaking badly, and is now unloading for repairs.

The schooner Nancy Smith, from Rio Janiero to New-York, put into Bermuda, Dec. 15; the Fred Gray, from Turk's Island for Boston, and the Breadnaught, from Jeremie for New-York, two days later. All were leaking badly and had lost sails. The bark Atlantic, (Guadaloupe to New-York) also arrived there in a distressed state on Dec. 15.

THE MAY-BENNETT TROUBLE.

A DUEL TO BE FOUGHT PROBABLY IN CANADA—THE LATEST PARTICULARS OF THE CASE.

There is no longer room to doubt that the trouble of last Wednesday afternoon, between Messrs. May and Bennett will be supplemented by a duel, and sealed with the blood if not the life of one or both the antagonists. Indeed it is by no means certain that a duel has not already taken place between the respective parties. Mr. May and Mr. Bennett have both left town, and the friends of each party declare that a hostile meeting is the object of their departure. As has previously been announced in these columns, Mr. Bennett called about him a number of his most intimate friends the evening after the encounter in front of the Union Club, and consulted them as to the course he should pursue, previously announcing, however, his determination to fight. There was, of course, a division of opinion upon the subject, but the majority held that their friend "must demand satisfaction" of Mr. May. Accordingly, Mr. Bennett sent for his lawyer, Mr. John Townshend, made out his will and departed with a friend the next day, going East. He was seen in Hartford, and one gentleman asserts that he passed him on Beacon street, Boston, on Thursday night. It is supposed by many that he left Boston on the Olympus, which sailed yesterday for Europe, intending to meet Mr. May, who was, it is said, to sail for Bremen by the Oder, somewhere in Belgium. It is more than likely, however, that Canada has been his destination, and that the meeting will be had somewhere in the Dominion. Mr. Bennett was accompanied by a friend, believed to be Gen. Richard Taylor, of Baltimore. Mr. May took his departure Friday evening, carrying a light traveling-bag, and being accompanied by his cousin, Mr. Frederick May, of Baltimore. Whither he went is known only to a few of his friends, who positively refuse to say a word upon the subject. A reporter of THE TIMES called at Mr. May's residence last evening and had an interview with his father, Dr. Frederick May. The old gentleman was very much agitated, and at first declined to converse upon the subject of his son's whereabouts, but subsequently stated that he had left home the previous evening. The doctor had evidently been weeping and his nervous depression and tremulous voice told but too plainly the solicitude he felt for his son.

BOSTON, Jan. 6.—The report that James Gordon Bennett sailed in steamer Olympus for Liverpool to-day, is unfounded.

OBITUARY.

RASMUS WINTHER.

A dispatch from Paris announces the death of Rasmus Villads Christian Ferdinand Winther, the celebrated Danish poet. The deceased was born July 29, 1796, at Fensmark, Zealand. The son of a minister, he lost his father at the age of 12, and was brought up under the guardianship of his step-father, Bishop Rasmus Moeller. His education was completed by travel. He visited Italy, carefully studying that country. After his return he led a retired life till 1841, when he was charged with the education of the Princess Caroline of Mecklenbourg, the fiancée of the hereditary Prince. Mr. Winther was regarded as one of the greatest poets Denmark has produced. One of his first attempts was a students' song, which was immediately received by them with the greatest enthusiasm. For a long time his poetic spirit was confined to the reviews and some small collections. In 1828 he published in one volume his first poems. Various other collections, published under the titles of Nogle Digte, or Some Poems, Songs and Traditions, Sketches, &c., bear witness to the fecundity of the poet and the favor of the public. In the way of romance Mr. Winther wrote two volumes, entitled Trois Récits and Quatre Nouvelles, which were several times translated into the German. He did not deem it unworthy to write some simple works for the amusement and instruction of children, works intended not so much to add to his reputation as to be useful. Mr. Winther was not only a master of the Danish language and versification, but he improved these. By his profound study of Italian literature he acquired greater richness of expression, without losing in style any of the national characteristics. He treated all varieties of lyric poetry, the ode, the idyl, the elegy, the song, and the ballad. To poetical he added scholarly works, such as a Dictionary of the Idioms of the Laaland Islands, a Hundred Stories of Danish Poets, Heroic Songs, &c. He wrote a poem entitled Judith in German, and translated several Danish works into that language. He also translated romances, fables, and theological treatises from German and French into Danish. In this, as in his other productions, he met with rare success, many of his translations having been reprinted. The large number of extended public comments upon Mr. Winther in Danish, in German, and in the Swedish tongue, and the character and importance of the critical and analytical articles devoted to his works, attest his popularity as a poet. In 1851, to give him some expression of the public admiration, Mr. Winther was voted an annual pension by his nation.

GEN. J. J. ABERCROMBIE, U. S. A.

The United States Army has lost one of its most venerable and best-known officers, in Brevet Brig. Gen. J. J. Abercromoie, who died at his residence, Roslyn, Long Island, at 2 o'clock P. M. on the 3d instant, aged 73. Gen. Abercrombie was graduated at West Point in 1822, and entered the service as Brevet Second Lieutenant, First United States Infantry. During the early Indian wars of the country, and particularly in the Mexican war, he served with distinction, and when the war of the rebellion broke out, although a native of the State of Tennessee, the sword of the sturdy old soldier was found on the side of the Union, and his patriotism was manifested in a zealous and efficient service of his country, in which he was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General of Volunteers, serving chiefly in the Army of the Potomac, and upon the close of the war he was retired with the rank of Brevet Brigadier General. He was distinguished for his genial manner and social qualities, and as a member of the military order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, of which he was an officer, he will long be remembered as one of its most constant attendants and beloved associates. Until within the past few weeks he had enjoyed more than ordinary good health, but was suddenly overtaken with a tumor upon the neck, which soon assumed an aggravated form, and terminated his existence on the 3d inst. His funeral will take place at his residence at 1 o'clock P. M. on Monday.

REV. RICHARD COBBOLD.

A dispatch from London announces the death of Rev. Richard Cobbold. The deceased was born in Suffolk in 1797, and was educated at Cain's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B. A. in 1820, and M. A. in 1823. In 1826 he was preferred to the Rectory of Wortham. Rural Dean of Hartismere, Suffolk. He was the author of several books of a religious character, and of some poems, and had written works of fiction based on facts.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

TURKEY STILL DEFIES THE RUSSIANS—FAILURE OF THE LATTER'S MOBILIZATION SCHEME — THE CONFERENCE POWERS UNABLE TO CONVERT THE SULTAN TO THEIR WAY OF THINKING —GOOD ADVICE REJECTED.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The Pera correspondent of the Times, heretofore strongly anti-Turkish and pro-Russian, writes under date of Jan. 1: "I am still of the opinion that the Turks will ultimately give in, but there is no doubt that the great trump card, intended to be played as a last resource—that of declaration of war by Russia—has suddenly turned out to be no trump at all, for everything in the attitude of the St. Petersburg Cabinet and the conduct of Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Plenipotentiary here, contributes to confirm the belief that Russia is afraid to go to war. The Russian Ambassador, in fact, throws out clear hints that the affair could only be settled by joint European execution, thus reverting to the proposal made by the Czar two months ago. The Turks have not failed to perceive the advantage accruing to their cause from this irresolution of Russia and Europe, and are not unlikely to continue unmanageable and stubborn as long as they can flatter themselves that the Conference will break up without any other result than leaving them masters of the situation."

A dispatch from Constantinople, dated Friday evening, says: "The situation is unchanged. Negotiations continue among the Plenipotentiaries and between them and the Turks, with a view of inducing the Turks not to formally refuse certain of the formulated proposals, which, however, the Plenipotentiaries appear disposed to modify somewhat from their original shape. It is hoped that the discussion of these proposals will be resumed at Monday's sitting of the Conference."

The Pall Mall Gazette of this afternoon, in an editorial note says the telegrams and news letters about the conference, the attitude of the Turks, and the disposition of the Russians, only deepen the obscurities of the whole question. It seems doubtful whether at any time more uncertainty or confusion has prevailed than at this moment. It is clear that the committee of foreign statesmen assembled in Constantinople has itself fallen into much disorder, and that if the Turks are only resolute enough at this hour, and are thereafter truly solicitous and speedy in establishing the reforms of their own new Constitution, they may boast of having defeated and silenced all Europe.

A dispatch from Semlin says: "It is expected that an exchange of prisoners between Servia and Turkey will take place shortly. The report that Gen. Nikitin has been recalled to Russia by order of the Czar is not confirmed up to the present time."

The Globe this afternoon states that Russia has ordered 14 Krupp 11-inch guns for Cronstadt.

A second dispatch from Semlin says a considerable force of Circassians and Bashi-Bazouks advanced against Negotin on Jan. 2, and were repulsed by the garrison and some Cossacks from Kladowa. According to information received at the Servian Head-quarters, 35 Cossacks and 111 Turks were killed. As a fresh attack is apprehended, Kladowa is being fortified.

FOREIGN BUSINESS AFFAIRS.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The Stock Exchange has been sensitive during the week, prices fluctuating according to the character of the news from the East. The tendency of discount was downward; best three months bills were taken at 1¼ to 1½ per cent. The demand was only moderate, and an abundant supply of money was offered, which will doubtless be augmented by the distribution of dividends on the funds at the Bank of England to-day. Consols advanced 7-16. The changes in English railways were insignificant. Canadians advanced slightly. In the foreign market fluctuations were wide. Russian, Turkish, and Hungarian improved ½ to 2 per cent. Argentine, French, and Egyptian are lower. American governments have been very strong. The various loans are ¼ to ½ higher. Railways have also improved. Illinois are 4 better and Erie descriptions ¼ to 1½ better.

In the Mincing Lane markets, during the week, the changes were few and the tone steady. Coffee is higher. Some plantation Ceylon, new crop, sold at an advance of three shillings per cwt. Yesterday's public sales consisted chiefly of old crop. Plantation Ceylon was in good demand. The stock of coffee in Europe Jan. 1, 1877, was about 40,000 tons less than the same date last year. For tea there is rather more inquiry, but transactions are moderate. Sugar is flatter. Sales cannot, in many cases, be made without a reduction of one shilling per cwt., which was accepted for some crystallized Demerara at auction yesterday. Speculation in low brown sorts has subsided. Rice is firm. Spices are steady, partly influenced by speculation, and quotations are rather low compared with former years. Black pepper is firm; the stock of white is much reduced. Saltpetre is in demand, closing rather dearer.

PARIS, Jan. 6.—The largest sugar refinery of Nantes has stopped work for want of raw material. Many other houses have discharged their workmen.

THE BILLIARD CHAMPIONS.

PARIS, Jan. 6.—Judgment has been delivered in the case of Maurice Vignaux, the billiard player, against William Sexton, the American billiardist. Vignaux seized Sexton's billiard table and brought action against him. The tribunal decided that Vignaux was not justified in seizing Sexton's table and demanding payment of his expenses, and therefore condemned Vignaux to pay one hundred francs fine and costs.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7—1 A. M.—In the Middle States and Lower Lake region, falling barometer, north-east to south-east winds and warmer, rainy weather, partly turning into snow in the northern portions, followed by rising barometer, winds shifting to westerly or north-west in the former, and clearing weather, and in the latter falling temperature.

For New-England, falling barometer, increasing easterly to southerly winds, warmer, rainy weather, partly turning into snow, succeeded during the afternoon and night by rising barometer, westerly winds and partly cloudy weather.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

A fire resulting in loss of life broke out in the Everson House, in Passaic, N. J., early yesterday morning. The flames are thought to have originated in the kitchen, but from what cause is not known. They spread with great rapidity, and though an alarm was at once sounded and water was thrown upon the burning building, the flames were not extinguished till the building had been destroyed. The loss is estimated at $10,000, upon which the insurance is only partial. In one of the rooms of the upper part of the building, lay the bedridden mother of Mr. Carman, the proprietor of the establishment. Before help reached her, the flames had cut off every avenue of approach and she was burned to death. She was 90 years of age and the mother of Judge Carman, of Bloomfield.

Mechanics' Hall, Stanhope, N. J., was burned to the ground on Friday night. John A. Quick & Co., who occupied the lower floor as a tin and coal store, lost $3,000 in stock; insured for $1,500. The building was owned by Abram L. Clark, whose loss is $7,000; insured for $4,000.

William H. Criss's dry goods store and dwelling at Washingtonville, Orange County, N. Y., together with their contents, were totally destroyed by fire early yesterday morning. The insurance is $10,000.

The main building of the Ohio Bolt Works Company at Columbus was totally destroyed by fire last night. Loss between $30,000 and $40,000; insurance small.

AMUSEMENTS.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

THOMAS' SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

In spite of the storm, Mr. Thomas' third symphony concert, which took place at Steinway Hall last evening, attracted an overflowing audience. The programme, though quite as substantial, was scarcely as varied as usual. It included two symphonies—Mozart's G minor and Schumann's symphony in E flat, Hargiel's "Medea" overture, and a series of four movements for string orchestra, by Gade, called "Novelletten." Gade's composition was the only new element among the selections. It consists of an andantino, a scherzo, an andantino con moto, and an allegro vivace. The themes of "Novelletten" are tuneful and their treatment is dainty, but the work does not rise above the dignity of a succession of pretty intermezzi, without marked characteristics in respect of form, melody, or color. The symphony in G minor was admirably played in point of spirit and finish, but the feature of the concert, after all, was the performance of Schumann's fine symphony, which is somewhat less fairly proportioned than a worshiper of symmetry could wish, but which abounds, especially in its first three divisions—the vivace, the moderato and the andante—in fresh and melodious ideas, and the scoring of which has a wholesome muscularity second only to that of Beethoven's writings.

LOCAL AFFAIRS.

A concert complimentary to Miss Thursby occurs at Chickering Hall, on Thursday evening.

The San Francisco Minstrels offer their habitual entertainment at their Broadway Opera-house.

Mr. Joseph H. Keane will act in "Rip Van Winkle" at the new Broadway Theatre throughout this week.

Miss Lotta will appear in "Zip" at the Park Theatre, to-morrow evening. "Zip" is another drama from the pen of Mr. F. Marsden.

"Azurine" is to be represented at Niblo's Theatre throughout this week. Mlle. Letournier, Gaugain, and De Rosa lead the dance in the spectacle.

The steady prosperity of the Aquarium is the single fact to be mentioned, this week, in connection with this instructive and attractive place of resort.

"Dan'l Druce" is announced for nightly repetition at Booth's Theatre. It will remain upon the programme until "Fifth Avenue," Mr. Rowe's new drama, is in readiness. The first representation of "Fifth Avenue" is expected to occur on Feb. 5.

The equestrian sports which have gratified the frequenters of Gilmore's Garden during the last week just ended, are to be continued. Trotting matches, a Roman chariot race, and a mule race are among the attractions of to-morrow's programme.

Mr. Heller announces nightly entertainments of diablerie until further notice. Miss Heller still assists her brother in amusing and astonishing the frequenters of the Wonder Theatre, and the performance of Mr. Punch rounds off each representation.

The season of French opera bouffe at the Lyceum Theatre will begin toward Feb. 3. The numerous friends of Mr. Maurice Grau will be glad to learn that he is directing the affairs of the Aimée troupe in New-Orleans, with excellent material as well as artistic results.

Mr. Booth will appear in "King Lear" at the Lyceum Theatre to-morrow evening. The tragedy will be repeated on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Saturday nights. On Thursday and Friday evenings, Mr. Booth will appear in "Ruy Blas" and "The Taming of the Shrew," and, at the Saturday matinée, he is to personate Shylock.

The second run of "The Shaughraun" at Wallack's Theatre terminated last evening, and, to-morrow, "Forbidden Fruit" will be reproduced. It is intended that Mr. Boucicault's comedy, which will be revived with its original cast of characters, shall be kept upon the boards for a fortnight, at the expiration of which period "All for Her," in which Mr. Lester Wallack is to act, will be brought out.

"The American" will be withdrawn from the stage of the Fifth Avenue Theatre after Friday's representation; but a few opportunities, therefore, remain to witness a very curious play, and, in addition to an effective general performance, a personation of great originality and force: that of the Duke de Septmonts, by Mr. Coghlan. Next Saturday afternoon and evening, "The Lady of Lyons," with Miss Davenport as Pauline, and Mr. Coghlan as Claude, will be played, and, later on, a new drama, adapted from the German, by Mr. Daly, and entitled "Lemons; or, Wedlock for Seven" is to be made known.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The "Walkyrie," of Wagner, is promised at the Vienna Opera.

M. Faure has returned to Paris from his tour in the French Provinces.

Mme. Carvalho has been re-engaged for two years at the French Opera.

Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" has been brought out at the Alhambra, in London.

Mme. Nilsson sings at Vienna in January, Mme. Patti in March and April, and Mme. Lucca in May.

According to the Musikaltsches Wochenblatt, the Viceroy of Egypt has granted a subvention of £60,000 to the Cairo Opera-house.

Liszt may play the "Emperor" concerto and the "Choral Fantasia," of Beethoven, at a benefit concert at Vienna, in aid of the Beethoven monument fund.

The bust of Felicien David, by M. Matabon, has just been placed in the crush-room of the Paris Opera. The work is a fine one, and does honor to the sculptor.

The "Alcestis," of Euripides, with choruses and illustrative music by Mr. Henry Gadsby, has been brought out—in the vernacular, of course—at the Crystal Palace, in London.

A performance for the benefit of Mr. Compton is being arranged in London. This admirable comedian has been obliged, after many years' valuable service upon the stage, to give up all hope of resuming his profession. For a long time back he has been suffering from a most painful and, it is feared, incurable disease.

Signorina Antonini is the name of a foreign lady of distinction, who was to give dramatic readings and recitals, in five different languages, on the 21st and 23d of December, at St. George's Hall, in London. The lady is a native of Portugal, but possesses a cosmopolitan education, and speaks fluently most of the languages of Europe.

When the Crystal Palace authorities in London wrote some time ago to the Abbé Liszt to inquire which particular composition he wished to select for performance at the Palace, the Abbé replied to the effect that he did not care to have any work of his played in England, but that if he were particularly desired to select one, they might have his "Mazeppa," which had then recently failed at the Gewandhaus Concerts of Leipsig.

At Exeter Hall, in London, in the course of the performance, there are open for purposes of ingress and egress but three city doors, through each of which two people cannot pass abreast, and which all culminate in one passage. As Exeter Hall holds over 2,000 persons, and as it takes in the ordinary course well-nigh 20 minutes to empty it, people can picture to themselves the consequences of a fire, or of an alarm of fire. It is true there are the large doors which open on to an exceedingly steep flight of stone steps, but these doors are, during the performance, always locked, and, as a matter of course, no one at the critical moment would be able to find the key.

REV. DR. PUTNAM'S CALL.

The announcement was made a few weeks ago that Rev. Dr. A. P. Putnam, Pastor of the First Unitarian Church of Brooklyn, had received a call to the pastorate of the First Unitarian Church at Quincy, Mass. Dr. Putnam has not yet decided whether he will accept the call or not, but will decide in a few days. It is understood that he feels strongly attached to his church in Brooklyn, and that he finds it very difficult to decide whether to go or stay, especially as various personal and family interests in the East make it desirable that he should change his residence. He has been Pastor of the church in Brooklyn nearly 13 years, and his relations there are, and always have been, most satisfactory. The church is at present out of debt, is very strong, both financially and in membership, and embraces much of the wealth and culture of Brooklyn Heights. It has always made large contributions to charitable work in Brooklyn, and takes a lively interest in whatever is

THE ELECTION IN DELAWARE.

HOW THE STATE WAS STOLEN BY THE DEMOCRATS.

From the Dover (Del.) Sentinel, Jan. 6.

The election in Delaware was not a fair expression of the will of the people, because a fraudulent misuse of the legal machinery for assessing, by the party in power, disfranchised more than 2,500 legal voters. These are the days of investigations. Let us have one here. It will do no harm; it will certainly let a little air in on the dry bones. If Mr. Morton's Committee of Privileges and Elections, or any other committee the Senate may send, will inquire into the fairness of our last election, we think the following can be shown:

1. That a fund was raised in various parts of the State for the purpose of corrupting the purity of the ballot-box.

2. That the Democratic vote in Wilmington was largely the product of fraud.

3. That the Election law of 1873 was conceived, drawn, and passed for the purpose of hindering or preventing the negroes, or a great portion of them, from exercising their right of suffrage.

4. That the practical effect and operation of this law, as administered, is to deprive them as intended.

5. That Assessors have been requested or instructed to leave off their lists the names of many Republicans.

6. That Collectors have been requested or instructed to avoid the receiving of taxes due from many Republicans.

7. That names have been added, altered, or changed, on the lists, contrary to law.

8. That fraudulent receipts have been issued.

9. That the adjournment of the Levy Court before the 18 h of February last was had for the purpose of preventing delinquents from going on the assessment lists.

10. That there is a matured, well-defined, and well-understood plan among many Democratic leaders to leave off the lists enough Republicans to insure the State to the Democrats.

THE YSERBYT EXTRADITION CASE.

Henry Joseph Yserbyt, of Coyghen, Belgium, charged with forgeries committed in that country, was brought before United States Commissioner White yesterday. Yserbyt says the forgeries were committed without malicious intent. He was in the habit of making his own drafts, and putting upon them pretended acceptances, and then discounting the drafts on various banks. As a rule he had been able to pay these drafts at maturity, but at last he was found out by the authorities, and fled to this country. As he expressed a wish to return to Belgium and meet the charges against him, the accused was remanded by Commissioner White to await the warrant of the Secretary of State for his surrender to the Belgian Government. He will probably leave by the steamer Switzerland, sailing about the 10th inst.

TWO DEER AT ONE SHOT.

The Pensacola (Fla.) Gazette says: "A good shot was made last Thursday by Capt. T. W. Hutchinson, who was out deer-driving a few miles from the city. He was on his 'stand,' and thinking, from the voices of the dogs, which were on a mixed trail, that nothing would come his way soon, he laid aside his gun, and was resting comfortably, when suddenly two deer came leaping through the black-jacks. Snatching up his gun he fired before he had regained an upright position, and both deer fell dead side by side. They were both killed 'stone dead, and never flutttered.'"

A RARE BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

A person of satisfactory standing can secure one-half interest, for $35,000, now paying 20 per cent. on this amount, in a very old, solid manufacturing business which is capable of large extension. Lions About!

It is a dangerous thing to trifle with a cold. A darkey preacher once told his hearers that he thanked God "dat de debbil went about as a roarin' lion seekin' whom he might devour. He might catch a poor fellow who didn't know that he was near him; but when he heard the roar he could get out of the way: if he didn't, he deserved to die." So with one hears the wheeze or the cough which tells of the old lion of Consumption lurking around, he should fly to Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY, and get out of the way of danger. This preparation is well known, has been tried nearly fifty years, and is acknowledged by all who use it to be unsurpassed in its soothing and healing properties.

THE ELLESMERE DIAMONDS.

A STRANGE STORY OF CRIME.

Whenever any burglary or larceny exhibiting an extraordinary amount of skill and daring is perpetrated in this City, it is the fashion to credit it to English artists. It seems to be the general opinion of the community that these foreign gentry are the decided superiors of our domestic artists in every branch of the profession. That this opinion, however, is a fallacious one, let the history of Lady Ellesmere's jewels testify. Surely there is not a New-York thief, however humble, but would feel the blush of shame o'erspread his face at the recital of the miserable ignorance of the three London swell-mobsmen who figure therein. The story itself is one of the strangest on record, even in the prolific annals of London crime. Fielding, when at work upon the biography of Jonathan Wild the Great, might have hit upon a distant counterpart to this romantic incident in the chronicles of the hulks, but even his copious imagination would have failed him in an attempt to sketch the more delicate details and finer shades of such a picture. The great Begle Conspiracy, and the Gold Dust Robbery, both of which have been detailed in THE TIMES, were no doubt planned with wonderful ingenuity, followed up with remarkable perseverance, and effected with signal audacity, but they were altogether wanting in the rich comic vein which was the distinguishing feature of the case we are now to relate.

In the month of January, 1856, Lady Mary Louisa Campbell, Countess of Ellesmere, received an invitation from her Majesty the Queen to pay a visit to Windsor Castle. It is needless to say that the invitation was accepted, and, on the 22d of January, the Earl's London mansion was in all the bustle of preparation for the Countess' approaching departure. Where a noble peeress was about to sun herself in the smiles of royal favor, it behooved the visitor to put on the war-paint, and the fair scion of the house of MacCallum Mohr was no ways disposed to stint herself in that particular. Numberless were the trunks and portmanteaus which filled every room, while three maids, bustling about from wardrobe to bureau, stuffed them full with the paraphernalia of a leader of fashion. Lady Ellesmere left the superintendence of this necessary labor to her confidential maid, with the single instruction that all her jewels and more valuable apparel should be placed in one box. In consequence, a certain large black portmanteau soon became a veritable horn of abundance, the richness of whose contents may be gathered from the following list of a few of the articles which it contained: One pearl necklace, one diamond necklace, one emerald and diamond necklace, one diamond brooch with emerald drop, one diamond bow, one pair of diamond and emerald ear-rings, two sets of diamond branches, three large diamond studs, a gold bracelet with Pericleaux clasp, a cat's-eye bracelet. These were the more valuable pieces of jewelry, and with them were packed white and black Brussels laces, China crape and other scarves, laces, dresses, velvet cloaks, India scarfs, silk and satin dresses, and other expensive articles.

At last the preparations for the departure were complete. Her ladyship and her lady-ship's coach, coachmen, and coach-horses were altogether too grand to carry even the black portmanteau to the railway station, so it was left to be transported with the rest of the luggage and the three lady's maids. Two cabs were chartered for the purpose, the maids stowed themselves inside, the trunks were piled on the rack and roof of each cab, and troubling herself no further about her precious box, the Countess entered the family carriage, and the whole caravan started for the station.

When they reached their destination there was no black portmanteau. The consternation of the noble peeress, the horror of the confidential maid, and the general amazement or all concerned may be better imagined than described. Had it vanished into thin air, its disappearance could not have seemed more marvelous. A reward of £500 was promptly offered, but without result; nor was it till nearly two years afterward that the mystery of its disappearance was solved. Some persons had been arrested on suspicion, whereupon Mr. William Atwell, residing at the time in Springfield Jail, and himself one of the actors in the drama, volunteered to tell the story, which he did in rich, racy English, and with an attention to detail rivaling the descriptions of Defoe.

It seems that on the memorable 22d of January, 1856, Mr. Atwell, in company with his friends Messrs. Whitty and Saint—all three of felonious thoughts intent—set out upon a little excursion from London Bridge to the West End. When in the neighborhood of Grosvenor square they saw a carriage drawn by two horses, and, immediately preceding it, two street cabs. On one of these was placed a large black portmanteau, with a smaller one by its side. Mr. Whitty thereupon remarked, "There go Port St. Peter's;" which expression being interpreted means trunks. The friends were instantly fired with a noble ardor. "May I be hanged," exclaimed the enthusiastic Whitty, "but I'll have a big one." Atwell doubted the feasibility of this attempt. "If you do, you'll tumble [alarm] the coaches," he said. By this time the cabs were in the centre of the square, the carriage having passed them. The daring Whitty jumped on the back of the cab, laid hold of the rail with his left hand, and with his right pulled the large portmanteau off. It fell in the road and was so heavy that it dragged him off with it, and man and trunk came to the ground together. The horse reared and Atwell called out, "You have tumbled the man." It was a false alarm, however; the driver had not noticed the robbery, and, after following the cabs for a square or so to see that the coast was clear, Whitty returned to his companions. Saint accosted him with, "Lift hold of it, Joe, it's so ——— heavy." Mr. Whitty declined. "It's a fine job," said he, "after I've pulled it, that I'm to swag [carry] it." On Atwell's representing, however, that he was himself in ill health and very feeble, he curbed his haughty spirit, and consented to bear a hand, while Atwell hurried off to the nearest cab-rank. He there secured a vehicle for three sailings to carry himself and his portmanteau (which he said a friend and a porter were bringing after him) to a certain part of the city. The cab drove up to where Whitty and Saint stood with the portmanteau; it was placed inside. Atwell took his seat, pressed his friend's hand, and in a heart-broken voice exclaimed, "Good-bye, Joe! God bless you; write me soon." The cab drove off; Whitty, at the top of his speed, followed it on foot, while Saint waited at the street corner to take a bus in the same direction.

Atwell, with his luggage, somewhat to cabby's surprise, but without, it seems, exciting his suspicions, was left at a street corner, and Whitty soon after appearing, the portmanteau was carried into the house of one Edward Jackson, an oil and color man in Shoreditch, and stored away under the counter. He had a customer at the time, so the friends retired, but a few minutes later, the coast being clear, they returned and proceeded into the back parlor to divide the spoil. Jackson produced the bag and said, "Open it Bill," but the nooie Atwell, who (according to his own statement) seems to have possessed a keen sense of humor, replied: "Stop a minute, no unmanliness; Saint isn't here yet." Never was the old proverb, "honor among thieves," more strikingly illustrated. Some one now noticed the name "Countess of Ellesmere" painted in white letters on the top of the portmanteau, and exclaimed, "Why this lady is almost next to the Queen." "By that I hope," said Jackson, "that you've something good." Restraining their impatience, they waited half an hour for Saint, who at last made his appearance, when the party being complete, any proceeded to open the bag. Its lock puzzled them for some time, but they finally succeeded in forcing it, and Whitty began to take out the things.

The back parlor in Leonard street, Shoreditch, now presented the appearance of Aladdin's cave, and like ignorant Aladdins the three confederates conceived that the jewels were only so many bits of colored glass or stone. These light-fingered and experienced London thieves seemed to have had pretty much the same idea of the real nature of their booty as a mob of South Sea Islanders or a gang of drunken sailors would have had under similar circumstances. The behavior of Clown and Pantaloon in the pantomime, when their thievish efforts have been crowned with success, probably presents the nearest known counterpart to the proceedings of Messrs. Whitty, Saint, and Atwell when they were unpacking the result of their little expedition. Atwell seems at first to have had some suspicion of the truth, for, as he took up an exquisite diamond coronet, surmounted with a butterfly, blazing with the effulgence of contrasted rubies, emeralds, and topazes, he exclaimed: "Why, these things are sparks [diamonds]!" Jackson said, "They get up these things so well now, that one can hardly tell the difference;" while Whitty and Saint laughed at their comrade for being so jolly green as to mistake such things for diamonds.

As the dresses made their appearance, Mrs. Jackson, who might be supposed to be better informed than her male companions as to such feminine mysteries, gave it as a suggestion that "the lady who owned the articles was a kind of fashionable woman." The unpacking completed, it was necessary to proceed to business, i. e., to divide the spoil and convert it into money. The diamond butterfly, worth £800, was sold to Mrs. Jackson for two shillings, and an elegant lace shawl, worth £50, was taken by this lady at the same price, buyer and seller being alike ignorant of their value. A large assortment of dresses was sold to Jackson for fifty shillings, and three dozen pairs of kid gloves for three shillings. He demurred strongly to taking them at such a price, or, in fact, at all, as he didn't know what to do with so much of that stuff;" but for old acquaintance sake he consented to make the trade. Whitty, on division, obtained Lady Ellesmere's corsets and all the open-work underwear in the portmanteau, ["kind of punched full of holes like," was Mr. Atwell's description of the articles,] saying they would do for his old woman. They were all given by him to "a lady of his acquaintance named Polly Gentleman." The rest of the dresses, with the shawls, scarfs, and laces, were tied up in a large bundle, to be disposed of elsewhere.

The more serious discussion, however, was as to the value of the bulk of the spoil. Jackson believed the jewels to be worth £40. [Had he said £16,000 he would have been nearer the mark.] The others were completely in the dark. They finally resolved to go and consult a man named Sam Britton, who seems to have been considered by them as a kind of authority upon such subjects, was to the dresses. To his house they were conducted by a gentleman named "California," but unfortunately Mr. Britton was not at home, and it was not until a later period of the evening that they were able to commence their negotiation. They asked £15 for their large bundle of dresses, laces, scarfs, &c., but Samuel steadily refused to give so exorbitant a sum and finally closed with them for £3. Many of the jewels were disposed of at similar prices. The studs, three superb blue diamonds, were sold for five shillings. The single exception was an emerald and diamond necklace, which was bought by a Jew for £300.

When the reward was advertised the thieves were greatly alarmed, and while cursing their folly, endeavored to get rid of anything whose identification might lead to their detection. With this end in view the emerald drop and diamond bow were dropped down a sewer in Smithfields; a pair of diamond ear-rings were thrown away in a field near Whitechapel, and the pearl necklace was flung into the Thames from London Bridge. No part of the stolen property was ever recovered, and the Countess had only the barren satisfaction or punishing the thieves. Atwell, already under sentence for another offense, was let off with a six month's prolongation of his current imprisonment, while Mr. Jackson was rewarded with penal servitude for ten years. Neither Whitty nor Saint could be got hold of, and therefore escaped scot-free, while Mrs. Jackson, being supposed to be under the control of her husband, was found "not guilty."

A DUAL WEDDING.

A YOUNG LADY ON THE EVE OF HER WEDDING ELOPES WITH A MORE FAVORED SUITOR, AND THE PHILOSOPHICAL BRIDEGROOM CONSOLES HIMSELF BY MARRYING ANOTHER SWEETHEART.

The St. Louis Times prints a letter written at Lexington, Mo., on the 1st inst., describing a romantic episode in real life as follows:

"Tolbert Hickland, a young gentleman residing some two and a half miles from the city on the Dover road, had arranged for his nuptials with one of Lexington's fair damsels, Miss Fannie Jennings, on Thursday last. He had been paying his addresses to her but a few weeks previously, and all arrangements had been completed for the consummation of the happy event at the time appointed, at the residence of the father of the young lady. Preparations had been made for an elegant wedding supper, also the presence of a member of the cloth, for whom the groom expectant was to call with a carriage at 7:30 o'clock in the evening. It appears that a Mr. Russel Cather, of this city, had also been paying his addresses to the same young lady for some time past, and on the day preceding the day set for the wedding called to see the lady and proposed an elopement with her on that very day. She readily assented, and after the family had retired, he and her trunk were stealthily spirited away from her father's domicile, and she and her lover, after considerable difficulty in procuring the services of a clergyman, were united in wedlock and crossed the Missouri River at the dead hour of midnight, the thermometer below zero, where awaited them a carriage to convey them on their bridal tour. Morning came, and soon thereafter Mr. Hickland appeared in town, only to the realization of the fact that the bird had flown. In the family of the father of the young lady there was also another young lady, pour but estimable, and quite pretty, to whom had been offered the comforts of a home—Miss Alice Haywood. Thither Mr. Hickland bent his way on learning the faithlessness of his affianced, and arranged that the preparation for the elegant wedding supper should not be for naught, and that he and Miss Alice should be married at the appointed time and place at which he was to have been married to Miss Fannie.

In the course of the day these facts were quickly circulated and discussed on all. During this time the clergyman whose services had been secured by Mr. Hickland met him and jocularly remarked that he would expect him to call for him at his residence at the hour appointed, to which Mr. Hickland replied that he would, most assuredly, and desired that he should be ready without fail. True to appointment he called for the parson at the hour set with a close carriage. The parson, not knowing just what shape matters had taken, nor whither he was to be driven, nor caring to venture an inquiry, in a sort of semi-bewilderment entered the carriage. On entering the house he found a pleasant company assembled, and soon thereafter was enlightened upon the new shape affairs had taken, and thereupon united Mr. Hickland to Miss Alice Haywood, after which the evening was spent delightfully, and the wedding supper proved not to be spoiled for the want of a wedding, and was one of the most elegant of the season."

LEGAL PERPLEXITIES.

The Louisville, (Ky.) Commercial, of the 4th inst., prints the following: "A suit was filed in the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday, by Samuel Butler, against the Marshal of the City Court, for $5,000 damages for false imprisonment, which will raise some very interesting legal points. Butler was fined, in the City Court, $5 for disorderly conduct, and at once handed to the Marshal $5, demanding a receipt for the payment of the fine, which the Marshal refused, but offered to give a receipt for that amount upon the capias, which called for $10, for fine and costs,' but this not satisfying Butler, the money was returned to him. He then tendered the $5 in open court in satisfaction of the fine, but it was refused, and he was placed in the prison at Central Station and kept there, as he alleges, until he could send out and obtain an additional $5 to pay the costs. The officers of the court hold that the judgment of fines carries with it the costs, and that if part is paid they can apply it to the payment of any portion of the judgment they may see proper, and are not compelled to apply it to the satisfaction of the fine. The attorneys for Butler, who brought the suit, contend that the tender of the amount of the fine was a satisfaction of the judgment, and that nothing was left but the costs, for which they have no right to imprison a person, and that the refusal to apply the money to the payment of the fine as demanded, and the placing of Butler in prison after the tender was made, was a violation of law, for which they are responsible. The suit is an important one, raising legal points which are of vital interest to the officers of the court, whose compensation is their fees in the way of costs."

FIRE-BUGS CAPTURED.

The citizens of Fort Edward, Washington County, are much elated over the capture of several incendiaries, who for some time past have kept them in nightly fear. From an account printed in the Albany Argus, it appears that a large amount of property has been destroyed, and fires have occurred at such hours of night, and under such circumstances, as to render it, in many cases, difficult for occupants of the buildings to escape with their lives. The town authorities at last engaged the services of Messrs. Thomas P. Jones and Edward T. Williams, of this City, and on the 16 h of December last these Detectives proceeded to Fort Edward and took the case in hand. Their labors resulted, on the 1st inst., in the arrest of five men, named James Grayham, James Downy, Benjamin Skelly, Phin Buck, and James Miller. These were taken before Justice Walter M. Lant, and submitted to an examination. Evidence was obtained to warrant the commitment of the three first named for arson. Buck was also held for burglary, while Miller, who appears to have been the leader of the gang, and who turned State's evidence, was held as a witness. Three other arrests have been made, and others are to follow. The Trustees of the village have formally expressed their thanks to the detectives for the skilful manner in which they worked up the case. The gang had made all their arrangements for firing the Fort Edward Brewery and several other buildings simultaneously on a stormy night; and had their plans been carried out they would probably have laid the entire portion of the Village in ashes.

THE KING AND THE POPE.

AN EX-MINISTER'S INTERVIEW WITH THE LATE CARDINAL.

A CONVERSATION HELD IN 1870 MADE PUBLIC FOR THE FIRST TIME—THE SOVEREIGN PONTIFF'S VOLUNTARY IMPRISONMENT—HOSTILITY TO THE CHURCH—THE GOVERNMENT AND THE VATICAN.

From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

The following is a translation of a remarkable conversation between Hon. Ruggerio Borghi, ex-Minister of Public Instruction, of Italy, and his Eminence Cardinal Antonelli. The interview, though occurring in the year 1870, has been but recently published in the public prints of Rome, and has caused a good deal of private talk in political circles. The report of the interview is given by Signor Borghi, as follows:

"I came to Rome some days after the 20th of September, 1870, invited (I think by Correnti) to visit the libraries and some educational institutions. I knew Cardinal Antonelli in 1848, when I was in Rome as First Secretary of the Embassy of the Italian League. In 1869 I wished to make an archæological journey with my pupils or the Scientific Literary Academy through the western provinces of Italy, so I made an application through the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Portuguese Minister to Cardinal Antonelli to stop some weeks in Rome with my class. I had been twice prevented before that period from passing simply along the boundaries of the Pontifical territory in the railway—once when I was going to see my dying mother, and the delay then made me lose the consolation of seeing her once more before she died; therefore, I knew this permission was necessary. It was given—not by the Cardinal, but by the Prefect of Police, Marchese Pio Capranica. We went first to Naples; on our return we were stopped at Ceprano by an order from Rome which forbade me to enter the city, but gave permission to my students to go there. There was nothing else to do but submit. My students went on, and I was taken from Ceprano to Isoletta by a special car.

I telegraphed to the Minister of Portugal, and I think also to Cardinal Antonelli, to have the mistake corrected. The reply did not come until the next morning, and I passed a most uncomfortable night in the soldiers' barracks. When I arrived at Rome my first visit was to the Marchese Capranica, whom I knew, and who was really surprised when he saw me; for he had made sure that my dangerous self was on the other side of the boundaries. It seemed only proper that I should ask for an audience of Cardinal Antonelli to thank him. It was granted. His Eminence was gracious, and talked to me about marbles and gems. I should have liked to have asked him if he remembered seeing me in 1848, in order to tempt him to talk on other subjects, but he did not give me the chance. When I found myself in Rome, in 1870, with the wonderful affairs so greatly changed, I thought it would be civil for me to pay him a visit and see if I could be of any use to him in return for the service he had rendered me the preceding year. I went to the Vatican and found the door closed, guarded by two Swiss. I left a visiting-card for Cardinal Antonelli, on which I wrote that I should return the next day, at 1 o'clock, to see if his Eminence would receive me. The following day I was admitted instantly, and the staircase was pointed out to me by which I mounted to the last floor of the palace. As soon as I reached the apartment and my name was announced, a prelate, with most exquisite and courteous manners, took me into a little parlor. After waiting there a minute or two, the Cardinal entered at an opposite door, and asked me to sit down on a sofa beside him. Neither of us knew where to begin. At last, after some minutes, I broke the silence, and burst straight out with the question I was the most eager to ask.

Borghi—Well, your Eminence, how are we to get out of this?

Cardinal Antonelli:—It is not our business to get out, because we are not the ones who have come in.

Borghi—That's so. But it is not your affair to leave us at the same time it is impossible for us to go back.

Cardinal Antonelli.—I understand. It is the same old song. The Piedmontese Government is always obliged to do in Italy that which it does not wish to do, and when it takes all it is only to prevent worse things happening.

Borghi—But, your Eminence, is there not a great deal of truth in that which seems to you a simple pretext? I do not know if your Eminence remembers when you saw me first. I was Secretary of a special embassy from Ferdinand II. when I was first presented to you. The Prince of Colobiano, my leader, came to treat upon the league of Italian Princes over which the Sovereign Pontiff was to preside. I saw his Holiness then; he presented me with his portrait-medal. Well, since that time how many things have happened! And were not some of these developments which we have seen necessary?

Cardinal Antonelli—These developments were helped on by those who should have resisted them.

Borghi—How could they be resisted? Admitting that the Italian Government wished to resist, could it have done so? It has at its disposition only temporal power. What resistance has the Papacy been able to make, possessing both temporal and spiritual power? Here a pause ensued. I resumed: But the Pope. Will he remain shut up in the Vatican?

Cardinal Antonelli—What else can he do?

Borghi—Can he not go out into the streets of Rome?

Cardinal Antonelli—It would be equivalent to recognizing and sanctioning that which has been done in Rome against him.

Borghi—However, I think it is very evident that the people distinguish between the Pope and the Prince, and would receive his Holiness with every mark of respect and joy.

Cardinal Antonelli—I do not doubt that.

Borghi—And the soldiers would be very respectful to him; they are peasants and good Catholics. Have you noticed what reverence they show in the churches?

Cardinal Antonelli—Certainly, I have seen them; they are very badly clothed.

Borghi—That may be, but they are good, as few soldiers in the world are. I will wager that they would show themselves full of veneration for the Pope if, and at the same time remain faithful to the King.

Cardinal Antonelli—The Pope had his own soldiers; if these gentlemen wished him to be respected by their soldiers they should have left him his own.

Borghi—But this sort of opposition leaves no way open for settlement. If you do not go out from the Vatican now, it will become more difficult every day. And then, in what way can we untie the knot?

Cardinal Antonelli—We have only one course. Our strength is in our rights. We must keep those intact, and we have always been many centuries in it not possible to see also the most natural one of all, the right being on the side of those who are in the right? In a word, that which belongs to us has been taken away and we have not the force to recover it; there is nothing else to do but to wait for an occasion when those who have robbed us will be obliged to restore to us what they have stolen. And why should this good fortune fail us this time only?

Borghi—But, your Eminence, can those absolute ideas of mine and thine be applied to the relations between States, and the historical evolutions of the peoples? Does a kingdom or a people belong to a prince or an institution, as these gloves belong to me? I cannot understand why the Church should not take the pains to accept the forms of free governments and adapt herself to them.

Cardinal Antonelli—Does prevails in everything a spirit hostile to the church, which desires nothing else but to destroy her.

Borghi—I do not deny it; but this fact, it appears to me, demands that we should admit another as an explanation. The other fact is that the Catholic cause has lost its influence over the people, or at least a great part of it. If it were not so, the prevailing thought would be to send deputies who would not only refrain from meddling with faith, but also would not touch any of the organizations the clergy think should be preserved. The clergy could regain by the nomination of its friends to the chamber. At the elections of last autumn, it was ascertained that the majority of them were kept in-doors on account of frozen feet and sore throats. In tracing on the maps the localities of the homes of the sick children, and the schools which they attended, it was found in every instance, where they were detained at home with frozen feet, that they had been compelled to cross some of the various railroad tracks on their way to school. Alderman Cornell visited almost every public school in the City, and learned in almost every one of them that the heating apparatus, which had never been employed in former years, had been found to be insufficient, and that it had been almost impossible to supply sufficient heat to keep the children's feet warm. Many of the the teachers, mostly females, were detained at home from the same cause, and upon tracing their route to the school on the maps, it was found that in each instance they had to cross one of those railroad tracks, wet with the salt slush. The stage routes soon began to follow the example set by the railroads, and sail on their roads also. Eleventh street, Eighth and Ninth streets were stage routes laid with this liquid salt, and in all of these streets we had cases of diptheria and pharyngitus that Winter. In Tenth street, Waverley place, and Fourth street, all parallel, and nearly contiguous, although he had many patients, he had none suffering with those diseases. From these facts he infers that the salting of the streets was detrimental to the public health, and therefore renewed his efforts to have it abolished. A combination of the railroad companies, to prevent the passage of the ordinance, was formed, and a delegation to advocate their views waited upon Mayor Opdyke, headed by Mr. Darling, Manager of the Third Avenue Railroad. A long document, written by Mr. Bailey Meyers, of the Sixth Avenue railroad, denying all the facts, and setting forth in strong terms the great advantages of the salt to their horses' feet, was also handed in. It was also set forth in this paper that the salt would cure the horses of greased heels and cracked hoofs, and in fact, that it was of the greatest benefit to them. These statements were testified to by many of their drivers, and men working in their stables, who all said that there was not a single horse in their stables suffering from frost in feet, caused by salt, although several of them had stated to Dr. Sayre a few days before that there were a number in their stables suffering from that cause. Mayor Opdyke was disposed to accept the observations of these, whom he called practical men, against his (Dr. Sayre's) scientific theories. He said that Mr. Darling was interested in saving his horses, and that he would, therefore, not use the salt if it injured them—that he would lose money by it. Dr. Sayre disproved this statement by finding a large number of horses belonging to some of these very companies in a stable remote from observation near Jones' Woods. He took several of the hoofs that had sloughed off from some of these animals while still alive and exhibited them to the Health Commissioners. This was a convincing proof that his statements were correct, and they immediately re-enacted the ordinance prohibiting the use of salt. On the following day a delegation waited upon the Mayor, urging the absolute necessity of using salt on the up-hill grades, and on the switches and curves, and the ordinance was then modified so as to permit its moderate use at those points.

Dr. Sayre now says that had he known the pernicious results that have followed the granting of this privilege he would have opposed it strenuously at the time. As the law now stands, there is no limit upon the quantity of salt allowed to be used at these points, and the consequence is that as large quantities are used, the salt slush adhering to the feet of the horses and car wheels is carried along the whole length of the railroad lines, and the evil is consequently almost as great as ever. He thinks it a most prolific source of disease, not only to the horses, but to the people. In order to show that the use of salt was not necessary to clear the tracks of the railroads of snow and ice he furnished the reporter with the following copy of a letter published in one of the morning papers in 1862:

SIR: I see in your paper of the 9th an article in reference to salting the railroad tracks and streets. I salted the Hudson River Railroad track last Winter and lost over 80 horses by freezing their feet, and one of my own also. I am satisfied that the snow can be cleared away without salting much cheaper and quicker, as was done in the case of the last snow-storm, on the Hudson River Railroad, and the track kept as clear as it was at any time last Summer, by the use of brooms and laborers; and as for myself, I cleared one section, from Sixteenth street to Twenty-sixth street, being half a mile, for the sum of $15; but I found the condition of the track, which is used by the Ninth Avenue Railroad Company and was salted by them, in a much worse condition than that which was not, as it kept the mud and dirt from freezing and made it much harder pulling for the horses. I would thank the Directors of the Ninth Avenue Railroad, also the Directors of the Hudson River Railroad, not to suffer it to be done, as I shall hold some one responsible for any damage that may occur to me. C. P. PLATT, Contractor for providing cars from Thirty-first street to Chambers street.

Dr. Sayre also furnished a copy of an affidavit made on Jan. 28, 1862, by Lucius A. White, Superintendent of horses of the Avenue A Sage Line, and submitted to the Commissioners of Health, in regard to the salting process. In it he stated that he had had charge of the horses of that line for three years, and that during the previous Winter, when they used salt on the road, they had between 20 and 30 horses laid up with frozen feet. One of them had his feet fall off, three became perfectly useless and were given away, and many of them were utterly unfit for work for several months. In the present year they had not used salt on the road, and their horses' feet were in excellent condition, and there was not a frozen foot in the stable.

EFFECTS OF SALTING THE STREETS.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH SACRIFICED TO SAVE MONEY FOR THE STREET RAILROAD COMPANIES—OBSERVATIONS OF A PRACTICING PHYSICIAN—DR. SAYRE'S WAR AGAINST THE PRACTICE—CASES OF SICKNESS AND DEATH RESULTING FROM IT.

In consequence of the heavy fall of snow on Monday night, salt was liberally sprinkled over all the switches, and almost all of the curves and crossings of the horse-railroad tracks throughout the City. Already in many places the streets are full of the well-known black slush and mud so much dreaded by pedestrians, and before sunset to-day it will be carried by the car-wheels and the feet of the horses throughout all the streets through which the railroads pass, rendering them more or less disagreeable. When the ordinance prohibiting the use of salt on the streets was passed, the switches and curves were not excepted, but by a subsequent ordinance it was allowed. Having learned that Dr. Lewis A. Sayre, of No. 285 Fifth avenue, who was Resident Physician of the City in 1861, had been active in procuring the passage of the ordinance referred to, a TIMES reporter called on that gentleman at his residence last evening. In reply to a request that he would give a history of the circumstances that led to the prohibition of the use of salt in the streets, he said that his attention was first attracted to this matter in 1861. In the Winter of that year, while passing along Broadway, he saw five very large and fine horses hitched to a truck of Herring's safe establishment, standing in front of the Brandreth House, near the corner of Canal street. The snow at that time was very deep, and piled up along the sides of the street, while the centre was a river or lake of half-melted slush and salt water. The horses were standing in this mixture, which at that point was about five or six inches deep, and had evidently been there some time, as a safe had just been hoisted from the truck to an upper floor of the building. Being an admirer of fine horses, he stopped to look at them, and remarked that they were all standing on two feet only. While watching them he noticed that at short intervals they would change their position by lifting their feet which were in the water, and putting the others down. Thinking that they had been trained to do this, in order to attract public attention, he asked their driver, who was just about to start, whether he had found much difficulty in teaching them to do it. The driver, who imagined that he was jesting with him, at first gave a surly answer, but upon becoming convinced that no jest was intended, said it was the ——— salt caused it. On the night of the same day Dr. Sayre said he was called to see an old and well-known citizen of New-York, Capt. Reed, who had gained considerable notoriety as the commander of the privateer General Armstrong in the war of 1812. Upon arriving at the old gentleman's house in Fifty-eighth street, he was shocked by finding him with both feet frozen up to the ankles. Upon inquiring how it had occurred, he was told that early in the evening the Captain had gone to see his daughter, Mrs. George N. Saunders, who lived on Fourteenth street, near Seventh avenue, and that in going to the street car he had been compelled to wade ankle deep in the salt slush on the railroad tracks. His feet had become thoroughly wet in the freezing mixture and in that condition he had ridden to his home. Being an old man, the circulation of his blood was quite feeble, and his feet had frozen. He did all in his power to relieve him, but the inflammation which set in was followed by mortification of the parts, and, as the patient was too old to stand an amputation, he died. On the morning after he had been called to see Capt. Reed, he was sent for to see a patient in West Washington place, below Sixth avenue. Upon arriving at the avenue he found it impossible to cross on account of the salt slush and water on the tracks, and was compelled to make a long detour before he could find a dry crossing. On the sidewalks, and on each side of the tracks, the snow and ice were perfectly dry and solid, showing that the liquidation of the snow on the tracks was due to the action of salt. The lake or stream of the liquid reached clear up to Fourteenth street, where Capt. Reed had crossed on the night before. When he at length arrived at the patient's house, he found another case of frosted feet, which had been brought on by getting the feet wet in stepping out of a car and crossing one track only, and not two as in the other case. This patient was younger than Capt. Reed, and possessed more vitality, and was saved by careful treatment after several weeks of suffering. Upon leaving the house the Doctor went into a drug store and procuring a thermometer, compared the temperature of the salt slush with that of the ice and snow on the sides of the street, and found that of the former to be considerably lower than that of the latter.

The next day he went to the City Hall and conferred with Mr. Fernando Wood, who was then Mayor, in regard to the matter, and on the afternoon of the same day presented the facts to the Board of Health Commissioners, and an ordinance prohibiting the salting of the streets was unanimously passed. On the following day, however, during his absence, a special meeting of the Commissioners was called and the ordinance was repealed. Very little is now heard touching the Winter, and the matter was allowed to drop. In the following year, 1862, the salting of the streets was again begun, with the same injury to the health of the public and damage to the horses. Dr. Sayre again took the matter in hand, and has actively assisted in his efforts by Alderman Cornell. This gentleman circulated agents to visit the public schools of the City, and they learned that since the salting of the streets had begun the number of absentees was greater than ever known before. In point of fact, out of 121,000 scholars about 80,000 only attended. The agents were then sent to the homes of the children, and it was ascertained that the majority of them were kept in-doors on account of frozen feet and sore throats. In tracing on the maps the localities of the homes of the sick children, and the schools which they attended, it was found in every instance, where they were detained at home with frozen feet, that they had been compelled to cross some of the various railroad tracks on their way to school. FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

YESTERDAY'S PROCEEDINGS IN THE HOUSE—THE CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC SERVICE—AN EFFORT MAKING TO REDUCE SALARIES.

In the House of Representatives yesterday, Mr. DOUGLAS, of Virginia, Chairman of the Freedman's Bank Committee, reported a bill authorizing the Freedman's Bank Commissioners to buy in the property sold under foreclosure to secure the debts of the bank, and to sell the same at public or private sale whenever it is for the interest of the bank to do so; and also ratifying their former action in doing so. He explained that the Commissioners, in winding up the affairs of the bank, and in selling property conveyed to the bank to secure its debts, had been compelled, in order to prevent a sacrifice of the property, to buy in a large proportion of it, and afterward to resell it. The legality of this course had been questioned, and this bill was reported in order to remove the doubts in the matter and to prevent expensive litigation. The bill was passed.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill for the sale of desert lands in California, Oregon, Nevada, and the Territories. It provides for the filing of a declaration with the Register and Receiver of a land district in which desert lands are situated that the person intends to reclaim a tract of desert land not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same, within the period of three years thereafter, and upon subsequent proof of such reclamation and the payment of $1 25 an acre for such tract, a patent therefor shall be issued. All lands (mineral and timber lands excluded) that will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop are to be deemed desert lands. The bill was passed.

Mr. REA, of Missouri, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported a bill granting lands to the State of Colorado for the endowment of an Agricultural College.

Mr. FORT, of Illinois, made the point of order that Colorado had not yet been recognized by the House as a State.

The SPEAKER ruled that that was a question of fact; not a parliamentary question.

Mr. BURD, of Ohio, made the point of order that the bill must be first considered in Committee of the Whole. That point of order was sustained, and the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The House then, at 1:30 P. M., went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HOOKER, of Missouri, in the chair, on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, the first paragraphs being those for making appropriations for salaries of Ministers.

Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, offered an amendment fixing the following rates of salaries for Ministers: Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, $15,000; now $17,500. Spain, Austria, Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Japan, and China, $10,000; now $12,000. Chili and Peru as at present. Belgium,

THE HOUSEHOLD.

LIGHTER SUPPLY IN THE MARKETS.

The heavy fall of snow has so blockaded the railroads that the supply of produce has been greatly lessened, and prices for many things are higher. There is, however, no lack of good edibles in the markets. Game is cheap. Quail can be bought for $1 75 per dozen, and partridges and grouse are low priced, and wild ducks, venison, hares, and rabbits have not been cheaper for years. Meats are less plentiful, and prices cannot be cheapened, and poultry is scarce and dearer. Fish and oysters are in good supply, and the white-fish and perch from the lakes are excellent. Among the nice but expensive morsels to be found in the fish markets are Spanish mackerel from Key West, and shad caught in Southern waters. Fruit of nearly every description in season is in good supply and low-priced. Apples are abundant and cheap and Catawba grapes are inexpensive. Prices for cranberries are unchanged, the supply being not excessive. Havana oranges are rather scarce, but the orange groves of Florida supply us with more than is needed for local consumption. Vegetables are higher priced, ice in the rivers and canals and snow on the railroads preventing their shipment to the City. Good Irish and sweet potatoes are 25 cents to 50 cents higher per barrel than they were before the snow-storm; onions cost twice as much as they did a few weeks ago, and turnips, squash, cabbages, and celery are dearer. When the country is relieved from snow prices will probably be lower.

RECEIPTS FOR THE TABLE.

EXCELLENT TURKEY HASH.—Chop quite fine two good-sized onions; put in a hot frying pan, with enough of best dripping and butter to fry them till tender; then add a pint and a half of chopped turkey, with salt and pepper to taste, and a little thyme; add boiling water enough to moisten, without making much gravy; a very little browned flour sifted in and stirred. Boil it up and serve; or it may be turned over half slices of buttered toast.—GOOD HOUSEKEEPER.

DELICATE BREAD PUDDING.—Take four rolls; steep in one quart of tepid milk until dissolved; then place over the fire until nearly boiling; take off and pour it into a bowl containing the yolks of three eggs and quarter of a pound of sugar, beating briskly the while; as soon as quite cold beat the whites to a stiff froth; add to the mixture very carefully a teaspoonful of vanilla; bake in buttered cups stood in a baking-pan half full of boiling water until on withdrawing a straw it comes out free and clean. Use the following orange sauce: Place on the fire in porcelain saucepan quarter of a pound of white sugar, half-pint water, juice of one large orange, and the rind, cut off exceedingly thin; boil five minutes, strain, add one glass of white-wine or eau-de-vie.—GOOD HOUSEKEEPER.

APPLE PUDDING.—Eight fine apples, grated, about the same quantity of stale bread, three eggs, one and one-half pints milk, sugar, and cinnamon. Bake one hour and eat with cream.—COUSIN MATTIE.

MINUTE PUDDING.—Eight even tablespoonfuls of flour, one pint cold milk, with a piece of soda the size of a pea dissolved in it; stir in the flour gradually with the milk to the consistency of thin starch; add four well-beaten eggs; on sitting down to dinner put it in the oven; butter the dishes well, and put the mixture in one-eighth of an inch thick, as it rises so rapidly; serve hot from the oven with cold sauce.

QUICK WEDDING CAKE.—Two and one-half cupfuls flour, one and one-half cupfuls sugar, one cupful butter, three-quarters cupful milk, two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of rum, one-half nutmeg, one-half pound of raisins, one-quarter pound currants, one-quarter teaspoonful soda.—SIBYL.

RAISED CAKE.—One yeast-cake sponged at 10 A. M. At 2 P. M. warm three cupfuls milk, add the sponge and two cupfuls sugar, make a stiff batter, and set to rise in a warm place. At 9 P. M. add one cupfuls of butter (or one of butter and one of lard,) three well beaten eggs, three nutmegs, two cupfuls sugar, two cupfuls fruit, two wine glassfuls of cider brandy, mix well with the hand and let it rise till morning, then stir and put into pans, let it rise 30 minutes longer, and bake an hour in a slow oven.—SIBYL.

ICING.—To one pound of pulverized sugar add a tumbler of cold water, and boil till it ropes. Beat the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth and stir very fast into the boiling water and sugar; stir till nearly cold, flavor with lemon, and when perfectly cold frost the cake. This frosts the whole seven loaves of the above receipt.—SIBYL.

FRENCH CAKE.—One-half pound butter, two cupfuls sugar, one cupful milk, three eggs, three cupfuls flour, one teaspoonful baking powder.—AUNT ADDIE.

COFFE-CAKE, WITHOUT EGGS.—One and one-half cupfuls cold coffee, the same of sugar, one cupful butter, half a cupful molasses, a heaping teaspoonful soda, one cupful each of raisins and currants, a wine-glassful wine or brandy; a little citron and spices to taste; stir with flour as stiff as fruit cake.

OLD-FASHIONED GINGERBREAD.—Two cupfuls New-Orleans molasses, one cupful melted butter, two eggs, two even tablespoonfuls ginger, one cupful hot water, one tablespoonful ginger, a little salt, and flour sufficient to roll out; bake in two square tins; mark with a knife half an inch apart on top.—J. M. S.

OLD-FASHIONED GINGERBREAD, II.—Two cupfuls molasses, half-cupful butter, one cupful boiling water, one teaspoonful ginger, one teaspoonful soda, flour sufficient to make a thin batter; dissolve soda in molasses, add ginger, then butter; beat well; add boiling water, then flour; bake quickly.—COUSIN MATTIE.

WAFFLES.—Put two pints of rich milk into separate pans. Cut up and melt in one of them a quarter of a pound of the butter, warming it slightly. Stir it around, to get the butter quite melted. Set it away to cool. Beat eight eggs very light, and mix their yolks gradually with the rest of the butter alternately with half a pound of flour. Then, by degrees, mix in the milk and melted butter, and a half cake of compressed yeast. Cover the pan, and set near the fire to rise. Let it get very light. Have your waffle-iron very hot, and grease the inside well with butter. A swab made of a piece of cotton cloth, tied to the end of a stick, is best to use for greasing; and have the butter melted. Turn the iron so that the waffles will brown on both sides. Take them out of the iron with a knife, and send to table hot. You can butter them and sprinkle on them powdered sugar and cinnamon.—AUNT ADDIE.

CORN MUFFINS.—Six ounces flour, three ounces Indian meal, two tablespoonfuls sugar, one tablespoonful melted butter, one egg, one-half pint milk, three teaspoonfuls baking-powder.—COUSIN MATTIE.

FRIED-CAKES.—Two cupfuls sugar, two cupfuls sweet milk, two eggs, half teacupful butter, half a nutmeg, a little salt, four teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, two of soda; mix soft.—RUTH.

WATER RISINGS FOR BREAD.—Take a quart pitcher and a spoon, scald them; fill the pitcher half-full of boiling water; let the water cool to the temperature of good, hot dish-water; stir in flour to make a batter as thick as for pancakes; add a quarter-teaspoonful of salt and as much soda; cover closely; set where it will keep quite warm, stirring occasionally; it will rise in five or six hours. Some prefer this to hop or brewers' yeast.

PICKLED EELS.—Skin, clean and wash the eels, carefully extracting the fat from the inside; lay in cold water for one hour; take out and salt all over; lay in a dish without water for half an hour; rinse off in fresh water, then cut into pieces of two to three inches in length. Place on the fire three parts of vinegar and one of water, using enough to cover the eels; to two pounds of fish add six grains of allspice, one bay leaf, a few shallots, or two onions, half a tablespoonful of salt, and half teaspoonful of whole black pepper; boil this pickle 15 minutes, then put in the eels, and boil until tender; take them out and place on a dish to cool, then lay these in a jar and pour over them the cold pickle, and keep in a cold place. Then they are ready for immediate use, and will keep for about two weeks.

POTTED MACKEREL.—Cut off the heads, take out the roes, clean the fish thoroughly; rub them inside with a little salt; put back the roes; season them with pepper and salt; lay them in a pan; cover with equal quantities of vinegar and water; tie over the pan strong white paper doubled, and bake them in a slow oven for one hour—they will keep two weeks.

EXTRACT OF VANILLA. Vanilla bean, two ounces; tonqua bean, six ounces; alcohol, three pints; best brandy, three pints. Mix, and macerate 15 days, and filter.—PHYSICIAN.

EXTRACT OF VANILLA, II.—Vanilla bean, two ounces; alcohol, one pint. Pulverize the bean and rub it with two ounces of sugar, then mix, and let it macerate for 15 days; express and filter. This last costs more than the first, and is no better in flavor, and I think gives no better satisfaction.—PHYSICIAN.

TO MAKE ICING STICK.—Sift flour over the cake, and then wipe off with a napkin.—AUNT ADDIE.

BRANDY WHITE GRAPES.—Cut the white grapes from the stem, place in a glass jar, and cover with white brandy; let them stand long enough to let the brandy penetrate, then pour over them one pint of the syrup of preserved ginger; cork tightly; let stand for two weeks or longer if the ginger has not flavored them.—GOOD HOUSEKEEPER.

THE ABUTILON.—This plant may be benefited by taking it from the pot and washing the roots clean with warm water and giving it new, good earth; when roses are growing well give a little extra heat to force the blooming; also water with a weak solution of ammonia.—AUNT ADDIE.

QUESTIONS.

A young housekeeper suggests that if many of the friends who furnish their best receipts through "The Household" would remember the hard times, and think how impossible it is for many people to follow their expensive receipts, they would give more of the plain and inexpensive ones.

The "Maid of All Work" asks how to make currant loaf bread so that it will not be heavy. She used a common yeast cake, but with poor success. She also wants to know how to cook cows' and pigs' feet, and how to make jelly from them; also the best way to cook cranberries and make cranberry jelly.

"Evelyn" asks for receipts for plain soups for the first course at dinner, some that are easily made both meat and vegetable.

Please give a receipt for old-fashioned mince-pie, such as our New-England grandmothers used to make!—SIBYL.

Will some one please send a receipt for fig loaf cake.

"Cousin Mattie" asks for a tested receipt for Graham bread, telling the kind of yeast used.

"Beulah" asks for a bill of fare for a wedding dinner for 16 or 18 persons.

Hart's Falls asks for Scotch short bread and Scotch currant bun.

Will some one give a first-class receipt for ginger snaps?

How must an Indian meal pudding be baked to prevent the meal from settling at the bottom of the pudding?

The corn-meal sold in this region is ruined by being ground fine. It is next to impossible to get meal at all coarse, and it loses accordingly its flavor and lightness. If some of the millers will supply this want, they will find ready sale for coarser meal. Grocers say they cannot get coarse meal.—BEACH.

Please tell me how to make buckwheat griddle cakes light and thoroughly brown. I would like a receipt, too, for making curry of curry powder to eat with rice.—SIBYL.

A receipt for frying scallops is requested.

Will some one give me receipts for a few palatable breakfast dishes which will take the place of meat in a measure, or help out a scanty supply of meat; also some nice methods of keeping scraps left from dinner?—SIBYL.

Will some one be good enough to furnish a young wife with a few suggestions regarding household decorations? I cannot afford great luxuries and costly ornaments, but I would like to know how to make my house attractive with tasteful and inexpensive articles.—SIBYL.

"F. A." desires to be informed of another way be side placing paper saturated with brandy over preserves to prevent mildew?

QUESTION.—What is the best material to use to set the different colors of aniline?

"Topsy," wants a receipt to remove the little, hard, white pimples that appear on the face.

What will polish my old brass door-knobs?—SIBYL.

THE SABBATH.

LAWS AFFECTING ITS OBSERVANCE IN MASSACHUSETTS.

From the Boston Traveller, Jan. 5.

In reference to the observance of the Lord's Day the Supreme Court has just rendered an important decision in the case of the Commonwealth by complaint vs. Gehring Has. The defendant was complained of in the Roxbury District Court in June last for keeping an open shop on the Lord's Day. The case went to the Superior Court and was tried at the September term, and the defendant was convicted upon the facts of that month. Upon the 19th Mr. George Sennett, the counsel for the defendant, filed exception, upon the ground that his client conscientiously believed that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as the Sabbath, that he so observed it, and disturbed no one.

The court ruled that this was no defense; that section 1, chapter 84, of the General Statutes, contained two classes of offenders, so far as the ninth section was concerned—viz., first, those who keep open a shop, warehouse, or workshop on the Lord's day, and, second, those doing labor, business, or work, &c., on Sunday; and that section 2 of the same chapter relieved only the second offense from punishment (i. e., doing business or work upon the Lord's Day,) and made the first offense (keeping open shop for doing such business) absolute.

The defendant acknowledged that he had committed this offense, and the jury was directed to find him guilty if the jurors believed that he kept an open shop upon the Lord's Day for the purpose of doing business with the public therein, whatever his conscientious scruples about the seventh day might be.

To this ruling the counsel also excepted.

The exceptions have now been overruled, and the following rescript has been added down:

1. The ninth section, chapter 84, of the General Statutes does not permit one who conscientiously observes the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath to keep open shop on the first day.

2. The chapter 8, General Statutes, is not unconstitutional.

An abstract from the General Statutes follows:

Chapter 84, section 1. Whoever keeps open his shop, warehouse, or workhouse, or does any manner of labor, business or work, except works of necessity and charity, or is present at any dancing or public diversion, show, or entertainment, or takes part in any sport, game, or play on the Lord's Day shall be fined by a due not exceeding $10 for every offense.

SEC. 3. Whoever, keeping a house, shop, cellar, or place of public entertainment or refreshment, entertains therein on the Lord's Day any persons not being travelers, strangers, or lodgers, or suffers such persons at such day to abide or remain therein, or in the yards, orchards, or fields appertaining to the same, drinking or spending their time idly or at play, &c., shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5 for each person so entertained.

SEC. 9. Whoever conscientiously believes that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as the Sabbath, and actually refrains from secular business, travel, and labor on that day, shall not be liable to the penalties of this chapter for performing secular business, travel, or labor on the Lord's Day, or first day of the week; provided that he disturbs no other person.

SCARLET FEVER IN BOSTON.

The Boston Transcript of Friday, 5th inst., says: "Since the first week in September there have been 117 deaths from scarlet fever in this city, the number each week being respectively 5, 3, 2, 4, 1, 3, 3, 7, 5, 5, 5, 10, 9, 3, 15, 13, 13, 11, ending with Dec. 30. The prevalence and fatal character of scarlet fever this season have directed public attention to the subject, and last evening Mr. Pratt, of Ward 21, introduced an order in the Common Council for the Board of Health to consider and report whether any additional legislation is necessary to prevent the spread of that disease by contagion. The subject has been privately discussed among members of the Board of Health for the past three years, and they are convinced that the official treatment of scarlet fever in the same manner that small-pox is treated would diminish the disease, but there are almost insurmountable obstacles to the carrying out of such a measure, which have defied every attempt to bring it into action. Scarlet fever is regarded by the most skilled physicians as much more dangerous than small-pox, but the same opinion does not obtain with the public generally. Indeed it is surprising that people do not regard it with more fear, for the percentage of fatalities is larger than in small-pox. It is the opinion of medical experts that the spread of scarlet fever could be very greatly checked by the isolation of cases in comfortable dwellings, and the prompt removal to a properly-equipped hospital of those occurring in crowded tenement-houses and families where the patient will not receive uniform medical treatment and the attention of skilled nurses, and by disinfection. The law undoubtedly gives to the Board of Health ample authority to treat scarlet fever officially in the same manner that it does small-pox, but it is doubtful whether the community would stand such a proceeding."

A DEER DRIVE.

The woes of some St. Louis hunters are thus described by the Globe-Democrat of the 4th inst.: "Two members of the Sportsman's Club were out on a deer hunt the other day. Coming to a thicket that looked like an excellent covert for game of all kinds, particularly deer, they separated and commenced beating the bush. In a short time one of the hunters heard a crackling of sticks, and saw a dun-colored object, with what he took for the antlers of an enormous buck, running through the thicket. He blazed away, and called to his companion, who also fired, and down dopped the game as dead as a door nail. One of them started immediately for a granger's house near by to procure a wagon to haul the deer, while the other sat down under a tree to wait. In the course of an hour the Nimrod returned, accompanied by the farmer, who drove the wagon. On looking at the dead animal, the farmer at once recognized his old dun mule, that had served him faithfully for fifteen years. The sportsmen paid the farmer $35 apiece, and without hunting for any more deer returned to the city. So much for mistaking the ears of a mule for the horns of a deer."

AN EXTRAORDINARY SURGICAL STORY.

The San Francisco Chronicle of Dec. 28 says: "The Coroner yesterday held an inquest on the body of Chong Sing Yu, who was shot by three assassins on Spofford alley on the 16th inst. A number of witnesses gave testimony implicating the heathen Ah Moon, now in custody, as one of the guilty men, and the jury found a verdict of murder against him. The post-mortem examination held on the body of the deceased Chinaman furnished a case of extraordinary interest to surgical men. One of the three shots which entered the body struck the back, near the waist, and passed completely through the body. At the autopsy it was discovered that the ball had cut the spinal cord in twain, and a particle of the clothing of the murdered Chinaman was found imbedded in the spinal cord. It has long been established that whenever the spinal cord is harmed in the slightest degree, paralysis ensues, but singularly enough the wounded Chinaman within a few days after he was shot was walking around the Chinese Hospital without the slightest difficulty. He was removed from the hospital by his friends, however, and died on the following day."

A NARROW ESCAPE.

The St. Louis Times of Thursday says: "Mr. Adeas, a conductor on a bridge transit train, came very near losing his life yesterday over the river. While the freight train was crossing a trestle work on the East St. Louis and Carondelet Road, Mr. Adeas attempted to step from a car to the locomotive. At that moment the coupling broke, the engine went on, and Mr. Adeas was precipitated to the track. Luckily for him there were no brakes on the first car, for, as they project almost to the ground, they would have probably crushed out his life. When the first axle was passing over him he, with great presence of mind, threw his arms around it, and clinging until the train was stopped was preserved from a shocking death. He made such a desperate clutch that it was with difficulty that he was enabled to release his hold when all danger was over. He received several bruises, but none of a serious nature."

MILITARY GOSSIP.

The twenty-ninth annual ball of the Ringgold Horse Guard will take place at Gallatin Hall, next Tuesday evening.

A court-martial will convene in Company G, Ninth Regiment, next Friday evening, for the trial of delinquent members.

An amateur prize shooting contest will be opened at Conlin's shooting gallery, No. 930 Broadway, next Wednesday. Twenty prizes will be offered for competition.

Battery K, artillery, Lieut. A. Hoelzle commanding, will hold its tenth annual ball at Teutonia Assembly Rooms, No. 160 Third avenue, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 17.

The Washington Grey Cavalry, Capt. L. T. Baker, commanding, will hold a social reunion at its armory, corner of Broadway and Forty-fifth street, next Tuesday evening.

The Board of Officers of the Ninth Regiment were presented with a silver service by Palestine Commandery, No. 18, Knights Templar, last Wednesday evening. Mr. Elwood E. Thorne made the presentation speech.

The Eleventh Regiment, Col. Frederick Unbekant, commanding, will hold a reception at its Armory, on Thursday, Feb. 22. The "Marksman's" badges, won by the members of this command during the past season, will be presented on that occasion.

Company G, Fourteenth Regiment, Brooklyn, held its annual ball at Nilsson Hall last Wednesday evening. Lieut. Col. Charles Schruiz of this command, received calls at his residence from nearly all of the officers and many of the veteran members of his regiment last Monday.

Col. Michael Graham, late of the Eighty-eighth Regiment, New-York Volunteers, in a letter to a friend states that the regiment is disbanded, and that any of the old officers who make representations to the contrary are acting independently of his authority and contrary to good faith.

The newly-elected officers of "Barbara Freitchie" Post, No. 11, Grand Army Republic, of Greenpoint, Long Island, will be installed at their post, corner of Green street and Union place, next Wednesday, at 8 P. M. A musical and literary entertainment will take place immediately after the ceremonies.

At the annual meeting of Company H, Thirteenth Regiment, last Wednesday evening, the following civil officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, G. A. Jahn; Secretary, Z. L. Barnum; Financial Secretary, J. H. Tienken; Treasurer, S. T. Skinner; Board of Directors, L. S. Cole, W. R. Huntington, George T. Bynner, Court-martial, Lieut. George T. Bynner, Sergt. W. J. Collins, S. T. Skinner, J. H. Hamilton, and L. C. Ashauer.

The several companies in the Third Regiment Cavalry are making arrangements for their annual receptions. The following companies have made their announcements: Company H, Capt. Bultman, at the Germania Assembly Rooms, No. 291 Bowery, next Tuesday evening; Company A, Capt. Fisher, at the same place, Tuesday, Jan. 23; Company B, Capt. Hosmer, same place, Monday, Jan. 29, and Company K, Capt. Tiedeman, at Teutonia Assembly Rooms, Thursday, Feb. 15.

At a stated meeting of the Military Order, Leval Legion of the United States, on Wednesday evening last, the following candidates were elected members of the first class: George B. Colver, of this City, late of the Twelfth Tennessee Cavalry, Aid de Camp and Assistant Commissary of Musters, Fifth Division Cavalry Corps, Military Division of the Mississippi, and Brevet Major Clarence F. Bartlett, late Captain and Aid de Camp, United States Signal Officer, Military Division Western Mississippi, of West New Brighton, Staten Island.

At Second Brigade Head-quarters commissions have been received for Major Albert P. Stewart, Capt. Joseph Lindauer, Capt Max Leitzbach, First Lieuts. Frederick Netbohm, Adolph Linger, Charles E. Sherney, and Lion Klafonda, and Second Lieut. Louis Picus, of the Eleventh Regiment, and Major S. W. Roof, Surgeon of the Ninth Regiment. Discharge papers have been received for First Lieut. George H. Weberstaedt, Second Lieut. Adolphus C. Hirschutz, and Adjt. Richard Fabrig, of the Eleventh Regiment, and First Lieut. James Henderson, Ninth Regiment.

The annual meeting of Company G, Seventy-first Regiment, was held last Friday evening. The following civil officers were elected for the ensuing year: Recording Secretary, James A. Law; Financial Secretary, E. J. Winter; Treasurer, Lieut. S. G. Blakely. The following non-commissioned officers were also elected: Sergt. Alexander Steele, First Sergeant, vice Horton, discharged; Corp. R. Rockefellar, Jr., Sergeant, vice Fogle, discharged; Corp. W. C. Dunn, Sergeant, vice Steele, promoted; Privates E. Demmler, R. W. Siglor and G. K. Frazier, Corporals, vice Mittnacoht, reduced to the ranks, and Rockefellar and Dunn, promoted.

The committee of arrangements having in charge the ball to be given by company E, Twenty-second Regiment, at the Lexington Avenue Opera-House, on the 22d inst., have been very much gratified at the celerity displayed by the members of other companies in disposing of tickets for the affair. The blanks sent out to the several companies soliciting their subscriptions, have nearly all been returned bearing favorable indorsement. The opera-house will resemble a large conservatory on the night of the ball, and the paraphernalia on the night of the ball, and the patrons of the company will undoubtedly be well pleased with the management of the entertainment.

A Board of Examination has been appointed in the First Brigade to ascertain the fitness to hold commissions of all officers-elect, or who may be elected in the brigade hereafter during the current year. The following gentlemen will comprise the board: Lieut. Col. John T. Camp, Twenty-second Regiment; Major William G. Wilson, Twelfth Regiment, and Major Herman L. Timken, Fifth Regiment. The board will convene at the armory of the Twenty-second Regiment on the second Monday of each month, and all officers who may hereafter be elected in this brigade are under general orders to appear for examination before the board, upon the Monday next succeeding their election.

The Twelfth Regiment, Col. John Ward commanding, paraded for drill by wings at its armory on Thursday and Friday evenings. The wings were each consolidated into four companies of 12 files front, owing to the want of room. Lieut. Col. Cruger was in command of the right wing on Thursday evening, and Major Wilson commanded the left wing on the following evening. Adjt. Murphy was present as assistant on each evening. The subjects of instruction consisted of marching in columns of four, advancing in line, several division formations and deployments, and the manual. Both officers and men were rusty from the start, but as the drill progressed the movements were better executed. Several of the companies were under command of junior lieutenants, and these gentlemen appeared to have hardly the necessary confidence to drill a company in battalion front.

Company E, Twenty-third Regiment, Brooklyn, has elected the following civil officers for the ensuing year: President, Edward S. Benedict; Vice President, Augustus Norton; Corresponding Secretary, David Moffat, Jr.; Treasurer, F. J. Richardson; Financial Secretary, W. A. Underhill; Clerk, R. B. Vose. At an election in Company D, last Tuesday evening, First Sergt. Frank E. Westlake was promoted First Lieutenant, and Right General Guide Thomas B. Adams, of Company D, was elected Second Lieutenant. The late private Manchester H. Weld, of Company B, was buried last Friday afternoon. The members of the company attended the services in citizen's dress. At an election held in Company A, last Wednesday evening, private William C. Howard was elected First Sergeant, vice William T. Sharpe, resigned. The first promenade concert in this regiment this season, was given by the band last evening.

The several companies in the Eleventh Regiment, Col. Frederick Unbekant commanding, will assemble at the regimental armory, in fatigue uniform, for drill and instruction in the "School of the Company and Soldier," as follows: Companies K and G, Mondays, Jan. 8 and 15; D and A, Tuesdays, Jan. 9 and 16; B and E, Wednesdays, Jan. 10 and 17; C and I, Thursdays, Jan. 11 and 18; F and H, Fridays, Jan. 12 and 19. The senior officer present will take command on each occasion, under the supervision of a field officer. The right wing of this command, comprising Companies D, A, B, E, and K, will assemble at the armory in fatigue uniform, for instruction in the "School of the Battalion" on Mondays, Jan. 22 and 29; the left wing, comprising Companies C, F, G, H, and I, on Tuesdays, Jan. 23 and 30. Roll-call on each occasion at 7:45 P. M.

The Twenty-second Regiment, Col. Josiah Porter commanding, is under orders to assemble at its armory in fatigue uniform, for drill, as follows: Companies D, E, A, H, and G, on Friday, Jan. 19; companies F, I, C, K, and B, on Friday, Jan. 26. Assemble on each occasion at 8 P. M. The entire regiment will parade in full dress uniform at its armory on Wednesday, Jan. 31, at 7:45 P. M., for review by Brig. Gen. Ward. Members of the regiment will not be admitted on the latter occasion unless in full dress uniform, or provided with tickets from Head-quarters. Arrangements are being made for a concert by the Regimental Band to take place after the review. At the regular monthly meeting of Company F, the following civil officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Capt. John R. Horsfall; Vice President, Sergt. Henry A. Cuppia; Recording Secretary, Private Thomas J. Lawrence; Corresponding Secretary, Private W. A. Eagleson; Treasurer, F. Neppert, Jr.; Auditor, Leon Booker.

Capt. Lentilhon, commanding Company K, Seventh Regiment, has appointed the following committees for the ensuing year: Recruiting Committee, Sergt. J. E. Schermerhorn, Corp. P. P. Williams, and P. F. Macdonald; Armory Committee, Corp. L. King, J. R. Beach, and G. N. Williamson; Uniform Committee, Lieut. H. Bacon, Corp. L. S. Allen, and W. H. Calhoun. The gains in this company through enlistment in 1876 were 16 men; losses, from various causes, 24; present strength, 125; average attendance at drill during the first quarter, 90.46 per cent. Capt. Lentilhon pays a compliment to his command upon its present standing and efficiency, and enjoins its members to continue to be punctual in their attendance at drills and meetings during the year, as well as in action in the interest of recruiting, owing to the heavy losses that will occur by expiration of terms of service.

At the annual meeting of the Separate Troop Cavalry, Major Karl Klein commanding, the following civil officers were elected for the ensuing year: Sergt. Major Charles A. Nagel, Secretary; Q. M. Sergt. George E. Epple, Treasurer; Finance Committee, Philipp Merckel, Henry Herrmann, and William Volckens; Armory Committee, Q. M. Sergt. Epple, Corporal Jacob Dilienburg, and Corporal John Weigold; Court-martial, Lieut. Martin Heldt; Chairman, Sergt. Philipp Merckel; Privates, Joseph Pauritsch, Henry Zander, and Ernst Begelmann. Privates Henry Hermann and William Volckens were elected Sergeants. The members of the troop, together with the members of Battery K, Artillery, will assemble in full uniform, at the head-quarters of Major Klein, No. 197 Bowery, on Saturday evening, from whence the detachments will march to the Germania Assembly Rooms, to attend a ball to be given by Battery B, Artillery, Major John Keim commanding.

The annual meeting for the election of officers in the "Old Guard" took place last Thursday evening. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Major, George W. McLean; Senior Captain, Gen. J. T. Hatfield; Junior Captain, G. A. Fuller; Senior First Lieutenant, T. F. Morris; Junior First Lieutenant, C. H. Todd; Senior Second Lieutenant, H. L. Faris; Junior Second Lieutenant, Charles G. Price; Orderly Sergeant, Isaac E. Hosgland. That hilarious trio, Capt. L. D. Bulkley, Lieut. Ben Garney, and Sergt. John Martine, have "stepped down and out." They will, however, continue to enliven the meetings of the company in the ranks, where they will be under more stringent discipline, and can be more readily punished for offenses against decorum. The members are now busy making arrangements for their annual ball at the Academy of Music on the 18th inst. The demand for tickets and boxes has far exceeded the expectations of the "Guard," and there can be no doubt that the ball will be one of the principal society events of the season.

Col. Emmons Clark, commanding the Seventh Regiment, has appointed Second Lieut. Charles Graham Bacon, of Company I, Adjutant, vice Fitzgerald, promoted Lieutenant Colonel. Adjt. Bacon has had a valuable experience as a soldier, and will prove thoroughly acceptable as the Colonel's Lieutenant. Adjt. Bacon entered the United States service on Jan. 1, 1862, as Second Lieutenant of the Thirty-ninth Regiment, New-York Volunteers. He was promoted First Lieutenant, and Adjutant on April 1, 1862, and soon afterward was appointed Acting Assistant Adjutant General of the First Provisional Brigade, at Harper's Ferry. He was subsequently captured and paroled with the garrison on Sept. 15, 1862, and was mentioned in the brigade report for good conduct on Sept. 14, 1862. On Sept. 22, 1862, he was appointed acting Aid de Camp on the staff of Brig. Gen. Tyler. He was promoted Captain in the Thirty-ninth Regiment New-York Volunteers on Oct. 8, 1862, and served in that capacity until June, 1863, when he was authorized to organize the Thirty-sixth Battery New-York Light Artillery. He was appointed Adjutant of the Thirteenth New-York Heavy Artillery in October, 1863, and served until Nov. 20, 1864, when he was appointed acting Ordnance Officer for the Eastern District of Virginia, on the staff of Brig. Gen. G. F. Shipley. He retained this office until the close of the war. Almost immediately after his return to this City he became a member of the Seventh Regiment—on June 25, 1865—when he enlisted as private in Company A, and was soon afterward elected Sergeant, and called to the Second Lieutenancy of that. He was next promoted First Sergeant of Company A, and was subsequently elected First Lieutenant of that company. Resigning his commission a few years afterward, he accepted the office of First Sergeant of Company I, Capt. Casey commanding, and was subsequently elected Second Lieutenant of that company. Careful, energetic, and well versed of ability, he has always been welcome in whatever office he has been placed, and while his comrades in Company I rejoice in his good fortune, they do so with a feeling of regret at the loss of so faithful an officer. A meeting of the members of Company I will be held at the regimental armory to-morrow evening, to fill the vacancy caused by his promotion. At a meeting Company B last Thursday evening the following civil officers were elected for the ensuing year: Recording Secretary, A. C. Zabriskie; Financial Secretary, D. A. Nesbitt; Treasurer, G. D. Stevens. The standing committees for the ensuing year are as follows: On Room, Sergt. Baldwin; Privates Freeman, and S. S. Clark: Arms and Uniforms, Corp. Reynolds, and privates Bryan and Dunning; Recruiting, Sergt. Schuyler, Corp. Wilson and Private Zabriskie.

A GEORGIA FACTORY.

The Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution of the 2d inst. says: "The semi-annual meeting of the Augusta Factory was held last week. The report of the President shows that the profits of the company during the past six months were a little over $13,000, from which a dividend of 2 per cent. was declared. When the depressed condition of the market for cotton goods is taken into consideration, causing most other mills to stop or run on short time, the result must be considered as further proof that the South is the place to profitably conduct cotton mills. The surplus of the company's production has been disposed of, and President Jackson thinks the future is encouraging. Most of its goods are now sold in advance. The factory took during the six months ending the 16th ult., 5,330 bales to employ over 600 hands, and sold its own goods to the amount of $416,640; it added in the six months 416,901 yards of goods, chiefly adapted to and intended for Southern consumption. The stockholders requested the Directors of the corporation to look into the matter of salaries with a view of bringing them down to hard-pan. A proposition was made to reduce the salaries of the President and Superintendent to $4,000 each, and 10 per cent. on all other salaries, but the proposition was withdrawn with the understanding that voluntary reductions would be conceded by the officers themselves. The latter part of the meeting was enlivened by a political discussion that was both lively and amusing. Mr. Walsh claimed that Mr. Cogin had attempted to bull-doze the operatives of the cotton factory in the interest of certain local candidates. The stockholders finally resolved to strike out all personal allusions, and to declare that no officer connected with this company has any right to exercise undue influence, much less arbitrary control, over the political rights of the workmen employed by this corporation, and that they be left entirely free to exercise the elective franchise as they may see proper."

THE PENNSYLVANIA COAL TRADE.

Its customary statement of the statistics of the week the Pottsville Miners' Journal gives thus:

"The quantity of coal sent from the Schuylkill region for the week ending Dec. 30 was 39,385 tons against 10,828 tons for the same week of last year—increase, 28,557 tons. The quantity sent for the year beginning Dec. 1 was 310,015 tons, against 275,842 tons for the corresponding period last year—increase, 34,173 tons. The quantity sent from all the regions for the week was: Anthracite, 178,438 tons; bituminous, 20,580 tons—total, 199,018 tons; against 150,125 tons last year, and 24,568 tons bituminous—total, 172,693 tons for the same week of last year; increase of anthracite, 28,313 tons; decrease of bituminous, 1,988 tons. The quantity sent from all the regions for the year was: Anthracite, 19,018,637 tons; bituminous, 3,650,163 tons—total, 22,668,800 tons; against 20,536,651 tons anthracite, and 3,94,694 tons bituminous—total, 24,431,355 tons. Decrease of anthracite, 1,518,014 tons; decrease of bituminous, 245,531 tons—total decrease, 1,762,545 tons."

DEATH OF AN AGED WOMAN.

The following statements are taken from the Philadelphia Ledger of the 6th inst.: "Mrs. Hester Artis, of Kent County, Del., died Dec. 26, aged 116 years 7 months and 1 day. She was born at Jamestown, Va., and the record of the date of her birth is preserved in a family Bible. She was a young woman of 17 when her father was summoned to the war of the Revolution, and remembered the event when the nation, which she helped to found, was celebrating the Centennial anniversary of its birth. Mrs. Artis had a daughter aged 80 years. Living with her at the time of her death, and had many relatives living in Philadelphia, whom she visited as late as the Fall of 1875. She was too feeble to visit the city during the Centennial Exhibition."

RELIGIOUS LITERATURE.

REV. DR. CHAPIN'S SERMONS.

This attractive little volume of somewhat over 200 pages is the last of Dr. Chapin's many contributions to our religious literature, and it has especial interest for friends and readers, because it consists of discourses selected by him from his preaching in this City for nearly 30 years. He came hither in the eventful and stormy year 1848, and he has gone from his first position in Murray street, successively to the church on Broadway, that was once occupied by Dr. Bellows' congregation, and to his present location on Fifth avenue and Forty-fifth street, where he enjoys the rare privilege of full pews and no debt—a fact creditable alike to his eloquence, and to the good sense of his leading men. He has published about a dozen volumes of a religious character before, but this volume appears to differ from them in having a larger range and a broader platform, as if the preacher had more an eye to elementary principles and to the general public rather than particular occasions or states of mind. These twelve sermons evidently bear upon the great practical questions of religion, and aim to state the foundation of godly faith and life. They are not at all controversial in the usual sense of that term, and they hardly indicate to what denomination the preacher belongs; yet they are not wanting in the militant tone, for he has clearly before him the most pronounced forms of worldliness and unbelief, and he hits hard blows at the materialism of action and of thought that is so characteristic of our time. As to his doctrinal position, it is implied more by the absence of definitions than by statements of opinion, and so far as these sermons go in their expressions of Christian belief, there is nothing in them that Dr. Arnold or President Woolsey could not have included in their published discourses. His affirmation of the essential characteristic of the person of Christ is one that these wise and devout men could accept, and only ask that it might be more explicit. He asks "How shall we answer the question, 'What is the power behind nature to which the soul bears witness, and what are man's relations to it?' " and his reply is, "Nothing but Christ, who is the image of the invisible God; Christ who shows us what God is, and what are His relations to us, inasmuch as He shows us the Father. He fills up this immensity of the unknown with an all-pervading spirit of holiness and love. In the place of laws and forces He gives us a living personality." Again he says: "I maintain, then, that this is the peculiarity of Christianity. Its central fact was a living person coming into the world." So far the master spirits of Christendom would agree with him, and the question would afterward arise how to define the nature of the person who came thus to manifest the Father, to give the Divine Spirit, and to found the perpetual Church.

Dr. Chapin's characteristics as a writer are clearness, strength, and intensity; and his delivery is in keeping with his composition. He is one of the most eloquent of living preachers, and in some respects as an orator he has no equal. In his best passages he has a dramatic force, a telling sympathy, and a tingling magnetism that stir the dullest pulse and kindle fire in the hearts of stout men of affairs, who are stone-cold under ordinary preaching. His ready temptation is to a certain grandiloquence that waits upon his fullness of words and his quick emotion and his restless fancy. There are some passages in this volume that indicate this infirmity, and call for the pruning-knife, as in the description of the unsatisfied eye ranging over the earth, on page 154, where he speaks of "clots of teeming cities, as motley as their men," in language that is neither lovely nor true in expressing the effect of distant cities upon the observing eye. But again, there are sentences that make the reader delight in the author's full diction, as in a field of green turf and bright and fragrant flowers, with pavilions carpeted with cloth of gold. Here is a good specimen of these sentences, from the sermon on Samson: "There is no such inspiration in Austerlitz as in Thermopylæ. The fervor of patriotism is kindled quicker by the bloody snows of Valley Forge than by the triumphant cannon of Yorktown. In her slow procession around the world, Liberty bears not laurel wreaths and flags of victory, but the pale and bleeding effigies of her martyrs. The defeat of every good cause foretokens its resurrection as the harvest springs from the buried seed."

These twelve sermons differ much in their tone and method, while they agree in essential purpose. Perhaps those which turn most upon a personal character or history, like "The Earnest Touch," "Ruth," "John and Herod," "Samson," and the two or three that treat directly of Christ in personal relation, such as "The Transfiguring Look," "Christ Walking on the Sea," and "The Christian Revelation," will most win and impress the majority of readers. Perhaps the strongest sermon is that which ends the volume, and was once preached at the close of the year, on "The Eternity of God," which presents the vastness and majesty of this truth, the necessity of this truth in the reason of things, and the effect of this truth upon human dependence, confidence, and responsibility. Here is a passage that solid thinkers, like Franklin, or Daniel Webster, could not have heard without conviction, and which cannot but be edifying to every thoughtful reader, especially at this season: "The eternity of God assures our own imperishableness. Of all created things here below, we, in our essential peculiarity, abide. Among all these forms of nature, us, atoms of mortality, God gathers up and never loses. He is not a God of the dead, but of the living. All the generations that have been swept from earth are before Him, held in reservation, held in perpetual life. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—gone we cannot tell whither, dwelling we cannot tell where—He sees them all. The long file of heroes and martyrs, good men and true men, and patient sufferers and humble toilers, and husbands and wives, dear relationships of every kind, souls eloquent with genius and strong with virtue, long since hidden from our sight; gray grandsires left out until frost, and sweet babes that have bowed to the sickle like violets in June, and have been mixed in with shocks of corn fully ripe—all these have been gathered into the relentless garner. May the poor castaways, the unregarded dwellers in nooks and dark places of the earth, crusted and battered coins, yet with the divine image and superscription, not utterly effaced from them—every atom of a soul, every fibre of the general humanity, He has gathered up, He will keep. Living once, they live forever. Because He lives, they shall live also. A child once born to us is our child forever."

We are glad to call attention to these strong and brilliant sermons, and to express our sense of the author's long and good service to morals and religion in this City. There is room for still more contribution from his full treasury. They that have often listened to his preaching know that he has still more searching and uplifting lessons, compared with which these are rather teachings of the gate than confidences of the shrine.

ORTHODOXY AND REVIVALISM.

ORTHODOXY AND REVIVALISM. Sermons on Vital Questions at Issue between Popular Evangelical Christianity, especially as represented by the Revivalism of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and the Rational Religious Thought of the Time. By Rev. J. T. SUNDERLAND, Pastor of Fourth Unitarian Church, Chicago. New-York: JAMES MILLER. 1877.

This book is quite remarkable in having such intense theological hatred in union with so little personal rancor. Mr. Sunderland rejects, and seems utterly to hate, Mr. Moody's peculiar evangelical doctrines and revival methods, without having any ill-will toward him as a man. It is seldom that in these times we have so thorough-going a piece of theological controversy, and the tone of it is much like that of 40 or 50 years ago, when the Unitarian agitation was so violent in Massachusetts. Probably the cause of this vehemence is in the personal experience and position of the author, and his relation to Mr. Moody. It seems that Mr. Sunderland went from orthodoxy to Unitarianism, while Mr. Moody went from Unitarianism to orthodoxy; and not only have they thus crossed each other's theological position, but they have repeatedly run against each other in their paths of labor. Mr. Moody went from Northfield, Mass., to Chicago, and Mr. Sunderland went from Chicago to Northfield, where he was minister of the Unitarian church to which Mr. Moody's mother belonged. Afterward, Mr. Sunderland returned to Chicago, to be minister of the Fourth Unitarian Church there, and Mr. Moody has been lately working there, greatly to the disturbance of Mr. Sunderland's composure and to the excitement of his theological ire.

This volume, which gives the result of Mr. Sunderland's discussion of the points at issue between him and Mr. Moody, is a vigorous and quite a readable book, marked by evident sincerity and earnestness; and, although without any claims to scholarly learning, it is enriched by considerable fresh information, and by a very thorough-going account of personal experience. It consists of twelve sermons of recent date, and of a closing chapter of personal experience. The drift of the whole is in one direction. The volume is an assault against what the author calls orthodoxy, and what goes by that name among Mr. Moody's followers. He denounces this system as not taught by Christ, as unreasonable, as essentially immoral, and as having usurped authority in the Church in a time and manner that can be clearly traced in history. He insists upon the mischievous influence of this system, as shown in the drift of the age away from religion, and in repelling the modern mind from Christianity by setting faith against reason, and by giving a morbid craving for an infallible book, to be received with passive credulity, instead of writings that are to be reasonably interpreted. As to Mr. Moody's success, the author thinks that it has been much exaggerated, that the excitement has interfered with regular church work and done little to build up practical religion, while the sensation that has been created has been for the most part caused by Mr. Moody's peculiar traits, his physical force, his strange faculty of believing and affirming vehemently the narrowest superstitions, and his unswerving confidence. He ascribes great power also to Mr. Sankey's music, and to the shrewd business management which has been shown in getting the help of the churches and in providing places of meeting and packing them with crowds. The author denies that Mr. Moody reaches the masses to the extent maintained by his friends, but that his audiences are made up largely from the ranks of Christian professors who have curiosity to see exciting scenes, and that the multitudes who attend the meetings are not put into the way of wholesome reading and methodical improvement, but, on the other hand, are tempted to mistake a spasmodic agitation for permanent reformation, the fatal error that so generally has followed the track of revivals.

The author advocates the ideal Church, that is to promote the highest and most enduring good, to extend as far as possible the circle of its membership, and to work as far as possible outside of itself, and do good everywhere. The great thing, he believes, is to teach men how to live now the true life of body and soul, of humanity and faith, and to find in Christ, not salvation from Adam's sin, from eternal hell, and from God's wrath, but from ignorance and fear and sinful living, by Christian instruction, example, and love. He commends the scientists of our day greatly for their love of truth, their patient and earnest devotion to work, their living for something better than money, their sincerity, thoroughness, moral courage, and faith. He defines Darwinism and thinks it damaging to orthodoxy, but not inconsistent with belief in God, the immortality of the soul, and the right use of the Bible as a book of morals and devotion.

The closing chapter gives his religious experience, and he expresses his obligations to Robertson, Ruskin, and George Macdonald for opening his eyes to the light, and starting him on the way to his present position of conviction and peace in what he prefers to call Rational Christianity, and which, he thinks, will be called for some time longer Unitarianism, but not always, as the name is too narrow to cover the whole ground which is to be occupied by the new and growing Liberalism.

We have given what seems to us to be a fair account of the fresh and somewhat fierce sermons that make up this volume. The judgment of cool, enlightened criticism will allow the ability and honesty of the writer, and not deny that some of his strictures upon the thinking and methods of the day are just and ought to be heard. Yet this judgment will not spare the author's own prejudices and shortcomings. He is evidently a bright ideal thinker and reformer, who brings little sound learning and thorough philosophy to his darling task of making the world and Christendom over anew. His knowledge of the Ancient Church and its theology is slight and apparently borrowed from the pages of superficial partisans. He confounds the opinions of certain sects with the historical creeds of Christianity, and ascribes to these latter extravagances that do not belong to them. Perhaps the greatest objection to his whole strain of thinking is the free and easy way with which he dismisses the claims of the historical Church that has done so much to win the world to God, and the complacency with which he contemplates his roseate design for his ideal Church; which being without scriptural or historical foundations, will appear to scholars and experienced thinkers a Church in the air in full fellowship with the many handsome castles in that same aerial region.

As to the personal relation between Mr. Moody and Mr. Sunderland, a great many intelligent persons who will admit the truth of the latter's criticisms in a degree, will insist, as we do, that the great revivalist, with all his imperfections, does substantial good, and belongs to the powerful class of men who bring to bear a divine force upon the world.

MRS. BEECHER STOWE'S DEVOTIONAL MANUAL.

FOOTSTEPS OF THE MASTER. By HARRIET BEECHER STOWE. New-York: J. B. FORD & Co. 1877.

This handsome volume presents the author of Uncle Tom's Cabin as a teacher of religion in a tone of thought and feeling not only quite devout but very churchly. Her meditations take the order of the Christian year, and dwell upon the seasons of Advent, Christmas, Epiphany, Lent, Passion Week, Easter, Ascension, and Whitsuntide, with the help of well chosen and well engraved illustrations, and with choice hymns from such master spirits as Wesley, Keble, Xavier, Faber, Cowper, Paul Gerhardt, Mrs. Browning, and with a good representation from living poets, in which the author herself has such interesting associates as O. W. Holmes and Alfred Tennyson. The five hymns and sacred poems by Mrs. Stowe of themselves give value to the volume.

The aim of the book is to meet the inquiring, doubting spirit of our time—not by theological definitions or logical argument, but by positive faith and living charity. The old foundation is taken for granted at the beginning, and under the Hebrew name of Jehovah the ancient creed is quoted in behalf of the Divinity of Jesus Christ and the Incarnation. There are marks of careful study in some of the chapters, as for example in chapter II.—"Christ in Prophecy"—in which the author surveys the whole field of Messianic promise, and with discriminating emphasis points out the reasons for giving the Book of Daniel more respect than is given to it by the modern Rationalist school. In other passages, as in treating the "Temptations of Jesus," the author does not quarrel with the modern school of interpreters, and presents the struggle in the mind of the Master with the power of evil without insisting upon a visible appearance of Satan. Such chapters as "Our Lord's Bible," "The Friendships of Jesus," "Christ the Revealer of God's Sympathy," "The Church of the Master," and "Christ's Second Life in His Followers" are full of light as well as comfort. In some cases thoughtful readers might ask for more fullness of instruction, as in the Whit-Sunday meditation; but taking the book as a whole, it deserves to be spoken of only with praise, and to be commended as a beautiful and helpful gift at this season, and, indeed, at all seasons.

PREACHING TO BOYS.

IN THE DAYS OF THY YOUTH. Sermons on Practical Subjects, preached at Marlborough College, from 1871 to 1876. By F. W. FARRAR, D. D., F. R. S. Canon of Westminster, Rector of St. Margaret's, Westminster, Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, &c., New-York: MACMILLAN & Co. 1876.

Boys are a persistent fact and an irrepressible force in the world. They are sure to make their appearance in a certain providential ratio to girls, and certain as they are to make a considerable share of mischief, they are generally welcome—not without good hopes of their turning out well in spite of their pranks. "Boys will be boys," the old proverb says, and says it not wholly in censure, but with evident knowledge that there are two sides even to bovish roguery, and that there is promise of manly fortitude and fidelity in the restless feet and fists that do not always move as parents and teachers command. Boys are the raw material for men, and in the making of it up wisdom insists upon our discerning all the capacities of the raw material, and especially upon our not overlooking the higher powers and susceptibilities of the mind and heart which belong to the sphere of morality and religion and promise good to come.

Dr. Farrar seems to know boys well, and while he does not forget that they are fond of foot-ball and cricket, and are very partial to vacations and play days, he appreciates fully the serious side of their nature and life. The thirty-nine sermons in this volume are to be welcomed as a rich and wholesome contribution to the religious literature of our time, and as of especial value to all homes and schools where boys are to be taught and trained in the higher culture of the conscience and faith. These sermons are not to be regarded as representing the whole scope of the author's preaching at Marlborough College, for they are selected as being especially practical, while he has omitted the many sermons that were especially doctrinal, ecclesiastical, expository or theological. They are intended to present what was most characteristic in his ordinary preaching to his scholars, and they are published as they were preached, without subsequent alteration or elaboration. They average in length about 10 pages—each page of 34 lines—and apparently required not far from 30 minutes in delivery—a time beyond the usual length of fashionable Episcopalian sermons, and implying a creditable amount of interest and attention on the part of the young listeners. The topics are most varied, and they go over a wide field of instruction. Some of them relate directly to the experience of boys at school—such as "School and Home," "The Objects of School Life," "The History and Hopes of a Public School," "Runners for a Prize," "Holiday Advice," "School Games," "Last Words." It is really quite refreshing to see this mature scholar and learned theologian holding forth to a set of bright and restless urchins upon the uses and abuses of cricket, and exhorting them to go into the sport with plucky spirit—and yet show the error of making much account of muscular ability in comparison with the higher arts of culture and graces of character. Here is a good word for the athletes of Harvard, Yale, Cornell, and Columbia, and what is true of the cricket bat is true of the oar: "A boy is often in danger of wholly overestimating the value of his athletic success. Many of the best men—like Bishop Coleridge Pattison—have been good cricketers, and so have been and are many of the best boys that I have ever known; but yet the physical gifts which may make a successful cricketer are not, you must remember, incompatable with—and not once or twice only have I seen them combined with—much that is utterly hateful and utterly contemptible; so that if it be absurd and wrong to be vain of any gift, it is more than ever absurd and wrong to be vain of those which are among the lowest. Now while you play with all heartiness, do not forget that games, however useful and delightful, are not of first rate, not even of third, fourth, or fifth—scarcely even of tenth-rate importance in comparison with higher things."

Other sermons touch upon faults and duties that some home especially to boys, such as "Little Faithfulnesses." "The Right Use of Speech," "Smoldering Lamps," "Innocent Happiness," "Self Conquest," "The Peril of Waste," "How to Keep Good Resolutions," "How to Resist the Devil," "The Courage of Saints Possible in Boyhood." In fact, the whole book is directed to the mind and heart of school boys, and such general subjects of ethics and religion as "Standing Before God," "Hungering and Thirsting after Righteousness," "Quietness and Confidence," "Thinking of God," "The Omnipotence of Prayer, "The Temple of the God of Truth," are treated with directness, and sympathy of thought and fullness of illustration quite in keeping with the years and experience of the assembly of listeners. Sometimes, indeed, we have misgivings lest the preacher is shooting over the heads of his hearers, not so much when he quotes the ringing words of Shakespeare and Milton, Moore and Byron, as when he ventures upon the old classic authors, and quotes Latin and Greek, sometimes without translation. But he knew, undoubtedly, to whom he was speaking, and he understood that he gave zest to his discourse by calling his boys to keep their ears open, and to prove that their grammar and dictionary had been of some actual use to them by keeping them up to the level of their accomplished Head Master's mind.

Perhaps the most striking characteristic of these sermons is their ethical vigor, their downright manhood out of the root of positive faith. The truths and ordinances of religion are not kept back, but are constantly accepted as the ground of duty, and the most emphatic thing in the preacher's work is his earnest and telling call to solid principle, truthful speech, steadfast fidelity. The two sermons on "The Continuity of Godliness" and "The Homage of Sainthood" are an honor to the heart of old England and a rich gift to our new America in their call to unbroken rectitude and manly loyalty. Here is a noble thought for every father and son: "The life of Milton, with all its blindness and its poverty, and its unsuccess, and its persecutions, seems to me in its continuity of goodness, a finer poem and one of God's own inspiring, than ever the intellect of Shakespeare conceived. No 'wild oats theory,' no familiarity with wickedness, no indifferent tampering with evil, no vanishing of bad passions with the thin and poisonous veneer of sham philosophy, could have produced such a man as this." Again, "It is, then, to this 'hill-top of sanctity and goodness, above which there is no other ascent but to the love of God,' that I would lead your footsteps, that I would turn your eyes."

In the sermon on "The Courage of Sainthood," the rich and stirring illustrations are drawn from the heroes of peace as well as of war, and the story of the monk Telemachus, who stopped the fights of the Roman circus by leaping into the midst of the gladiators, and dying to conquer peace forever after from that bloody ground, is told with thrilling effect. The book is a noble contribution to religion and education in both hemispheres. The author of the last, and most acceptable, Life of Christ has proved his fitness for his task by this good service to the lambs of the Good Shepherd's fold. It is a book that our boys will be willing to read.

TWO PHASES OF THE SITUATION.

AS SEEN BY AN EX-CONFEDERATE WHO DID NOT VOTE FOR HAYES—A PROSPEROUS SOUTH AND A RUINED NORTH—PLAYING THE ROLES OF PATRIOTS.

The following document, which was written by one of the most prominent and best-known Democrats in the South-west, has been received at this office. It is believed that the writer furnishes a correct view of the feeling indulged in by many members of his own party. At his particular request the writer's name is withheld from the public, but THE TIMES vouches for that prominence which has already been given him:

I.

The day after the St. Louis Convention two Southern ex-Generals sat down to breakfast at the Laclede Hotel in that city. One remarked: "General, we are the Union Party now, and we will win this election, sure. Let the Radicals rebel if they dare."

"Yes," replied the other, "we could show them a thing or two. Wouldn't it be splendid for us to march into Boston at the head of Union brigades!" And both laughed joyously at the idea.

A third person, an ex-Confederate also, sat at the same table and heard these remarks, though he did not know the others personally, nor their names. That they had been in the Army he only ascertained from their addressing each other as "General." The present organization throughout the North by the supporters of Mr. Tilden, and the threats of war unless he is inaugurated, are based upon the understanding that his partisans North and South are to play the rôles of patriots, under the disguise of the Union, or there is another scheme on foot which is deeper still.

Under the "Union dodge," the men who really have preserved the Union, and who seek still to maintain the rights of all citizens, and to prevent the annullment of the results of the war—the veteran soldiers and all their friends and co-operators—are to be treated as rebels. Revenge for the reverses of 1861-5 is to be sought by means of the confederated armies of Northern and Southern Democrats, which will march into the real Union States in so-called "Union brigades," and will lay waste and destroy the possessions of those who fail to recognize the new Government. The Northern conspirators are to open the fight and to bear the brunt of the contest, to show that they are truly in earnest; and then the tried and veteran legions of the Confederate Armies, with the flower of their youth, since grown up, are to rush forward at the word of command and carry everything before them, resistlessly, overwhelmingly, inevitably.

The rebels of the North are to learn what confiscation means; nay, some perhaps may be hanged, drawn, and quartered, as proper examples. The losses of the South are to be equalized from the riches of the North, and "such other fit, proper, and suitable relief is to be accorded as to Mr. Tilden, to equity, and to the circumstances of the case seems just and meet."

II.

But there is a shrewder, bolder game than all this, which Southern leaders have the brains to originate and the nerve to play. There is a sneering tone now throughout the South as to the purposes of Northern Democrats. They are taunted, as it were, with lack of earnestness, want of resolution, and absence of bravery requisite for action. The South proposes to "follow," and not to lead. Northern partisans must set up the standard of revolt against the constituted authorities, State as well as Federal. Without State organization, without even a single Legislature, in the North to back them with money, arms, munitions, or provisions, the bone and sinew of the Northern Democracy are called to come out in their strength by the million, and to make war upon Gov. Hayes, if he shall be inaugurated. The contest is to be one against a Government acknowledged and backed by the Senate and the House, the Judiciary, the Army and Navy, with their arsenals and vast supplies of arms and munitions; the State Legislatures, the Governors, all the powerful ramifications of Federal machinery, and all the untold millions of money, which the past experience of 1861-5 proves that the capitalists of the North are ready to pour into the coffers of the regular Government upon the firing of the first hostile gun. This scheme might work to a certain point. Five hundred thousand inflamed and impulsive men might rise in insurrection, seize provisions, and supply themselves with arms and munitions. They might seize, and even hold, cities and States for a time. They might tax the Federal Government to tremendous exertions and terrible sacrifice. They might succeed in the flaming torch and the bloody sword to set the seal of devastation upon hitherto prosperous communities, and the wail of the orphan and the widow might rise unheeded until it reaches the portals of heaven. The hecatomb of victims might have their names written in their bleeding upon records bread as our vast domain, and fire the whole North with a blaze of inflamed millions over our land, until the crimson gore obliterated all other colors from the vision. Our debt might become so great that no value would attach to our promises to pay, and ruin, such as blights no other land, might fall upon us. And yet, with all that, the defenders of the regular Government would conquer in the end, and the vanquished foe, when both sides were exhausted and unable to continue the strife, would blankly look at his conqueror and ask, "Where are our Southern brethren?"

Look at them to-day, with a Confederate officer at the helm of Government in every State except Delaware and Maryland. In the contested States of Florida, South Carolina, and Louisiana the Governments are headed by leading Confederates, organized and claiming the power. Upon the first onset in the North the Southern leaders would cry out: "On, ye gallant warriors. Maintain your ground while we take measures to prevent a war of races in our midst, and the midnight burning of our homes, and the assassination of our wives and little ones. Then we will be with you to render invincible your heroic uprising to vindicate liberty and to sustain the Constitution."

The South, under its able leaders, would consume months or years to carry out those precautionary measures, and would never have surplus forces to send in aid of the constitutional vindicators. But they would arm and drill every able-bodied man within their borders, and prepare for their day of action. When restand reinvincible, the Confederacy would say: "We were for peace, and you madmen of the North heedlessly rushed into war. We cannot partake of your ruin, nor indorse your folly. We kindly offer you our services to settle your differences, and to assuage your bitterness. But excuse us from further association with your affairs, as we are a contented people, homogeneous in our interests and in our ideas, and now prepared to undo all that you forced upon us. If you don't like it, we are sorry, but you can't help it."

And with this "good morning," there would be a prosperous Southern Confederacy established by the side of a ruined North.

THE FATAL GLOVE CONTEST.

The coroner's jury in Boston, summoned to investigate the cause of the death of Daniel Davidson, after engaging in a glove match, has returned the following verdict: "That the said Daniel Davidson came to his death on Thursday, Dec. 28, 1876, at about the hour of 5:40 P. M., at Revere Hall, situated in said Boston, by reason of exhaustion resulting from organic disease of the heart, aggravated by the violent exercise incidental to the glove contest in which he participated, at the place and time above mentioned."

AN OLD MAN'S SUIT.

The Utica Observer says: "A novel suit was tried before a Justice of the Peace in Lewie County recently. Edwin Pitcher, a blithe lad of 70 Summers, sued his betrothed—a spruce young lady of 22—for the recovery of a dress which he had given her. It seemed hard to Edwin that the maiden should wait until the appointed day and then back out, but it seemed harder still that she should persist in keeping the wedding garment which he had paid for. It is our sad duty to relate that the jury refused him their sympathies and the dress as well."

THE FASHIONS.

LATEST SUGGESTIONS OF LA MODE.

RECEPTION AND EVENING TOILETS—NOVEL SHADES—THE RUSSIAN BLOUSE—THE USES OF PLUSH—NEW COIFFURES.

Now that the holidays are past, ladies will return to their reception and evening toilets with renewed gusto. Most evening dresses are cut low in the neck and have short sleeves. This style should only be resorted to by ladies who are the fortunate possessors of handsome necks and arms. Unluckily this suggestion is not always adopted, dress-makers being generally more censurable for this than their costumers. A ball dress, although it does not so appear, is an article which it is most difficult to cut well, and will sooner betray the hand of an expert, or that of an inferior dress-maker than anything else. To cut it successfully, it is necessary to consider well the form of the neck and shoulders. Several rules relating to this matter may be of service. In order to conceal angular shoulders the square low neck form is by far the most suitable. The full, low neck is better calculated to show to advantage a handsome neck and shoulders. In some instances the waist is most becoming high in front and quite low in the back, and in many cases it is the reverse. For a very large arm the short sleeves may have a full of lace and a spray of flowers, while long, thin arms exact small sleeves with puffings and full trimmings. It is only the handsomest arms that can dispense with adornment. A detail to be observed is, that when the neck is very thin, a pearl necklace is most becoming. A velvet band, however broad it may be, cannot answer the same purpose, as, instead of concealing the defects, it makes them still more apparent. All the most stylish toilets will be embroidered and worked with chenille, which is very expensive. The most simple arrangement in this line is the écharpe-tablier of crossed chenille, made like a hair-net.

For evening wear, tulle, gauze, crape, and tarlatan are always employed, as they make the most becoming dresses for balls. Flounces fluted, puffed, shirred, and tucked are the most suitable trimmings for these skirts. The upper part, whether made in a tunique Juive, a cuirass, with scarf to correspond, or any other model, may be of crepe de chine or faille. These are the materials used with light skirts with long frou-frou trains. White tarletan makes a very appropriate dress for a young lady's début in society. The white taffetas skirt has a short train covered to the top with fluted flounces about five inches deep, with the borders pinked out instead of being hemmed, and, consequently, much lighter. The "corsage à la vierge," which is somewhat low in the neck, is of white taffetas covered with tarletan. The basque is rounded, back and front. The waist is surrounded by a tarletan bertha, fluted. On one side is a bunch of white flowers and leaves. From the point of the waist falls a white faille scarf, which surrounds the dress and forms upon the train a handsome bow, ornamented with white flowers.

A new shade for evening wear is "vert tilleul." This new shade is charming, it is a silvery green, almost white. Then there is amber dust, and pink coral dust, both beautiful shades for evening wear. A gauze and faille toilet has just been made in "vert tilleul," trimmed with a garland of daisies and large leaves, all in the handsomest shade of carombier, which has quite a peculiar effect. White mousseline de soie is very pretty for young ladies, when trimmed with roses.

White Spanish blonde mantillas are used either as fichu scarfs, very rich aprons, or as a scarf to throw over the head. With the addition of a tuft of flowers this mantilla makes a charming evening coiffure.

Lace ammonières are placed over silk and velvet. Black lace and tulle worked with chenille are worn over colored silks such as red and yellow, and tone down the gaudy effect of these hues.

The pocket handkerchief is now an important item of a lady's toilet. Some are small batiste squares with colored bodors. Some are scolloped around in one or several rows. There are colored and white handkerchiefs figured in various ways. The dress handkerchief consists of fine embroideries and elegant laces with a small square piece of batiste in the centre. There are, besides, many other models too numerous to mention. The initial is still reckoned among the most elegant designs. The newest caprice in this line is to have the letters long, and so intertwined as to form peculiar animals. Upon gentlemen's handkerchiefs these letters are from three to four inches long. The monogram is also in very good taste. Whenever a monogram or initial is used it is in these designs.

Black faille dresses are no longer in fashion unless accompanied by a waist and train of "velours frappé." This velvet, with figures forming leaves, is just now the favorite dress. Visiting dresses of olive, navy blue, plum, and brown have nearly all waists, tuniques, and scarfs of this velvet.

Green in all shades seems to be the prevailing color, as well for street wear as for evening attire. This is the most trying color a person can wear, and it requires perfect fitting and trimming. For day wear, moss green, carmelite, plum, leather, and its shade known as "cinder biscuit," are all in vogue. In heavy silk armure there is London smoke, African violet, and bear's ear. With the exception of light silver and ash colors, all other shades are dark. Many polonaises are worn trimmed with fur. They are raised with a silk cording. Over the polonaise a basque sack is often worn. It is very tight-fitting and trimmed with fur matching that upon the polonaise. The skirt may be of brocar and matelasse, velvet, or corded silk. It has no flounce and is either trimmed with a band of fur, passementérie, or a very full ruching à la vieille," made of heavy corded silk, or else simply trimmed with a thick cording. The ammonière on the side is fastened to a Byzantine belt.

The Russian blouse forming a waist with a long basque, with a pleited back is quite becoming. A belt of oxidized silver is worn over the blouse, or one of heavy silk. The ammonière is embroidered, or has a cross in the color of the dress.

The change from puffs to draped scarfs and cuirasses, or the habit Louis XV., with a basque, is a very advantageous one. These garments are very long; immense trains are worn in the evening, and for morning and walking purposes short suits are made.

Shawls are decidedly to be in vogue again. The elegant India shawls are now very much headsomer in design and coloring than they were formerly. There is a certain stamp of stylishness which these shawls bear, and this makes their success certain. Once upon a time, when India shawls were in fashion, they were so generally worn that the eye became tired of seeing nothing else; now, if the happy medium can only be observed, and contections and suits continue in use with the shawls, to relieve their monotony, the fashion ought to be most welcome. Shawls are very useful when the seasons change and for carriage wear, and it is possible that they will be reserved exclusively for these purposes. It is, however, almost positive that they will only be worn on special occasions. One great advantage the India shawl possesses is that when a lady purchases an expensive contection she is sure to see an exact imitation upon her maid's shoulders, while it is not likely that she will ever be the case with India shawls. Several trousseaux have already been supplied with one or more of these shawls. Opera cloaks are also made of them.

The paletot Russe and the redingote are the confections most worn. The first is too well known to need description. The redingote is planned in several ways. Sometimes it is almost an exact copy of a man's overgarment, and is consequently perfectly plain; sometimes it is cut somewhat differently in the back, and rendered more expensive by the addition of velvet and faille trimmings. Redingotes are made of handsome cloth, such as black matelassé, with plain fronts, crossed by means of two rows of buttons. The back is cut up, and the side pieces are tight-fitting at the top, while on the lower part they form a rather full skirt. From the seam under the arm are revers fastened down by buttons. These revers are bound with velvet, and gracefully cut in a shape at the waist. The side pockets are placed very low, and trimmed with bias bands of velvet, buttons, and false button-holes. The Angot collar and the cuffs are of velvet. Why these pockets are thus placed, sometimes with the addition of another in the back, it is difficult to say, for they are neither convenient nor handsome; pickpockets are the only persons who can derive the slightest benefit from them.

A garment to replace the ulster is very long, and made of almond-colored cloth, with three collars and a double row of immense buttons. It is bordered with fur, velvet, small faille plaitings or braided galloon, in a darker shade.

Plush is more and more used, and new articles are continually being produced. The favorite shades are reddish-brown, carmelite, and iron-gray. The effect of plush is spoiled by any attempt to trim it with galloon. The fashionable establishments cover their ready-made garments with the everlasting galloon. A long chenille or silk tassel fringe is placed on the borders of some polonaises, and entirely conceals the lower part of the skirt.

An elegant visiting dress is made of plum colored velvet. The skirt is trimmed with a single faille ruching. The second skirt is pointed in front and raised on the left side, forming a large, hollow plait, which is lined with pale blue taffetas and bordered with light blue embroidered galloon. The faille annemière is trimmed with galloon placed on diagonally both ways, forming checks, with three tassels on the border. The cuirass waist has revers lined with blue; the sleeves have deep blue faille cuffs. They are trimmed as far as the elbow with galloon. The basque is oval in front and forms a habit in the back. The plum-colored felt hat is trimmed with a band blue plush twist and blue feathers. The small standing collar is trimmed with galloon.

An in-door dress may be of cloth and plum-colored velvet. The front of the skirt only is of velvet, heavily embroidered with yellow silk and bordered with yellow fringe mingled with gold. One side of the skirt falls three points over the front; it is bound with yellow, and adorned with buttons and false button-holes in the same color. The other side-piece is joined to the train, and also bound with yellow. The skirt is full in the back with the plaits shirred, here and there as far as the train, which falls in fan shape. Two velvet scarfs trimmed with fringe start from the middle of the waist in front, and are joined on the lower part of the skirt under a large bow. The cloth waist has a velvet piece up the front and back; these pieces are embroidered with yellow silk. The cloth falls over the velvet and is bound with yellow and trimmed with golden buttons and false button-holes. The seams project, and are bound with yellow. The sleeves have golden buttons upon the seam; they are very peculiar, being a combination of cloth and velvet. The cloth part is plaited, and the velvet cut out in large scollops, one of these forming the cuff. The outside of the sleeve is embroidered with yellow.

A robe de chambre may be of pale blue cashemire cut in princess shape, and very tight-fitting. The fullness of the skirt is made by plaits concealed under the middle seam and covered with a ribbon bow with long ends. The front has this peculiarity, that it is double, and sewed in the shoulder seams, around the arms and down the sides. These front pieces, which are not as broad as the others, are rounded at the top and open on the lower part, thus leaving the front of the waist well uncovered. This waist is closed with golden buttons and ornamented on either side with narrow golden and silver galloon. The small collar with turned-down fronts is trimmed with the same galloon. The whole garment, including the pocket and cuff, is trimmed with this galloon. Another garment of this kind is made of "tilleul" cashemire trimmed with embroidered galloon. The velvet skirt is Russian green. The velvet sleeves have cuffs adorned with galloon. Around the waist is a heavy cord drawing in the garment, hanging down the right side, and terminating in a tassel.

The following ways of arranging the hair will give an idea of the present fashion: For the house and for the street, the hair is parted across the back, falling rather low in the neck. A large piece of hair is taken on the top of the head, and firmly fastened, to serve as the foundation of the coiffure. The front hair is divided into small locks arranged in puffs and fastened to the piece on the top. Crimps are placed over this and partly covered with a large braid, which is taken around to the back of the head; then the back hair is taken up and mixed with this braid. The hair can be dressed in the same way, with the addition of a long catogan braid falling on the back of the neck. Another coiffure is composed of two small Russian bandeaux covering the forehead. The hair on one side is taken back and fastened to a small coil. The entire back of the head is covered with puffs well fastened. Down the back are two long curls. Another style is to raise all the hair, à la Chinoise, and tie it upon the top, with the exception of the hair over the temples, which is crimped a little underneath before it is raised. In front are crimps, and in the back are a braid and curls extending to the top. Through the centre of these puffs a plain lock of hair is taken across, forming a kind of bow. A becoming way of arranging the hair for full dress is to part it in front through the middle and across behind the ear. The front hair is crimped; the back is tied on the top of the head, so that the remainder of the hair can be fastened to it. A piece is then placed upon the back part of the top of the head, over which the wavy pieces of the hair are laid. The hair over the temples is raised, the ends forming small curls which mix with the loose hair in the back. The waves on the top are divided by two bands of velvet, or feathers are on the top and beads through the puffs in the back. Still another way is to make a crosswise part and form a toreador in the back. The front hair is divided into three parts and then divided again; each lock is crimped and turned around the finger to form a puff; each end is fastened on the top of the head; the hair falls low in the back.

In articles of lingerie there are several novelties. The "crimped Bréonne" is composed of a square piece of lace forming the breast-piece and taken around the neck, where it closes. Small bands of fine organdie are placed crosswise over the lace, pointed in red and blue points, and laid heading to heading. The square of lace is surrounded by a band of navy blue material, covered with white and red Bréonne embroidery. A lace ruching surrounds the neck. On the side is a red ribbon rosette. This square is placed over the dress and fastened down on each corner. For those persons who do not fancy the peculiarity of this style, the same article is made in the form of a tie, with very fine narrow ruched "tarchon" lace. It covers and surrounds the square. This ruched lace is also used very successfully for neck-ties. The ends of the ties gradually increase in width, and bear colored ribbon loops. Collars, small vests, and bows for the head and neck are made of plush combined with satin and black or white lace.

There is no limit to the quantity of lace which can be used for the flounces of the petticoat now in wear. The deep lower flounce has always one or several rows of open-work insertions.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

THE LATE MR. VANDERBILT.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE FUNERAL WHICH WILL OCCUR TO-DAY—THE RESULT OF THE POST-MORTEM EXAMINATION —ACTION OF THE SABBATH-SCHOOL TEACHERS.

The arrangements for the funeral of Commodore Vanderbilt were completed yesterday. The programme is substantially the same as published in THE TIMES of yesterday. Following is the order of arrangements: The family and the personal friends of the deceased will assemble at the house before 10 o'clock. The officials and employes of the several railway companies of which Mr. Vanderbilt was President, to the number of about 250, will meet at the Grand Central Depot, and proceed in a body to the house, where they will arrive about 9 o'clock. The casket containing the remains will be placed in the main hall of the house and an opportunity will be given to all the employes to view the body. At 10 o'clock the casket will be placed on a bier and carried to the Church of the Strangers, No. 259 Mercer street. The assemblage will follow on foot. Upon arriving at the church, the family and those invited to attend the funeral will enter and be seated, after which the doors of the church will be thrown open to the public. The funeral services will be very short and simple, and will be performed by Rev. Dr. Deems, Pastor of the church. There will be but little singing. Two of the Commodore's favorite hymns, "Rest for the weary" and "Sweet hour of prayer," and perhaps a chant will be sung. The funeral discourse will be pronounced by Rev. Dr. Deems. The body will then be placed in a hearse and conveyed to the Staten Island Ferry, followed by carriages containing the relatives and friends. At the ferry two steamers will be in waiting to carry the funeral party to Staten Island. Disembarking the procession will form and proceed to the old Moravian cemetery at New-Dorp, about four miles from the landing, where the body will be placed in the family vault, and the last rites will be performed. Here Dr. Deems will be assisted by the Pastor of the Moravian Church. Rev. Dr. Hatton, formerly Pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church in Washington Square, who was invited to take part in the services, will be unable to be present, as he has another engagement which he cannot break.

A post-mortem examination of the body was held yesterday afternoon, beginning at 2 o'clock and lasting three hours. It was conducted by Dr. Thomas E. Satterwaite and Dr. L. A. Stimson, assisted by Dr. Francis D. Buck, in the presence of Dr. Austin Flint, Sr., Dr. Jared Linsly, and Dr. Ellsworth Eliot. The brain was not examined. The heart was found to be smaller than usual and slightly adherent at the apex to the pericardium. The immediate cause of death was ulceration of the colon, with perforation and chronic inflammation of the bladder. The body was found to be very much emaciated.

The Sabbath-school teachers of the Church of the Strangers met last evening and adopted the following:

Resolved, That while with all men we stand in admiration and reverence before the wonderful abilities and success of the greatest business man in the world, we also recognize a higher quality than mere business talent and a truer standard of judgment than success—that which seeks to honor God and bless mankind. These qualities were possessed to a degree know only to those who knew him best, and in the latter days of his life, whose simple Christian faith cast a mellow light of true nobleness over his whole career and revealed most truly the inner nature of the man. That we witness in the gift and endowment of the Church of the Strangers and in his continued interest in its spiritual and pecuniary prosperity, and also in his constant interest in the Sabbath-school and thoughtfulness, even upon the bed of death, one of the last acts of his busy life being the sending of a gift to the Sabbath-school for the purpose of supplying the children with Christmas presents.

We mourn the departure of a great man and a great friend, yet not without hope, rejoicing that he went from earth resting upon the staff of a firm and humble Christian faith.

We tender our heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved family, and join with them, the church, and the world in mourning the departure, though full of days and crowned with honor, of a great man, a true friend, and a public benefactor.

By the death of Mr. Vanderbilt a vacancy is created in the Board of Directors of the New-York, New-Haven and Hartford Railroad. The annual meeting will be held in Hartford next Wednesday. Two millions of the stock are held in Hartford, and only one citizen of that place is in the Board of Directors, and it is expected that Commodore Vanderbilt's successor will be a Hartford man.

MR. VANDERBILT'S FIRST APPEARANCE IN THE CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS.

The Church of the Strangers was presented by Commodore Vanderbilt to Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems in the Summer of 1870, and after being put in thorough repair was formally opened on the first Sunday in October of the same year. Among the gentlemen present were Commodore Vanderbilt, Thurlow Weed, Horace Greeley, Peter Cooper, Daniel Drew, William M. Evarts, William F. Havemeyer, Algernon S. Sullivan, Stewart L. Woodford, William E. Dodge, Morris K. Jesup, James Lorimer Graham, and E. I. Jeffray, besides many prominent clergymen in this City and vicinity. Dr. Deems requested the ushers to escort all clergymen to seats provided for them in the pulpit. One enthusiastic usher in obedience to these instructions searched for a victim and was finally rewarded by seeing an elderly gentleman, wearing a white neck-tie, alight from a carriage. He approached him, and taking his arm, led him up the main aisle towards the pulpit. Dr. Deems met the elderly gentleman and his escort, and introduced the astonished usher to the former. The elderly gentleman was Commodore Vanderbilt and not a clergyman. The surprise of the usher was great. He made an apology to the Commodore, who remarked as he took a seat in one of the pews. "That's not the first time I have been taken for a clergymen. No apology is necessary."

THE NEW-YORK DEMOCRACY.

ANTI-TAMMANY PREPARING FOR A REORGANIZATION OF THE PARTY—WHAT THE CHAIRMAN OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE SAYS.

The Executive Committee of the Anti-Tammany Democracy recently appointed a committee of seven to arrange for a reorganization of the party for the ensuing year. The committee was composed of Senator Francis M. Bixby, Hon. Emanuel B. Hart, and Messrs. John D. Conghlin, William P. Mitchell, George H. Purser, Denis Burns, and Thomas Mackeller. The committee met yesterday afternoon in Senator Bixby's office, No. 23 Park row. Senator Bixby presided, and Mr. Conghlin acted as Secretary. It was resolved that the representatives in the County Committee for 1877 should be in the ratio of one delegate from each Assembly District for each 200 votes cast in the district at the last election for the Democratic Electoral ticket, and that the Executive Committee should have one member for each 10 in the County Committee. This will give a County Committee of a little over 500 members, and an Executive Committee composed of about 50. An adjournment was then taken until 2 o'clock next Saturday afternoon, when a call will be issued for primaries to elect delegates to form the County Committee for 1877.

Mr. Emanuel B. Hart, Chairman of the Executive Committee, which virtually controls the Anti-Tammany organization, on being questioned yesterday in relation to the present position and future intentions of the Anti-Tammany party, said that the support given by Anti-Tammany to Tammany candidates at the last election was given under peculiar circumstances, and was no indication of the course which the Anti-Tammany organization would pursue in the future. It had been reported that several prominent Anti-Tammany members had left the organization, and had been elected delegates to the Tammany General Committee for 1877, and, to fortify this statement, she names of ex-Senator Benjamin Wood, ex-Assemblyman George W. Plunkitt, Judge Butler H. Bixby, ex-Supervisor James Hayes, and Mr. John S. Hyatt, one of the Anti-Tammany candidates for Alderman at-Large at the election in 1875, were given. The fact was he said that the only real defection from Anti-Tammany occurred in the case of Mr. Plunkitt. Mr. Wood had retired from the Anti-Tammany organization a year ago, and had declined to be re-elected as a delegate to the County Committee. Judge Bixby was not a member of the County Committee for 1876, and there were complications in his Assembly District which would easily explain his present position. Mr. Hayes had run in opposition to James J. Slevin, to lead a delegation from the Third Assembly District to the Tammany General Committee, and had been beaten, and Mr. Hyatt was comparatively a new man, whom Anti-Tammany had taken up on account of his respectability and supposed influence in the Thirteenth Assembly District. As to ex-Senator O'Brien, he had announced his determination not to take any active part in politics for the next two or three years.

COAL PRODUCTION.

A PROPOSED NEW COMBINATION OF LEADING COMPANIES TO LIMIT THE SUPPLY —VIEWS OF PRESIDENTS DICKSON AND SLOAN—ATTITUDE OF THE PENNSYLVANIA COAL COMPANY.

The leading coal companies having their offices in this City were yesterday interrogated through their representative officers in regard to the reported proposed combination between the companies for the purpose of limiting and regulating the production of anthracite coal. It has been understood among the managers for some time that a new effort would be made to secure combined action, but that in the event of any arrangement the question of prices was not to be touched, as it was known that any proposition embodying restrictions of that kind would inevitably fail. It was deemed best not to begin the movement toward this combination by calling together the coal companies, but by first feeling the pulse of the miners, by eliciting from them an expression of opinion as to what would be their desire under the circumstances. To that end the suggestion was thrown out that the wages of miners would be reduced, in order that the companies might, by producing at a lower figure, be able to maintain the low rates and yet make a profit in their business. It was soon made evident that a reduction of wages would be but an indirect way to secure the starvation of the miners. On Thursday, therefore, a meeting of operators and shippers was held in Manch Chunk, who came together, it is represented, to appoint some one who should communicate to the mining and transporting companies their desire that the production and shipment of anthracite coal should be curtailed or suspended, so that the supply should be adapted to the demand. At this meeting Dr. G. B. Linderman and one or two others were appointed to represent the miners and shippers. As Dr. Linderman is a relative and business friend to Mr. Asa Packer, of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, this nomination is construed by some into an indication that the Lehigh Valley Road has taken the initiative. By others this is doubted, and it is said that a proposition from the Lehigh road would inevitably fail, as that company was the first to break faith in the last combination. At any rate, the meeting of the miners at Manch Chunk is admitted to be a roundabout way of bringing the railroad companies together in conference, an excuse for the attempt undoubtedly about to be made to secure concerted action that will restore operations in coal to a more satisfactory basis for the operators and transporting companies. It was reported that the companies which had already signified their willingness to enter into a combination were the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, and, the New-Jersey Central Coal Company.

Mr. Thomas F. Dickson, President of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, said to a reporter of THE TIMES that all he knew of the proposed combination he had learned from the newspaper reports about it. The company of which he is President had not received no invitation to enter into any combination with the other companies named. He, in common with all other transporters and producers of coal, was very well aware that some arrangement should be made by which the coal market should not constantly be supplied with more coal than was needed. The market had now been flooded for months, and the coal companies had been engaged in the charitable work of giving coal away. This could not last long. While he had not been invited to join in any combination, he thought the Delaware and Hudson Company was disposed to cooperate for the purpose of regulating the supply of coal, and that some arrangement of that kind would be made made before long. With the question of prices left out of consideration altogether. The refusal of one or more of the leading companies to join at first would not necessarily prevent the combination. Mr. Dickson did not attach anything more than local importance to the meeting at Manch Chunk.

Mr. Samuel Sloan, President of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Company, said that he was not aware that any proposition had been made to the company of the kind described. If it had, he would unequivocally have replied that the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Road would not enter into it. He would have that understood without any sort of doubt. He had been opposed to the last combination, and he would oppose any proposition to combine in the future. "Let every tub stand on its own bottom." He would have nothing to do with a proposition either to regulate the supply or the prices of coal. One read that was anxious to go into the last combination was the first to break faith, and yet that road was now spoken of as leading the new movement. He would have nothing to do with it, but would conduct his coal business as he saw fit.

An officer of the Pennsylvania Coal Company said that the company had received no formal invitation to join in such a combination as it was reported had been proposed. Such a combination was very desirable, especially by companies that both worked mines and transported coal. They were now injuring themselves and pursuing a policy that would prove ruinous if persisted in. What consumers needed was enough coal to supply their necessities. They could not afford to see the companies supplying it destroying themselves in the effort to fill coal-bins at a sacrifice. An old citizen, who but a day or two ago bought a quantity of coal for consumption in his own house, reported that he bought it at the low rate charged, and said to one of the officers of the company, "This is not a blessing, because there will inevitably be a reaction, and prices must in the end reach a figure that will be a paying one to the producers of coal." It was believed by the Pennsylvania Company that the refusal of Mr. Sloan to co-operate would not be persisted in to the injury of the Delaware and Lackawanna Company. He was too shrewd and careful of the interests of his company to stand out against a course which prudence and reason dictated as the best—in fact, the only course to be pursued.

Mr. Parrish, of the New-Jersey Central Company, and Mr. Gowan, of the Philadelphia and Reading Company, were both out of the City, but at the office of the latter company Mr. McKay expressed his ignorance of any combination proposed for the benefit or on the part of the company of which he was agent. If the proposition emanated from the company, he did not know it, and had learned all he knew from common report.

YACHTING MATTERS.

NOMINATION OF OFFICERS OF THE BROOKLYN YACHT CLUB FOR THE CURRENT YEAR.

A special meeting of the Brooklyn Yacht Club was held last evening at the head-quarters of the club, Court and Montague streets, Brooklyn, for the purpose of receiving the report of the committee appointed at the last regular meeting of the club to nominate officers for the coming year. The following candidates were placed in nomination:

FLAG OFFICERS.

For Commodore,—John S. Dickerson, schooner yacht Madeleine.
Vice Commodore—James D. Smith, schooner yacht Estelle.

CIVIC OFFICERS.

President—F. M. Ostrander.
Secretary and Treasurer—William T. Lee.
Assistant secretary—George G. Dunning.
Measurer—John M. Sawyer.
Fleet Surgeon—J. G. Johnson.
Judge Advocate—John Oakley.
Trustees—Robert Dillon, W. R. Wadsworth, Charles W. Blossom, S. Mellroy, the President, Secretary, and Treasurer ex officio.
Committee on Membership—S. L. Blood, William M. Rinerwood, Edgar F. Grant.
Regatta Committee—Henry W. Turner, William Bishop, John F. Ames.

The election is to take place on Wednesday evening next.

NEXT SEASON'S YACHTING.

The sloop yacht Petrel, owned by J. S. Beecher, Brooklyn Yacht Club, is being altered into a schooner at Port Jefferson.

The schooner yacht Playful, owned by Capt. Holmes, of the Brooklyn Yacht Club, is to be lengthened by the addition of 12 feet amidships.

Mr. John Dimon, of the Brooklyn Yacht Club, is having a new sloop yacht built, 40 feet long. Mr. C. S. Gannon, at the foot of Court street, Brooklyn, is the builder.

The schooner yacht Vista, owned by Mr. David Carl, of the Brooklyn Club, is undergoing alterations at City Island. She is being lengthened by adding to her aft.

The sloop Vision, owned by the Messrs. Alexandre, New-York Yacht Club, is being altered at Nyack, on the Hudson. The yacht is to be lengthened and deepened, and given more beam.

The schooner yacht Dreadnought, New-York Yacht Club, is about to go on the ways at the shipyard of Mr. Henry Steers, in Greenpoint, for extensive alterations. Her bilges are to be lowered and the shape of her stern altered.

A new steam yacht, 111 feet long, has been built at Northport, Long Island, for Mr. Charles Cheesebrough, of the Brooklyn Yacht Club. Her engines were built at the Secor Iron Works, foot of Seventeenth street, in this City. She has been launched, and is nearly ready for her trial trip.

An international regatta is to be held in the Bay of Naples under the auspices of the Naples Regatta Club during the month of April next. Three days have been fixed upon—Wednesday, April 4, Monday, April 9, and Thursday, April 13. Several valuable prizes are to be sailed for, and the races are open to the yachts of all nations.

THE SNOW BLOCKADE.

ACTION OF THE STREET-CLEANING BUREAU —A SLIGHT IMPROVEMENT IN THE CONDITION OF THE SIDEWALKS—NO EFFORTS MADE TO REMOVE THE SNOW FROM THE STREETS.

The indications of the near approach of a "thaw," and a consciousness of the painfully unpleasant state of affairs that would ensue when the threatened "thaw" set in, seem at last to have awakened the authorities of the Street-cleaning Bureau to the necessity of taking some action to prevent a deluge of snow-blocked streets. Notification was sent out yesterday from the Police Department to the residents on the different thoroughfares, ordering them to clear away the snow and ice which had long obstructed the gutters, and leave them free, so that when the snow begins to melt, as it is anticipated it will to-day or to-morrow, the water may find its way to the sewers and thus in part prevent a deluge in the streets. The clearing away of the ice, in obedience to this order, was, as the law requires, done at the expense of the tenants. A force of 200 men, belonging to the Street-cleaning Bureau, was distributed in gangs through Broadway and the different avenues, and ordered to clear the ice and snow from the crossings and the culverts. In this work they were engaged all day, the result gained by their operation being a slight improvement to foot travel at the different street crossings. They cleared the culverts quite thoroughly also, but it is doubtful if any great advantage will be gained, as the snow is piled so high at the corners and along the sides of the street that it is very probable the sewers will become so choked with slush as to be comparatively useless.

In the side streets there was no attempt made to prevent the flooding of the streets in a "thaw," further than the digging of a very narrow and practically useless trench along the line of the gutter. As far as the streets themselves, irrespective of the crossings, were concerned, they remained in exactly the same condition they have been in since the snow-fall of the 1st inst. At some points along Broadway merchants, who found it to their interest to improve the unpleasant state of affairs, employed men to clear away the snow and keep a path across the middle of the street in passable condition. In these cases the general desert of accumulated snow and dirt were the exception and not the rule.

Capt. Gunner, the Superintendent of the Street-cleaning force, was questioned yesterday by a TIMES reporter to ascertain what steps, if any, the bureau had taken toward improving the condition of the streets. He stated that in addition to the detailing of 300 men to clear the culverts and crossways, he had, at the request of Commissioner Nichols, engaged 600 laborers with 500 horses and carts to clear Broadway entirely of the snow and ice which now obstruct traffic. The order, he said, had been given because the Commissioner had expected a favorable reply to his recent application to the Board of Apportionment for a special fund to be devoted to defraying the expenses of clearing away the snow. The men who were to have been engaged in the work last night and this morning were divided into large gangs and sent to the different precincts, to await further orders. As a notice was sent to him of the application to the Board of Apportionment having been granted, a telegram was sent to the different precincts from the head-quarters of the Street-cleaning force in Avenue C, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets, ordering a discharge of the various gangs of laborers. The Board of Apportionment, at the commencement of the year, granted an appropriation of $725,000 to the Street-cleaning Bureau, to defray the expenses of street-cleaning during the year. The authorities claim, however, that this appropriation does not cover the clearing away of snow. A special appropriation having to be provided for that purpose.

In 1875 this special appropriation, they claim, amounted to $100,000, $60,000 of it being expended in removing snow. As no such appropriation has been made this year, and as the police authorities declare they cannot do any work without it, it is impossible to predict how much longer the present state of things will continue, or rather, when they will cease.

THE ICE BLOCKADE BROKEN.

The delay in steam-boat travel on the East River yesterday was not nearly as great as on the previous day, the ice-floes having been pretty thoroughly broken up by the continual passage of the boats to and fro. The flood tide, which on the preceding days had invariably choked up the river with ice and rendered it well-nigh unnavigable, did not blockade the river yesterday to any great extent, and consequently did not cause any serious detention to travel. The trips were made quite regularly by the different ferry-boats, and none of those vexatious delays which had been experienced on Thursday and Friday were reported. On the North River there was a like improvement in the travel, the trips at the Jersey City and other ferries, with very few exceptions, being made on time.

THE ICE-COATED STREETS.

To add to the discomfiture of pedestrians who were compelled to plod through the accumulated snow in the streets yesterday, rain began to fall early in the evening, and very soon the sidewalks were covered with a thin coating of ice which rendered walking not only a matter of great difficulty, but frequently of considerable danger. Rubber over-shoes proved practically useless, and afforded no assistance in walking. So difficult, indeed, was it to walk on the sidewalks that the majority of the pedestrians betook themselves to the middle of the streets, where, though compelled to wade through dirty snow and slush, they were safe from the injuries which were frequently inflicted upon those who persisted in the attempt to walk on the slippery pavements. The storm continued without intermission until after midnight, but the rain ceased to freeze after 10:30 o'clock. The crystal coating which had gathered on the surface of the snow during the earlier part of the evening prevented the snow from being converted into slush by the rain which fell afterward. The streets were nearly deserted after 10 o'clock, but those who were obliged to travel on foot after that hour found walking much easier than it had previously been, the icy coating having been washed from the pavements, and the snow at the crossings trampled so hard as to offer but slight impediment to travel.

COLES MORRIS' DEFALCATION.

THE AMOUNT MISAPPROPRIATED OVER $500,000—A QUIET SETTLEMENT OF THE MATTER PROBABLE.

There seems to be no sort of doubt now, that the reported misappropriation by Mr. Coles Morris, of the firm of Morris, Billings & Co., of trust funds held by him, were really made as at first rumored, and that the amount misappropriated altogether by Mr. Morris is about $500,000. The brothers of Coles Morris, Andrew C. and Benjamin C., who were, with him, the Trustees of the Coles estate, and Trustees for Mrs. E. C. Hollins and Robert Webb, died several years ago. Since their death Mr. Morris has had the exclusive charge of the income of the estate, consisting of real property in this City and Jersey City, valued at $400,000 or $500 000. It is not known what Mr. Morris has done with the money misappropriated, as he was not known to speculate. His income from his business was large, and he did not live in a remarkably expensive manner. In his efforts to settle his affairs he has transferred the house No. 64 Fifth avenue, in which he lives, and Mrs. E. C. Hollins, and it is believed that the real estate made over and property to be restored will make up the entire amount misappropriated, so that the ultimate loss will not be more than $150,000. Mr. Billings said yesterday to a reporter of THE TIMES that the statement published by himself and partner was true in regard to the business of the firm, and was believed to be entirely true when they made it. No one who had known Mr. Morris would ever have suspected him of any such irregularity as that with which he has been charged. There had not been a whisper of anything wrong in the affairs of Mr. Morris. Mr. Cardozo said that the statements given about the loss and transfer of property are substantially those which came to him from Mr. Morris' family. Mrs. Hollins is a sister of Mr. Morris, who is a grandson of John B. Coles. Mr. Morris had lived quietly, never gambled or drank to excess, and was always at home by 10 o'clock at night. He abhorred speculation, and the only theory of the misuse of the money which Mr. Cardozo could imagine was that Mr. Morris had greatly exaggerated the value in his own mind, of the Jersey City property, and had been too liberal in his expenses. Mr. Cardozo did not believe, as had been reported, that Mr. Morris' illness was a subterfuge to enable him to gain time for a settlement. On Saturday night, a week ago, when he and Mr. Billings had seen Mr. Morris, his mind seemed unable to act freely; he said that all were ruined, and his reasoning faculties were apparently not as they had been. Dr. Sayre said yesterday that the transfer of real estate mentioned had been made in his presence, and that the troubles of Mr. Morris would be settled quietly. Mrs. Hollins, when applied to last evening for information, had nothing to say on the subject.

CRUSHED BY ICE.

The steamer John A. Dix, of the Fire Island Ferry, was crushed by the ice at Babylon, Long Island on Friday night. The loss is $10,000. A valuable yacht belonging to D. S. Samuels was also crushed.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The Post Office deposits last week amounted to $49,958 30.

Fifteen hundred and ninety-eight arrests were made by the Police last week.

The foreign steam-ship mail of yesterday consisted of 50,305 letters, 628 registered letters, and 83 bags of papers.

Miss Laura S. Webb will give dramatic readings at Masonic Hall, Twenty-third street and Sixth avenue, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 10.

John Riley, a boy, died yesterday morning, at St. Vincent's Hospital, from the effects of gangrene resulting from a scratch on one of his hands caused by a saw.

Mr. John D. Wright, President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, desires to acknowledge the receipt of $100 from an anonymous source in aid of the work.

There were reported during the past week, 500 deaths, 400 births, and 138 marriages, showing an increase of 27 deaths and 2 marriages, and a decrease of 19 births, as compared with the preceding week.

Catharine Massieana, an Italian woman, aged 42, while picking coffee-beans yesterday, at the Hudson River Railroad depot in Laight street, was struck by a descending elevator and almost instantly killed.

Mr. C. E. A. McGeechy, "Danbury News Man," will deliver a lecture at the United Presbyterian Church, Twenty-fifth street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, on Tuesday evening, Jan. 9, for the benefit of the church fund.

The Police Board, at its meeting yesterday, reprimanded Capt. Murphy, of the Twenty-first Precinct, charged with neglect of duty in permitting boys to indulge in the pastime popularly known as "coasting," to the inconvenience and peril of passers-by.

Patrolman Patrick Kelly, of the Eighth Precinct, was dismissed from the Police force yesterday on the charge of permitting his bed at the station-house to become disgustingly filthy. The resignations of Patrolman John Lloyd, of the Twenty-second Precinct, and Thomas H. Casey, of the Nineteenth Precinct, were accepted.

The Board of Apportionment will meet on Monday, and organize for the present year. Mr. Parroy, as President of the Aldermen, is an ex-officio member of the board. It is said that a resolution will be offered transferring unexpended balances amounting to $65,000 to the Police Board, the money to be used for street-cleaning purposes.

While Mr. Gabriel Netter, of No. 62 West Forty-seventh street, was driving up Broadway in a one-horse cutter yesterday afternoon he ran into a snow-bank at Broome street. The sleigh was upset, and Mr. Netter was thrown out and slightly injured. The horse ran up Broadway, dragging the sleigh behind him, and at Bleecker street came in collision with a wagon of the Great American Tea Company. The sleigh was completely demolished and the horse fatally injured.

On Wednesday evening next the Goethe Club, of the City of New-York, will hold its regular meeting at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, at which Mr. George H. Calvert, of Newport, R. I., will deliver an address on "Goethe," written especially for the occasion. At the conclusion of the address a reception will be given by the club to Mr. Calvert, special tickets for which have been issued by the Committee on Entertainments.

On Tuesday evening next there will be a series of athletic games and feats in horsemanship at the Metropolitan Riding Academy, the winners in which will receive prizes, which have been offered by Mr. Englehardt. For the one mile walk, six entries have been made; for the half-mile run, six entries; for the quarter-mile hurdle, five entries, making with police, many entries. In the evening there will be an exhibition of an assault at arms by cavalry and infantry, steeple and other racing.

Several clergymen have invited their congregation and others to observe the "Week of Prayer" by attendance on a Union Prayer Meeting to be held at the Church of the Holy Trinity, Madison avenue and Forty-second street, at 3:30 P. M., from Monday, Jan. 8, to Saturday, Jan. 13, inclusive. Mr. Henry Moorhouse, of England, who has been laboring with Moody and Sankey in the West, will preach every evening this week in the above church. The singing will be conducted by Mr. Theodore Perkins, who will be assisted by a trained choir.

The storm-rope, which is intended to prevent the swaying of the foot-bridge, was stretched between the two piers of the East River bridge, yesterday, and if the weather proves favorable, it will be made fast in its position to-morrow. When this is completed, the remaining sections of the foot-bridge will be laid. This is a part of the work that requires great care, as the sections have to be laid alternately between anchorage and pier and between the two piers, in order to prevent the weight at one point from drawing the cables from their proper deflection.

BROOKLYN.

The Police Commissioners have amended the order prohibiting the use of chairs or camp-stools in the aisles of public buildings so as to make it apply to churches only when they are used as places of amusement.

Henry Witty and his son Robert, the proprietors of a livery-stable at No. 715 Atlantic avenue, were held in $500 by Justice Semler yesterday, charged by the Superintendent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals with keeping horses several days without food or water.

Judge McCue has decided, in the suit of the old Board of Trustees of the African Methodist Bethel Church against the Pastor, Rev. Jeremiah Beaniah Murray and the new Board of Trustees, that the latter must hand over all of the church property in their possession to the old Board of Trustees.

Roundsman Grant arrested a man who was about to cross the Fulton Ferry yesterday morning with a quantity of silver-ware rolled in a piece of blanket. The prisoner gave his name as Charles A. Greene, and admitted that he broke into the basement of a house, which proved to be that of Mr. Albert H. Villes, No. 191 Cumberland street. Greene was locked up.

A solemn high mass of requiem was celebrated in the Roman Catholic Church, Debevoise street, Brooklyn, yesterday morning, for the repose of the souls of the unfortunate victims of the fire at the Brooklyn Theatre. Rev. Father Coughlin, the celebrant, was assisted by Father Galvan, of Our Lady of Mercy, as Deacon, and Father Kennedy, as sub-Deacon. In the congregation were a large number of ladies, dressed in deep mourning, many of whom were moved to tears.

LONG ISLAND.

The Astoria masked burglars were yesterday morning taken under a strong guard of officers to the Queens County Jail, at North Hempstead. Upon reaching the jail the prisoners were searched by Sheriff Rushmore, and afterward placed in the lower corridor of cells and chained to the floor. The jail is notorious for its insecurity, and the Sheriff, knowing the desperate characters with which he has to deal, has placed an extra guard over them.

NEW-JERSEY.

Seth W. Payne, a journalist of Jersey City, was arraigned in the Hudson County Sessions, at Jersey City, for having in his paper libeled County Clerk James M. Braun.

Justice James Corrigan was charged before Justice Keese, in Jersey City, yesterday, with having misappropriated funds collected upon judgment against one Flynn in favor of Mrs. Jane Glynn.

James Wilson, a sailor, was found on the street in Jersey City, with both feet frozen. He was removed to the hospital, where it was thought amputation would be necessary. He said he had walked from Philadelphia.

Rev. George B. Vosburgh was installed Friday evening as Pastor of the Bergen Baptist Church. Among those who took part in the ceremony were Rev. Drs. Armitage and Dowling, of New-York, and Rev. Mr. Parry, of Philadelphia.

Charles F. Schmidt, formerly a druggist in Newark, was arraigned in the Essex County Oyer, before Justice Depue, to answer a charge of having forged the name of his father-in-law, Edward Eberhardt, to two notes for $250 each. He pleaded guilty, and was remanded for sentence.

The jury in the case of John Calgy, who died in Jersey City, of lock-jaw, from injuries at first supposed to have been inflicted with a knife, rendered a verdict on Friday night declaring that death was accidental. The evidence showed that he had received injuries by falling, while drunk, into some tin clippings.

The Jersey City Police were informed last evening that "sweat-board" was played in a room in the rear of the saloon corner of Essex and Washington streets. A descent was made on the place, and William W. Giles and William Ward, said to be the proprietors of the place, were arrested. A "sweat-board," cards, dice, and other gambling paraphernalia were captured.

Richard Burns and William Whelan were arrested in Newark yesterday to answer for having been principals in a prize-fight last Sunday morning at Waverly. James Ogden and Henry Goble were arrested as seconds, and Samuel Fisher, a hackman, for having carried them to the scene of the combat. Twenty rounds are said to have been fought. Burns was badly beaten.

A few days ago a stranger bought two money-orders at the Jersey City Post Office, one for 85 cents and another for 45 cents, drawn to the order of two Chicago firms. The same orders, payable to William Thompson, one with the amount changed to $50 and the latter with the amount changed to $47, reached the New-York Post Office a day or two later. The person who bought them had given them to a roofer in New-York, from whom he received the amount to which they had been raised.

Mahlen Drake and John Lippell were driving past Drake's feed store in Irvington at about 8 o'clock on Friday evening, when they observed that a side window was open. Drake suspected that thieves were within, and he ran toward the window, intending to capture them. As he approached a burglar jumped out, and drawing a pistol, fired at him. The ball entered Drake's thigh, injuring him severely, but not fatally. As the thief fled he fired two more shots at the wounded man, but the balls in both cases missed their mark. The burglar escaped, and no trace of him has been found.

CHARGES AGAINST AN AUCTIONEER.

A COMPLAINT MADE BY CAPT. WALSH AGAINST HERTS & SON—HE ASKS THAT THEIR LICENSE BE REVOKED.

Capt. Walsh, of the City Hall Police, made a complaint yesterday in the Mayor's office against the firm of Herts & Son, the auctioneers, for selling a large quantity of furs under false and fraudulent representations. The facts of the case appeared in THE TIMES of Saturday, and the Captain verified them by making the following affidavit before Mr. John Hardy, the chief clerk to the Mayor:

Edward Walsh being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is Captain of Police; that he attended an auction sale held at No. 17 Park Row, on Friday, Jan. 5, 1877, between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock in the morning; that a notice of such sale had been published in the New York Herald issued on the said 5th day of January, 1877, a copy of which notice is hereto annexed; that such sale as advertised purported to be a Sheriff's sale of furs held under the direction of William C. Conner, late Sheriff; William Henry, Deputy Sheriff; that this deponent called on Under Sheriff Cummins, and caused inquiry to be made of William C. Conner, and that neither said Under Sheriff nor the said Sheriff knew anything of the said sale; that the deponent, while attending the said sale, asked Henry B. Herts, the auctioneer who was conducting the sale, to show the deponent the execution under and in pursuance of which such sale was being made; that the said Henry B. Herts referred the deponent to William Henry, the Deputy Sheriff, who he said held the execution; that the said William Henry was not present at the time, but came in a few minutes afterward; that this deponent asked the said William Henry to show the deponent the execution under and in pursuance of which the said sale was being conducted; that the said William Henry said he had not the papers with him, and failed to produce the papers or authority whatever in the sale; that the said Henry B. Herts, auctioneer, and the said William Henry, Deputy Sheriff, then consulted together for a few moments, and thereupon the said Henry B. Herts announced to the persons attending the said sale that the said sale was not a Sheriff's sale, and that he would go on with the sale as a regular auction sale; that the deponent then asked the said Henry B. Herts what sale it was, and the said Henry B. Herts replied, "It's none of your business, get out of here," and the deponent shortly after left the sale. And the deponent further says that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that the said Henry B. Herts made a false and fraudulent representation in respect to the character of the sale held by him on Jan. 5, 1877, and exposed and offered for sale at that time by auction property in respect to which a false and fraudulent representation had been made by him as to the character of the sale; and the deponent prays that the license of the said Henry B. Herts be revoked.

EDWARD WALSH,
Captain Twenty-sixth Precinct Police.

Sworn before me this 6th day of January, 1877.
JOHN HARDY, Notary Public.

This affidavit will be laid before Mayor Ely on Monday, and a day will then be fixed for the examination. Capt. Walsh stated yesterday that John O'Conner, of No. 185 Columbia street, Brooklyn, called upon him and said that he purchased at one of Herts' auction sales a quantity of jewelry, for which he gave $300, but that it was not worth near that amount. One of the articles was a watch, for which he paid $55, but it was subsequently valued at only $10. Another man informed the Captain that he purchased a seal-skin sacque at $85, which was only worth $35.

Mr. Herts denies all the charges and asks a suspension of judgment in his case until he presents his defense in detail. He says he intends to prefer charges against Capt. Walsh, and will also sue him for attempting to damage his character as a business man.

GOOD SLEIGHING ON THE "ROAD."

The sleighing "on the road" yesterday was a great improvement over that of the early part of the week. The roadway along St. Nicholas avenue and Harlem lane was beaten down sufficiently to allow of a good degree of speed, and the sports of fraternity, and lovers of horseflesh in general, showed their appreciation of it by turning out in large numbers. At the hotels on St. Nicholas and Central avenues, numbers gathered to watch the flying trotters, and to speculate upon their relative rates of speed. The snow is still somewhat thick and heavy, and a thaw followed by a "cold snap" is required to bring it into really good condition. Among the turnouts remarkable for either speed or style which appeard yesterday, were the following: F. J. Allen, of the Astor House, drove a large bay horse attached to a light cutter. A lady occupied the seat by his side. Mr. Stephens F. Knapp handled the reins behind a spanking team of bay colts. Harbor Master James Thompson appeared behind a high-stepping bay team, which was admiringly scrutinized by all who passed him. Sheriff Conner handled his favorite bay horse, a handsome stepper, and of very stylish appearance. Mr. James Woods and lady, of Harlem, appeared behind a fast brown mare with stylish action and great speed. Mr. John Woods handled the reins over a neat bay horse, with fine action and decided promise of speed. Capt. Unthank drove a team of small mouse-colored ponies, which elicited much admiration for their sleekness and speed. Mr. William H. Harbeck and son were out with their fast double team, consisting of Windermere and another horse, unnamed.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

TAX-PAYERS OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE KIND THAT MADE UP THE HAMPTON MEETING IN CHARLESTON—MEN WHO PAY NO TAXES, OR PAY WITH WORTHLESS STATE BANK-BILLS — A CONTRAST TO THE MEETING OF THE SUPPORTERS OF GOV. CHAMBERLAIN.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

CHARLESTON, Friday, Jan. 5, 1877.

The Democrats of this State profess to believe that the surest way of breaking down the Government of the State is by refusing to pay taxes, and for this purpose they are holding meetings in different parts of the State. The first of these meetings, and the only one which has attracted any attention, was held in this city on the 21st of last month, and notwithstanding the efforts of the Democratic press to make it appear that the meeting was a great success, it was a failure, both in regard to character and numbers. The hall where the meeting assembled, crowded to its utmost extent, cannot hold over 800 people, and it is certain that no one was turned away from that meeting because the hall was overcrowded. The more conservative Democrats had little or nothing to do with it, and the name of the largest Democratic tax-payer in the city is absent both from the call for the meeting and from the list of officers who were elected on that occasion—of which there was a large number, the officers constituting about one-fourth of the meeting.

The character of this meeting, however, as representing the tax-payers, can be best judged by an examination of the names of the persons attached to the call for the meeting. This call was signed by 63 persons, of whom five pay absolutely no taxes whatever, while 22 more might just as well pay no taxes, for they pay their taxes to the State in worthless bills of the "Bank of the State," which the State is compelled by the decision of the courts to receive in payment of taxes. By the terms of the charter of this bank the faith and credit of the State is pledged to the redemption of its bills, which for years after the war could be bought for 5 or 10 cents on the dollar, but since the decision of the United States Supreme Court compelling the State to receive these bills for taxes, they have increased in value, though to the State they were more worthless even than Confederate money, since they cannot be used in defraying any of the expenses of the Government, but are destroyed as fast as received. It is in this way that these 22 men, among them the Chairman of the meeting, C. T. Lowndes, pay their taxes, or, in other words, swindle the State out of their taxes. To the State it makes little difference whether they pay them or not, and for all valuable purposes they are no more tax-payers than the five men who signed the call withthem and pay nothing whatever.

Another one of the persons who signed this call is found upon the defaulters' list, so that out of the 63 who signed the call but 40 can be considered as tax-payers. An examination of the tax-books discloses how much injury they will inflict upon the State by refusing to pay their taxes. Here are a few samples:

Isaac W. Hayne	$1 45
J. B. Campbell	2 32
T. M. Hanckel	4 35
C. H. Simonton	14 94
B. H. Rutledge	59 83
C. R. Miles	67 05

The men who called this Charleston meeting, and elected themselves as the officers of it, are no worse, however, as tax-payers, than the few fools who are doing the same thing in other portions of the State.

As a set-off to this Democratic meeting, the law-abiding citizens of this city held a mass-meeting last night, at which fully 2,000 people were present, notwithstanding the extreme coldness of the weather, which prevented them from holding a large meeting in the open air as at first contemplated. They met, in the words of the call, "for the purpose of expressing their determination to maintain and support the lawful and legitimate Government of the State, of which his Excellency, Daniel H. Chamberlain, is the Chief Executive." The meeting was a perfect success, and the enthusiasm that marked the proceedings indicated an earnest determination to sustain by every legitimate means the lawful Government of the State. The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted amid great cheering:

Whereas, The Senate and House of Representatives of this State did meet in Joint Assembly, as required by the Constitution of the State, on the 5th December, 1876, and having received from the Secretary of State the official returns of the election for Governor and Lieutenant Governor, held on the 7th November, 1876, did open and count the said returns, and declare that Daniel H. Chamberlain had received the highest number of lawful votes for Governor, and Richard H. Gleaves for Lieutenant Governor, and that the said Daniel H. Chamberlain and Richard H. Gleaves were duly elected as Governor and Lieutenant Governor of South Carolina; and whereas, in accordance with the Constitution and laws of this State, the said Daniel H. Chamberlain and Richard H. Gleaves were duly inducted in the State-house in the city of Columbia, on the 7th December, 1876, and immediately thereafter entered upon their respective offices, and have since continued to exercise said offices; and whereas, the Senate and House of Representatives, duly organized and assembled at the State-house, in accordance with the laws and Constitution of this State, have, in the discharge of their proper legislative functions as the General Assembly of South Carolina, enacted into law the usual annual supply and appropriation bills; and whereas, another body of men, composed in part of persons elected to be members of the House of Representatives of this State, did, in the said City of Columbia, and in defiance of the laws and Constitution of this State, did assume to act as a House of Representatives, and did proceed, without the lawful returns of the election held on the 7th November, 1876, and without the presence of the Senate as required by the Constitution of this State, declare Wade Hampton elected as Governor, and William D. Simpson as Lieutenant Governor; and whereas, the said Wade Hampton, unmindful of the laws and Constitution of this State, but in a spirit of treason and rebellion, has assumed to act as Governor, and has made known his purpose to continue to exercise the functions of said office; and whereas, a portion of the citizens of this State have proclaimed their purpose to resist the authority of the lawful Governor, Daniel H. Chamberlain, as well as the authority of the lawful General Assembly of this State; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we recognize Daniel H. Chamberlain as the lawful Governor and Richard H. Gleaves as the lawful Lieutenant Governor of this State, and we pledge them our earnest and unwavering support in the discharge of the duties of their offices, and we call upon all law-abiding citizens to render obedience to their authority.

Resolved, That we recognize the House presided over by R. William Mackey as Speaker as the lawful House of Representatives of this State, and the Senate presided over by Richard H. Gleaves as President and Stephen A. Swails as President pro tempore as the lawful Senate of the State, and the said Senate and House of Representatives as the lawful General Assembly of the State; and we call upon all law-abiding citizens to yield obedience to all laws enacted by said General Assembly and approved by his Excellency Daniel H. Chamberlain, as the valid laws of this State.

Resolved, That we denounce any and all attempts to set up or maintain any authority in conflict with or in opposition to the authority of Daniel H. Chamberlain as Governor, or the lawful General Assembly as acts subversive of law and order and of the Constitution and statutes of this State, seditious and revolutionary, and we call upon his Excellency Daniel H. Chamberlain, to enforce his authority as Governor, and to cause the laws of this State to be obeyed and respected by all the citizens of the State, and, if resistance shall be made to the laws of the State to put into use all the powers possessed by him as Governor for the enforcement of the laws.

Resolved, That we denounce the effort to induce any portion of the people of this State to oppose or resist the execution of the tax laws of this State enacted by the lawful General Assembly as subversive of law and deserving of reprobation and punishment, and we pledge ourselves to discountenance all such efforts, and to stand firmly by all the laws of the State. — CAROLINA.

ALL QUIET IN NEW-ORLEANS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 7.—The city is quiet to-night, and no disturbance is apprehended to-morrow. The Republican says the Senate yesterday confirmed the reappointment of Chief Justice Ludeling and of Justice Leonard, and the appointment of Justice John E. King, of St. Landry Parish, to the Supreme Court Bench.

FERNANDO WOOD'S PROPOSITION.

AN ELECTION IN WHAT HE CALLS THE THREE "DISPUTED" STATES OF THE SOUTH—OREGON CONCEDED TO HAYES — THE CRONIN-GROVER SWINDLE OF NO ACCOUNT IN HIS ESTIMATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—The proposition of Mr. Fernando Wood for a settlement of the Presidential question by a new election in South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana, will probably be offered early this week in the House, although it is just possible that it may never be offered at all, should the joint committee on the Electoral count of their own accord agree upon a plan, or be likely to agree upon one. Mr. Wood says he has had his resolution drawn for 10 days, and has been holding it hoping that something might be done in the committee, and that he still hopes they may originate and mature something that will meet the exigencies of the case. He says, however, that something must be done soon, and that there is no more time to be lost. He says his idea of a new election in the three disputed States is entirely original with himself, and that his proposition has been drawn without consultation with any one. He says that there is no difficulty or dispute about the late election except in these three States, "for," says he, "I do not take any account of this Oregon business, and I should hesitate to see Mr. Tilden made President by the vote of Mr. Cronin. Taking it for granted then that there is no dispute about Oregon, and that it belongs to Hayes, there is no controversy," he says, "except as to these three States of South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana. My proposition is that in those States there shall be a new election under the State laws, but supervised and in a measure directed by the Joint Committees of the Senate and House on the Electoral count. Everyone would be satisfied with the result of the new election, so guarded, and it would show to the world the strength of our institutions and the power of the people for peaceful self-government."

THE DEMOCRATS IN WASHINGTON.

CHARACTER OF THE POW-WOW OF TO-DAY —A DEMONSTRATION BY THE "INVINCIBLE IN PEACE AND INVISIBLE IN WAR"—TILDEN'S ADVICE TO SEEM MORE EARNEST TO OVERCOME IMPRESSION OF WEAKNESS GAINING GROUND THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—The meeting of Democrats on the 8th of January, to be held in Washington, promises to be little more than a meeting of Congress in Ford's Opera-house. The expectation is that the House will adjourn soon after meeting at 12, to give the Democratic members a chance to attend the meeting. The house will, no doubt, be packed by the hungry and expectant District Democrats, who would pass any resolutions that had a shadow of an office attached. The resolutions have been drawn by Montgomery Blair and Jerry Black, and are described as full of the war talk of the latter gentleman.

The Democratic Caucus Advisory Committee have held another meeting and are reported to have decided upon an active and aggressive policy for the future. Mr. Tilden has given notice that he thinks this course better, because the party just now has the appearance of weakness before the country. This is thought not to be favorable, and Mr. Tilden's advice to seem more in earnest will now be followed. Specific action has not been fully determined upon, but it is intended to have a caucus to-morrow night, and some proposals will be determined on and presented for formal action.

NEW-JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

THE ONE HUNDRED AND FIRST SESSION TO CONVENE TO-MORROW—THE ORGANIZATION OF BOTH HOUSES—CANDIDATES FOR THE UNITED STATES SENATORSHIP —GOV. BEDLE'S MESSAGE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Sunday, Jan. 7, 1876.

The one hundred and first session of the New-Jersey Legislature will open in the State-house in this city at noon Tuesday. The sessions of the last two years have been of unusual length. There are those who predict an unusually short session this year. Last year the session was prolonged by the efforts made to pass general laws to meet the requirements of the new Constitution. The efforts in most cases failed, and the necessity of finishing the work begun last year may add beyond anticipation to the days of this session. The two houses at present advices show a majority for the Democrats of one on joint ballot. In the Senate there are 11 Democrats and 10 Republicans. The roll-call of the Assembly shows an equal division of members between the two political parties, that House standing 30 to 30 The seat of Powers, one of the Democrats declared elected in Mercer County, will be contested by Robert L. Hutchinson, his Republican competitor. The Third District, in which the contest occurred, has ever been a close one, the Democratic majority in 1873, having been only 49, and in 1874 but 22. In 1875, Mr. Hutchinson, who is probably the most popular man in the district, overcame the Democratic majority, and was seated by a majority of 182. He claims that, after the close of election last November, ten votes were put into the ballot-box from the Chambersburg district, giving the election to his Democratic opponent by a bare majority of nine. He has pointed out other irregularities which will go far toward defeating the right of his opponent to the seat. Testimony is now being taken in this city, in connection with the contest, and Mr. Hutchinson hopes to have his case ready for submission within a few days. As soon as it became known that he seriously contemplated contesting Powers' seat, one of the defeated Democrats in Monmouth County claimed to have been beaten by the colonization of colored voters, and declared his intention of laying claim to the seat of the Republican candidate. So far as known, no legal steps have been taken in that case. It is a mooted point whether a member has a right to vote upon the question of his own right to a seat in the House. Delicacy and a decent sense of propriety would seem to preclude it, and one of the rules of the House providing that "no member shall vote on any question in which he is particularly interested" seems to forbid it. If the right to vote on the question be denied to Mr. Powers, Mr. Hutchinson's contest, backed as it is by evidences of fraud on the Democratic side, may be successful. In that event the House will stand 31 to 29 in favor of the Republicans, and give them the majority of one on joint ballot.

The whole contest for the Speakership of the House has been going on on the presumption that the members bearing certificates will be seated. The House being a tie, the feeling among the North Jersey Republicans seems to be in favor of a compromise which shall give the Speakership to the Democrats and the Clerkship and most of the other offices to the Republicans. This arrangement will probably make Hon. Rudolph F. Rabe, of Hudson, the presiding officer, and John Y. Foster, Clerk. Bergen, of Somerset, has, however, given notice that in the event of the Republicans refusing to concede the Speakership to the Democracy, he is himself in the field for the position. That the contingency contemplated by Bergen will arise is evident from the feeling among South Jersey Republicans who demand that the presiding officer be selected from their number, and the Clerk be one of their party. They are pressing Hon. Alden C. Scovel, of Camden, a laborious, conscientious, and able legislator, for the Speaker's chair. Hon. John W. Griggs, of Paterson, a young man, who showed himself in the debates last year to be one of the more brilliant and able members of the House, is also mentioned as a possible candidate of the Republican caucus for the place.

In the Senate some of the Democratic members have attempted to form a combination large enough and strong enough to control the Democratic caucus. Their programme proposes to make Dayton, of Bergen, the presiding officer of that body. It is doubtful, however, whether enough members have entered into the arrangement to make it successful; and the probabilities are that Senator Leon Abbett, of Hudson, will be called to preside. There are any number of aspirants for the other offices within the gift of the Senate. The most important duty to devolve upon the two houses this Winter is the election of a United States Senator to succeed Hon. Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, whose term expires in March. Counting upon the certainty of a Democratic majority of one, the number of Democratic candidates is unusually large. Three of these are from Hudson. Hon. John R. McPherson, President of the Abattoir Company, is working hard for the position. He claims to have already secured a majority of votes in the Democratic caucus; but this is thought to be only a game of bluff. Hon. Orestes Cleveland, formerly a Congressman from the Seventh District, is also warmly pushed by his friends, while it is said that Senator Abbett himself has his eye upon the prize. It is not impossible, too, that Gov. Bedle may step in as a candidate if a propitious moment occurs. To be sure, one of the amendments to the State Constitution provides that he shall not "be elected by the Legislature to any office under the Government of this State or of the United States during the term for which he shall have been elected Governor," but then it is urged in his behalf that, at the time he became Governor, that clause of the Constitution had not become a part of the organic law of the State, but was subsequently adopted and ratified by the people. For the Republican nomination the names of the present Senator, of Hon. George M. Robeson, and of Hon. Courtlandt Parker, one of the ablest lawyers in the State, are mentioned. They are all strong men, and in view of the strength of Hutchinson's case in Mercer, and of the fact that there are already indications of wavering in the Democratic ranks, their candidacy may prove successful. One of the Democratic members of Assembly in Essex has declared that he will not go into the Democratic caucus on the Senatorship question, and that there are some Republicans whom he would as willingly see Senator as any Democrat. Compromise candidates are much talked of, and the name of ex-Congressman William Walter Phelps has risen into prominence as a candidate, in the event of that contingency being realized.

Gov. Bedle has been engaged for the last fortnight or more in the preparation of his annual Message. It will probably be of unusual length, and will go pretty freely into a review of the questions growing out of the Presidential campaign. The more important State officers to be elected by the incoming Legislature are a State Controller, in place of A. L. Runyon, whose term will expire in April, and a Judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals, in place of Francis S. Lathrop, whose term will expire in March. The position of Clerk of the Supreme Court, now filled by Benjamin F. Lee, will become vacant in November, and the present Legislature may name his successor.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE BRIDGE—FACTS ASCERTAINED—SOME INTERESTING INFORMATION—NO MORE BODIES IDENTIFIED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 7.—Various rumors and theories have naturally got afloat in regard to the construction of the bridge and its condition at the time of the accident. Your correspondent has taken pains to ascertain the following facts in the case, which must modify all theories as to the cause of the catastrophe: First, although the bridge was built several years before the double track was laid, it was intended in its construction for a double track. This is not only the testimony of Mr. Charles Collins, chief bridge-builder of the road, but the abutments and the traces of where the bridge rested show for themselves. In the second place, there is no probability that the bridge was worn. The Toledo Bridge, which was of exactly the same pattern—Howe truss—after fifteen years of constant use on the same road, was taken down, and its various parts thoroughly tested at the works of McNairy, Claflin & Co., of Cleveland, and found to be able to sustain, on an average, 30,000 pounds to the square inch, or exactly the pressure of new iron. None of the parts were found to be crystallized, or in the least impaired by use. Mr. J. C. Williams, an eminent engineer of Cleveland, who is upon the spot assisting in the construction of the new bridge, gives it as his opinion that from the position in which the rods of the old bridge now lie it will be entirely possible to determine whether any of the bolts or nuts had been tampered with by thieves. The thread upon the end of a rod from which the nut was gradually loosened and dropped off will appear much differently from one that has been unscrewed. More than this Mr. Williams thinks it will probably be difficult to ascertain in regard to the cause of the catastrophe.

The body of Robert Steindel has been shipped to Rehoboth Lodge, New-York. The friends of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Hall have nearly despaired of identifying their remains. All that is thus far known is that they were married on the day before the accident in Elmira, and were on the train when it made the fatal plunge. Several arrests have been made of people who have taken articles of value from the wreck.

MEMORIAL SERVICES IN BUFFALO.

BUFFALO, Jan. 7.—Impressive services commemorative of the death of Miss Minnie Mixer, Louis J. Barnard, and John and Charles R. Pickering, victims of the Ashtabula disaster, no trace of whose remains was found, were held at St. Paul's Episcopal Cathedral to-day. The attendance of relatives and friends of the deceased was large, the vast edifice being crowded. A sermon appropriate to the occasion was preached by Rev. Dr. Shelton, Rector of St. Paul's.

VERDICT IN A MURDER TRIAL.

POTTSVILLE, Jan. 7.—The jury in the case of Michael Colghan, who was charged with the murder of John Boscher, near Ashland, on Oct. 26, after being out all night rendered a verdict this morning of guilty of murder in the second degree

A STEAM-SHIP STRANDED.

THE FRENCH VESSEL L'AMERIQUE.

SHE GROUNDS WITHIN SEVENTY YARDS OF LAND AT SEABRIGHT, N. J.—THE PASSENGERS, MAILS AND SPECIE SAVED—THREE SAILORS DROWNED BY THE UPSETTING OF A SMALL BOAT—THE VESSEL PROBABLY NOT SERIOUSLY DAMAGED—THE STORY OF THE DISASTER—HISTORY OF THE STEAMSHIP.

The steamship L'Amérique, of the General Transatlantic Company's line, was stranded at 3 A. M. yesterday, having run ashore at Seabright, a small village about three miles north of Long Branch. The passengers and their baggage, the mail matter and specie on board, were safely landed, as were also all excepting three of the crew. These three were drowned while endeavoring to land in a small boat. The vessel had on board three cabin, 51 second and fourth class passengers, and 160 men composing the officers and crew. The passengers have been taken care of, and will be forwarded to this City by special train leaving Seabright this morning. At the time the vessel struck she was in charge of a pilot, who says he was deceived in his soundings. The bodies of all three of the drowned men were recovered, and have been placed in charge of the Coroner at Long Branch. It is believed that the stranded steam-ship, when lightened of some of her cargo, will be floated off at high tide. The news, which was at first greatly distorted, caused much excitement, and drew several thousand persons to the scene, besides causing great anxiety in this City among the friends of passengers on the vessel. A number of tugs and vessels belonging to the Coast Wrecking Company, which have been engaged, will be at the scene of the accident to-day, and will endeavor to relieve the vessel of her cargo.

The vessel thus stranded made her first trip in January, 1874, leaving Havre for this port on the 19th of the month and arriving here 10 days later. On April 14, 1874, the vessel then in command of Capt. Roussan was reported as having foundered off the coast of Brittany. Second Officer Garré was the only person who perished, the remainder of those on board having been transferred to other vessels in the vicinity. The vessel was deserted, and was afterward encountered drifting on the ocean by the English steamer Spray. The steam-ship was towed into the harbor of Plymouth. The company was afterward directed to pay the salvors $149,500.

DETAILS OF THE DISASTER.

From Our Special Correspondent.

SEABRIGHT, N. J., Sunday, Jan. 7, 1877.

Through the dense veil of fog which, like a pall, overhung and enshrouded this place at 3 A. M. to-day, came signals of distress, while seaward and right on the shore, almost, were perceptible the outlines of a big ship. This place is on the strip of land jutting out from the New-Jersey shore, and lies between Sandy Hook and Long Branch, being about three miles to the north of the latter. The wind at the time was blowing rather freshly from the south-east, and a heavy sea was rolling which broke over the vessel's deck. Masses of ice, too, covered the surface of the water and made the aspect of the scene still more chill and pitiless. The first man on shore to notice the state of affairs was William M. Ferguson, one of the crew of Life-saving Station No. 4. His trained eye showed him that an ocean steam-ship was stranded on the beach, and he besirred himself hastily to summon help. He notified the crews of Life-saving Stations Nos. 3 and 4, and in about 20 minutes they were on the shore with their apparatus and had thrown a line to the stranded vessel, which proved to be the L'Amérique of the General Transatlantic Company's line of steam-ships. Prior to the throwing of the Line, however, Capt. Pousols, the commander of the steam-ship, ordered out a small boat, with a crew composed of Officer Brillaning and 11 men, to convey information ashore, and obtain assistance. At this time the steam-ship lay 70 yards distant from the beach. The small boat struck the beach after some minutes of active exertion on the part of the crew, but was capsized by the heavy undertow and the masses of ice, of which there was great profusion. Three of the crew were drowned, but the others reached shore safely, thoroughly drenched and chilled. The bodies of all three of the drowned men were recovered, the first being found at 3 P. M., the second about two hours later, and the last at Long Branch at 11:30 P. M. They were discovered floating in the undertow, and were taken to Life-saving Station No. 1, where they remain at present awaiting identification and the action of the Coroner at Long Branch, who has been notified to attend. The information that was brought to those on shore was that the vessel was the L'Amérique, on her way from Havre to New-York, and had just stranded, and that she had on board three cabin, 51 second and fourth-class passengers, and 162 men composing the officers and crew.

The life-saving crews went quickly about their work, and, with the aid of the steam-ship's crew, the life-car was speedily drawn on board the stranded vessel. The scene here was one in which the wildest confusion was mingled with abject terror. It was several hours before the break of day, and a thick mist enveloped the surroundings in an almost impenetrable gloom. The very rough sea was breaking over the stern of the vessel—which lay apparently wedged in the sand—and was sending over streams of ice, and water not less chilling in its liquid than in its congealed form. The greatest excitement prevailed among the passengers, who had been rudely awakened from their slumbers by the shock of the vessel as she struck and by the excitement which followed. Capt. Pousols, however, was calm and collected, and did much to overcome the general consternation. He had succeeded pretty well in reducing the excitement when the life-saving crew drew alongside. The passengers watched the progress of the car toward the vessel with great eagerness, but when it came up, and they saw its coffin shape, they were at first afraid to enter it. Mr. Cornell Jewett and his wife, who were cabin passengers on the L'Amérique, were approached by Capt. Pousols, who saw they were undismayed and collected. He wished them to enter the car first in order to reassure the other passengers. Nothing loth, Mr. and Mrs. Jewett entered the car and were drawn safely through the surf to the beach. After this the other passengers and most of the crew were landed in the same manner, five or six being brought at a time. The mails and specie on board the ill-fated vessel were next landed. The Captain remained on board the ship looking after the vessel and the cargo, which is a large one and miscellaneous in character. The vessel at this time was lying broadside to the beach. Mr. and Mrs. Cornell Jewett and a Spanish lady, the only cabin passengers, were taken to Emery's Hotel at Seabright. The other passengers, and a large portion of the crew, were taken to the East End Hotel at Long Branch, where their wants were attended to. The baggage was also landed safely. Most of the passengers will arrive in New-York to-morrow afternoon, arrangements having been made to send them by a special train on the New-Jersey Southern Railroad, leaving Seabright at 11:30 A. M. All of the passengers speak in the highest terms of the conduct of the Captain and crew during the vessel's long and stormy passage across the Atlantic.

At the time when the steam-ship struck she was in command of a pilot who had been taken on board yesterday from the pilot boat No. 21 in latitude 40° 30' and about 167 miles from New-York. At that time the sea was quite rough, but the weather afterward thickened up very much, and when the vessel struck the sea was running quite high, and land and water were covered with a heavy fog. The pilot says he was deceived in making soundings, it being very thick at the time when the vessel stranded. Mr. Cornell Jewett, the first man taken to shore on the life-saving car from the steam-ship gave the following account of the disaster:

"Myself and wife and one Spanish lady were all the first-class passengers on the steam-ship. The passage was a very rough and long one. Capt. Ponzois, however, proved himself one of the most careful and reliable commanders I ever sailed with, and I have crossed the ocean a number of times. I was awake at 1 A. M., and at that time everything was going on smoothly. We expected to reach Quarantine at about 4 A. M. We took a pilot yesterday"—i. e., Saturday, from pilot boat No. 21, in latitude 40° 30', and 167 miles distant from New-York. The sea was smooth at the time. The vessel struck at 3 o'clock A. M., the wind being then east-south-east, and blowing fresh. The weather was very thick. After the steam-ship struck, the Captain ordered the small boat to be launched. This was immediately done, and it was manned by Officer Charles Brillaning and a crew of 11 men. In getting ashore, the boat was capsized and three of the crew were drowned. The life-saving crews then having their apparatus at work, the Captain requested me and my wife to go ashore first. The other passengers seemed to be afraid of the coffin-shaped boat in which they were to take passage from the vessel to the shore."

Mr. Jewett expressed his entire satisfaction with the working of the life-saving apparatus. Major Wardell, agent of the Board of Underwriters, and Charles Chamberlain, the wrecking master, were at the scene of the wreck at an early hour, and rendered efficient aid. The New-York Superintendent of the Transatlantic Company came down to Sandy Hook in a tug-boat this afternoon, and engaged a special train over the New-Jersey Southern Railroad. The tug Cyclops, of the Coast Wrecking Company, visited the vicinity of the stranded vessel, coming up quite close to the latter. It was found impossible to board the steam-ship on account of the heavy sea. After repeated efforts of this kind had been made and had failed, the Cyclops left the place and returned to New-York. Arrangements are, however, being made to take out cargo from the vessel and thus lighten her. In this event it is believed that at high tide the steam-ship will be afloat again. The steam-ship thus stranded left Havre for New-York, by way of Plymouth, at 2 P. M. on Dec. 23 last, having been over 14 days on her passage across the Atlantic. Almost from the start she experienced very rough weather. Capt. Pouzois said to-day that before taking the pilot on board he had been up for six days and nights trying to keep the vessel off the coast, and the passengers confirm the story. Among these passengers are eight French nuns, bound for Illinois.

At break of day this morning the news of the disaster, greatly magnified and distorted, had been disseminated through the villages in this neighborhood, and the greatest excitement prevailed. It was asserted that 30 lives had been lost by the stranding, and that the vessel itself was a total wreck. Statements like these spread very quickly, and great numbers of persons, some from places many miles distant, hurried to the scene and lined the beach by thousands. Over three thousand persons were present during the day, and all manifested great interest. It seemed from the shore that the vessel was intact and would be floated off at high tide. Up to a late hour the Captain of the steamship remained on board. No one seemed able to give any clear or intelligible account of the cause of the accident, and it seems at present appearances as though "some one had blundered." Still, this is as yet a matter of conjecture, and the blame of the accident, if any blame is to be given, will probably be put on the pilot, he being responsible for the safety of the vessel which was in his charge. In regard to the condition of the stranded vessel, from all appearances at a late hour this afternoon, it seems probable that after being lightened of portions of her cargo she may be floated off. A heavy sea however may yet play mischief with the vessel's sides, but no serious trouble is anticipated, and it is believed that she will be set afloat without serious damage. Preparations have already been begun for lightening the vessel of cargo.

WHAT THE CAPTAIN OF THE META SAYS.

Capt. Burnes, master of the schooner Meta, of the Coast Wrecking Company's fleet, stated to a TIMES reporter, last evening, that he had passed the steamer L'Amérique at 7:30 o'clock yesterday morning. The sea was running very high, and as the Meta was heavily laden, having on board the boiler, cable, and anchor of the wrecked steamer Circassian, Capt. Burnes was unable to approach nearer to the L'Amérique than within hailing distance. The steamer at that time was "head on" the beach at Seabright, N. J. From the position in which the stranded steamer was lying Capt. Burnes was of the opinion that there was no immediate danger of her going to pieces. He thought that if any of the crew were lost, the accident must have occurred to them while they were in a small boat. The schooner Meta was being unloaded at her dock at Staten Island last night, and, with the schooner Sallie Merritt, will be towed down to the scene of the disaster at 3 o'clock this morning by the steamer Lackwanna, also belonging to the Coast Wrecking Company. If the services of the Meta should not be required she will proceed to the wreck of the Circassian for another cargo. Anchors, cables, and a steam pump will be taken to the wrecked L'Amérique, and at high tide Capt. Burnes thinks she can be got off with a little lightering of her cargo.

DESCRIPTION OF THE L'AMERIQUE.

The steam-ship L'Amérique was built in 1862, at St. Nazaire, France, and was named L'Impératrice Eugénie, after the French Empress. She was then a three-decked, side-wheeled steamer, 353 feet in length. Eleven years later, in December, 1873, she was reconstructed by Messrs. Leslie & Co., at Newcastle-on-Tyne, the design being to make her a sister ship to the ill-fated Ville du Havre. She was renamed the L'Amérique, and a fourth deck added to her, and her original dimensions increased, as follows: Length over all, 400 feet, being an increase of 57 feet on her old measurement; breadth, 43 feet 6 inches; depth of hold, 39 feet 3 inches; draft of water at load line, 24 feet; registered tonnage, 2,800 tons; 4,500 tons burden, builder's measurement. She was refitted with two compound direct-acting propeller engines, with four cylinders, two of 41 inches and 75 inches diameter respectively, and 51 inches stroke of piston, and six tubular boilers, and 10 bulk-heads, each boiler having four furnaces. She was berk-rigged, and her hull was of plate-iron, seven-eighths of an inch in thickness on her bottom, diminishing to three-quarters of an inch at her sides. Her interior was magnificently furnished and provided with every appliance calculated to secure the comfort and safety of her passengers. The grand saloon, which was entered through a wide vestibule, with walls and columns of richly-ornamented wood, was spacious and well ventilated, and upholstered with crimson velvet. The ceiling was beautifully enameled in white and gilt, and finished in the most artistic manner, the walls being paneled with elaborately-carved marble, with central figures wrought in gold. Costly mirrors adorned the forward and after walls, a fine library and a grand piano completing the furniture of the apartment. The smoking-room, which was also elegantly furnished, was situated on the same deck, opposite to the saloon entrance. The first-class passenger cabins were located forward and aft of the saloon and smoking-room, and were capable of accommodating 112 persons. The second-class cabins were on the deck below, and had accommodations for 114 passengers, while the steerage contained berth-room for 600, with small private apartments for the use of families. The ladies' toilet-room and the bath-room and lavatory were located on the main saloon deck, and were tastefully upholstered in blue and gold. She were provided with 10 capacious life-boats, of approved build and pattern, and a sufficient number of life-preservers, which were stowed in different parts of the ship.

THE NEWS IN THE CITY.

The news of the stranding of the steam-ship L'Amérique, of the General Transatlantic Company's Line, was received in this City yesterday morning, and caused at first an intense excitement, as the earlier rumors were full of exaggerated accounts of the loss of life. Among the friends of persons on board the anxiety for a while was very great, and inquiries at the office of the steamship line and in the telegraph offices were numerous and continued until evening, when assurances were received that no lives had been lost except those of the three sailors by the swamping of a boat. Upon the receipt by the Coast Wrecking Company of the news of the stranding of the steamer L'Amérique, the tug Cyclops was immediately sent to Seabright, with instructions to render all assistance necessary to the disabled vessel. The brigs Frank West and Troy were secured by the agent of the Transatlantic Company, Mr. Louis de Bebian, and at 11:30 yesterday morning they left for the beach. The Cyclops on her arrival at Seabright was unable to approach near enough the steam-ship to communicate with, her owing to the swiftness of the water. She returned to Stapleton during the afternoon and reported that it would be impossible to do anything toward lightening the stranded steam-ship before this morning. The vessel was well up on the beach, the surf making a clean breach over her, but everything was still standing, and appeared to be in good condition. The Frank West and the Troy, with 12 or 15 men, also visited the stranded vessel, and finding it impossible to reach her, returned to Sandy Hook. The crew disembarked here, and started at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon to walk to Seabright, seven miles distant. Mr. De Bebian said last evening that he did not then know the exact number of passengers on the steam-ship. Among the valuable items contained in the cargo are a lot of paintings owned by the Blodgett estate, the value of which had not been ascertained, but which were known to be fully insured in the Atlantic Insurance Company. The rest of the cargo is general in its nature. A third tug was last night engaged by the agent of the French line, which left this City at an early hour this morning, carrying 20 stevedores and a number of clerks, and it is understood that they will begin at as early an hour as possible to-day, the work of unloading the steam-ship L'Amérique. None of the accounts given have as yet explained the manner in which the accident occurred, but it is said that at the time of stranding a dense fog was prevailing, and the vessel was in the midst of large fields of ice. At 4 o'clock this morning the Coast Wrecking Company sent the tug Lackawanna to the wreck. She towed down two schooners, which will be used in lightening the vessel preparatory to an attempt to get her off from the beach.

THE L'AMERIQUE DISASTER OF 1874.

Like her sister steam-ships, the Ville du Havre and the Europe, the L'Amérique has had a very eventful career. Her first voyage to this port after her reconstruction in 1873 was made in January, 1874, her landing here occurring on the 29th of the same month, after a rough voyage from Havre. During this passage she rescued 11 seamen from the British bark Zirab, bound from Pensacola, Fla., for Swansea, Wales, which she found on Jan. 21, lying in a disabled condition in latitude 47° 23' north, longitude 29° 30' west from the meridian of Paris. Three days after her arrival it was discovered that 500 boxes of a large consignment of silk which formed a portion of her cargo were nearly ruined by water. Her officers denied, however, that she leaked, insisting that the damage to the cargo had been caused by "blowing"—the pitching and tossing of the ship in heavy seas—the water, they claimed, having been forced through her well-holes and sounding tubes. Notwithstanding this argument, the examination resulted in her being marked down on the Record of Surveys of the Underwriters from A1½ to A2½. It was asserted by shipping authorities that the iron lining of the hull was of inferior quality, but that it was so thickly coated with paint that its superiority or inferiority could not be ascertained. Mr. Levret, a graduate of the French Ecole Polytechnique, who had had charge of some boiler repairing on her, after her first voyage, above alluded to, stated that on her return to Havre she had six feet of water in her hold, the leaking being confined to no particular part of the vessel. She reached Havre on Feb. 18, but did not undertake another voyage until March 15. About a month later, on April 4, she left this port, under the command of Capt. Roussan, for Havre, with a cargo of wheat, hides, bacon, and sundries, valued at $200,000. Her safe arrival in the port on the 14th of the same month was reported by a cable dispatch to Mr. MacKenzie, the New-York agent of the line. On the 16th, however, the latter gentleman received a private dispatch stating that the vessel did not arrive safely in port as at first reported, but had foundered, during a violent tempest, 80 miles to the westward of the Isle of Ushant, off the coast of Brittany, and 107 miles to the westward of Brest. Cable dispatches announced that every one on board was saved with the exception of the Second Officer, Eugene Garré, an experienced French seaman. The news of the foundering created considerable surprise, as the spot where the vessel was reported to have sunk was some distance from the Isle of Ushant, and where the water, ranging from 60 to 80 feet in depth, precluded the theory that the vessel had struck on a sunken rock or shoal. Later cable dispatches stated that the vessel had encountered a terrible storm, which sprang up on the 13th. During the night she began to fill with water so quickly that the furnace fires were extinguished three times. The engineer, however, succeeded in keeping up steam until the 14th, when the engines stopped. It was then discovered that she had sprung aleak, and late in the afternoon she became so unmanageable that the Captain was compelled to notify the passengers to prepare to abandon her. The Alladin, a Norwegian vessel, the Michigan, an English vessel, and the Eliza Caterole, an Italian vessel, all of whom had been lying in the vicinity, waiting to render assistance to the disabled ship, were signaled by Capt. Roussan, and the passengers were rescued. Although the rescue was accomplished during a raging sea, the only accident was the drowning of Second Officer Garré. The official report of Capt. Roussan, transmitted to the steamship company immediately after the rescue, attributed the disaster to the alterations which the vessel had undergone, her lengthening having impaired her seaworthiness. The abandoned vessel, which, it was supposed, had foundered shortly after her desertion, was encountered on the 15th by the steamer Sprav, during its voyage from Newport to Gibraltar, in latitude 47° 49', while drifting in the ocean. Upon being boarded by the engineer and mate, it was found that all her boats, excepting the gig, were gone, and that six feet of water were in the stokehole. Two of the dead lights were burst in and admitting water, the pumps were choked and useless, the propeller was gone, and the donkey engine broken. The cargo, too, had shifted. No sounding pumps were to be found on the ship. The Spray sent a salvage crew on board and warps were attached to the cable chain of the disabled steam-ship preparatory to taking her in tow. While towing her, the Spray sighted the B. F. Barry, from Panama, who assisted in bringing the ship into the harbor of Plymouth, where she arrived on the 18th. While being berthed on the 20th, she grounded, and it became necessary to lighten her to get her afloat. The child, according to the word of his Saviour, he laid his head lowly at the feet of Christ and bowing, so humbled by himself, was by his Lord lifted up into the embraces of love so that he should die on the bosom of Jesus, we thank Thee, good Lord. And while we pray for ourselves, we pray also for those who in distant places are lifting unto God their hearts to-day in solemn worship in memory of this great love and this great death; and especially we pray Thee to bless the solemn services conducted in the university that bears his name, that the Spirit may come and rest upon them, and that the numbers who shall bow this day before Thy throne in the church there may worship God, and may go forth in strength to carry the benefaction of Thy deceased servant, even unto the ends of the earth. And now, God, be merciful to us and bless us, and cause the light of Thy countenance to shine unto us, that Thy name may be known upon earth."

Dr. Deems announced that there would be sung a hymn which the deceased loved well. It was a plain hymn, but one over which the aged Commodore, in church and at home, often shed copious tears: "Is the Christian's Home in Glory."

Dr. Deems then said: It would seem to be a happy thing that the custom of the Pastor of this church at funerals should be in such perfect accord with the explicit wishes of our deceased friend. It is almost never appropriate to speak about the dead at his obsequies. No man will desire to allude to any of his human frailties and faults, and no man can make the dead man's friends love him more than they do when they surround his remains. And so, when he charged that at his funeral not many words should be said, and that they should be said deliberately, and that there should be no attempt to set forth any supposed virtues he might possess, the request was in accordance with my feeling. And it is all the better, because an occasion is to come when he who long held the position of Pastor toward him will have an opportunity carefully to state his own estimate of his character and of his career. I have therefore prepared no note of sermon and no note of address. I have come to talk to you, not about the dead but about the living. I have come to seize this occasion when you are all solemn, when you are all excited by the fact of another death, the death of a most conspicuous man, to bring you for a moment to a consideration of this blessed Christian faith of ours by which men can best live. I am not come to talk to you about death; living men have nothing to do with dying. I am not going to exhort you to prepare for death; I don't believe in wasting men's lives that way. You and I have no time to prepare for death; our lives are packed and crowded too closely with responsibilities to be wasting one minute about thinking of dying. That is not the Christian faith, and yet there are many men who seem to regard religion as simply an arrangement for a happy and safe voyage over the river of death into a land of immortal life. That is not the religion set forth in the New Testament Scriptures. What have you to do with dying? God takes care of that, and you have no more to do with the preparation for death than with preparing for being born. Those two are the inevitables of human existence, and God Almighty alone manages the inevitable. Men talk of dying. Why, it is but an instantaneous physical experience that is over as quickly as one winks. Dying is solemn; but oh, man, living is awful. It is awful to live, for in our jokes, in our witticisms, in our domestic and business relations, we are daily exerting an influence which is to go on forever and ever; and, therefore, Christianity comes to men for living, not for dying. The words of the Apostle are the words of the Christian faith: "This mortal must put on immortality; this corruptibility must put on incorruption;" and he concludes with the advice "be steadfast." The pietist, the mystic, and the stoic might say let us retire to the cloister and to the cell, for of what avail are all earthly labors if this is to be the end? But Christianity says men may come and men may go, and whole generations be swept off by war, and flood, and flames, and pestilence, but "be steadfast." Steadfastness is an element of Christianity if exercised in a legitimate and honorable business; stand right and do not be swept away by fanaticism or false enthusiasm. And what more? Work. Work, even in the presence of impending death, and never think of retiring. I have seen too many young men retire in their prime, and die before their full ripening. Now let me charge you as a minister of the Gospel of the Son of God, never retire. Look around such an assemblage as this and see men who according to the idea of laying off the harness before one dies might have retired 20 years ago, and they are still, thank God, examples of earnest work. So was our deceased friend. The last thoughts of his life were business thoughts. He directed through his own mind, and they tended to the honor and glory of God. Christianity tells men to be always abounding in the work of the Lord. And what does that mean? I humbly venture to think it is this, that if I have done anything on Sunday I must do more on Monday, and increase the amount of labor day by day. Brethren, whatever our beloved and revered friend did from selfishness, whatsoever he did from vanity, whatsoever he did from pride, whatsoever he did from worldliness may have grown to be a large and brilliant thing; and yet each one of them as it strikes his tombstone will burst like a bubble. What of him remains? Only that which he did in the Lord. That will stay. I think it will be a soft pillow for my dying hour that I have one remembrance which I may state even here of this our beloved friend. Lately he took me by the hand, and looking in my face with the tears in his eyes he said: "Dear doctor, you never crowded your religion upon me, but you have been faithful to me." "Yes," I said, "dear Commodore, but I have held back nothing of the counsel of God which I thought needful for your salvation," and shall I here, in the presence of these people, and in the presence of his precious remains, fail to be faithful to his memory and to you?

What gave him his comfort at last, my friends? That there was not a civilized nation upon the face of the earth that did not know his name? That there was not a single King or Emperor or Queen on the face of the earth that did not know of his achievements? That his fame covered the earth, and the lustre of his deeds shone like sunlight among the nations? No. What gave him his comfort at the last? That he could count up millions to be left unto his children? No. But it was this, that Jesus Christ by the grace of God had tasted death for him; that there was in the Godhead not simply his Creator but his Redeemer, and that coming as a little child, he could lay his head in the lap of Jesus and feel that he had a Saviour there. Oh, you and I may speculate as we please about Christianity, but here is the solemn fact of Christianity, and here is the solemn fact that when men come to die they hold Jesus Christ with simple trust, having repentance toward God, they find peace and everlasting rest. There were two things our beloved and revered friend lacked. One was the advantage of early scholastic culture; the other was intimate religious associations through his middle life and the main part of his career; and those two were of his life, as he has solemnly said to me, were about the only regrets that he had. But remember that while Cornelius Vanderbilt had not the advantages of a collegiate education, that great lack was compensated in a large measure by the extraordinary intellectual endowments wherewith God had gifted him. And then, and mostly, remember this, that that what saved him was the fact that never in any part of his life did he for one single instant, as he has solemnly asseverated to me over and over, doubt that this was the word of God, and the rule of faith and practice. Never. "I never," he said, "required to be persuaded of the divine origin of the Bible. I have never had a minute when I did not believe that it was the word of God, whether I kept it or not." Have you that faith? If he had gone through life without that faith; if he had come to this great battle, this six or eight months' campaign, fighting on the outskirts, fighting in the intrenchments, fighting in the citadel, fighting to the last; if he had come without that wonderful faith in the Word of God, who could have helped him? This is the gospel of Christianity—the gospel of salvation through Jesus Christ. To those who have heard nothing about the Redeemer I have nothing to say; but to you who have listened to the Gospel of Jesus, I charge you as you shall come to the judgment seat of Christ that you be prepared to answer this question: What did you do with Jesus? What have you done with the talents given you by his death and crucifixion? For remember that by the gospel of Jesus you shall be judged.

My friends, I might have made these remarks briefer; but nature is nature, and I am not—God knows I am not—discharging in a perfunctory manner the duties of a Pastor toward a parishioner. I have made no preparation for this occasion, because I knew that at the moment when I was to speak over his remains I could not control my thoughts, and I have been talking as far away from him as I could upon these general topics. I felt, if I spoke of him at all, I should not be able to speak of him as befitted the love I bore him. And oh, how he was loved! Money can't buy love—you know it can't; and never shed tears over a rich man just because he is a rich man. Money can't purchase love. We look at these men in these galleries that have wrought with him, and what a body-guard of affection do they not present? Better than ten thousand Swiss with halberds, hired into mercenal, is one simple manly soul that looks lovingly upon the remains of his friend. Oh, brethren, one grain of love is worth ten thousand tons of admiration. I do believe, and this I will say, and I say it as if he were alive, and that lid were open and he had these eagle eyes turned on me—I will say I believe that this man had true repentance toward God; that he had simple child-like faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as his personal and Divine Saviour; that he did yield himself to the operations of the Holy Ghost, and that, having thus yielded, and in such repentance, and in such faith, and such submission died, he is numbered with the saints in glory everlasting.

The services were plain and simple throughout. Ample provision was made for the press, and owing to the excellent police management all everywhere was avoided. The entire ceremony occupied only an hour and a quarter.

THE FUNERAL PROCESSION.

When the services in the church had been concluded and the congregation of relatives and friends were about to pass out, the throng outside had increased to about 20,000 persons, who occupied all the points from which a view of the funeral could be obtained, and waited patiently and quietly while the final preparations were made before conveying the dead away to the tomb. Overhead the sky lowered grey and threatening, and under foot the streets were full of melted snow. The sidewalks were covered with pools of water, and the trees were dripping rain. The Police had no trouble in preserving the most admirable order, the uncomfortable condition of the streets serving to regulate the size of the throng in attendance, and limiting it to a body of respectful persons, who behaved with the most commendable propriety. As the congregation poured out of the centre door, after the service, there was a movement toward the gates, and a momentary crush when the coffin was borne out by the undertaker's assistants and placed in the hearse. The hearse itself was a simple, plain one, drawn by two horses, making a much less pretentious appearance than those daily seen at the funerals of inconspicuous persons. The Police maintained an open passage-way to the hearse, and the coffin having been carried out, the hearse drove away, preceded by carriages bearing the physicians and Rev. Dr. Deems. Immediately behind the hearse came carriages in which were Mrs. C. Vanderbilt, Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt, and other members of the family; and behind these followed others containing the more intimate friends and many prominent persons who desired to pay the last tribute of respect to the dead by following the body to its last resting-place. The funeral procession passed along Mercer street to Washington place, and then up Washington place to Broadway. Carriage after carriage stopped at the church door to take up loads, until 100 carriages were in line. As the procession moved slowly down Broadway, people gathered along the street to look for the last time upon all that should ever again be seen of Commodore Vanderbilt. At all the hotels clusters of men gathered in the doorways, and guests occupied the windows to see the cortège pass. A few flags were seen floating at half-mast, but for the greater part of the route the street wore its usual Sunday appearance. This was in consonance with the wishes of Commodore Vanderbilt as expressed before his death, and the occasion lost no impressiveness in the absence of the throngs of curious people who are usually seen at such times. At Canal street there were several hundred persons, and again at the Astor House there was a large crowd, and when the head of the line arrived at the Battery it found many persons waiting in the sloppy streets to see the procession pass on to the boats. Here, on the spot where many years ago the dead man who was now going to his rest had begun his career as a young ferryman, he was to be taken up by those who had long known him as the directing spirit and controller of their fortunes. To more than one the early years of his life came back as they had been told and retold for years, and the figure of the sturdy stripling buffeting the winds and waters of the wide bay in his perilous, were recalled as vividly in imagination as if they had occurred but yesterday. When the procession arrived the Police opened a way for the carriages and hearse. Two ferry-boats were in waiting, and upon the first were taken the hearse and immediate family and friends. The second followed the first after an interval of a few minutes, each carrying about 20 carriages and their loads. The remaining carriages either turned back when they reached the ferry, or left their passengers to take the boat for the island. After the departure of the boats the crowds lingered for a time to watch them as they sailed with lowered flags out into the bay, and then slowly dispersed.

THE TRIP DOWN THE BAY.

The first boat, carrying the body of the dead Commodore, left the ferry slip about 1:15 o'clock, and after a short interval it was followed by the second. The bay at this time was filled with floating ice blown across from the western shore and into the easterly channel. The wind was high and keen, and it whistled about the exposed carriages in a dismal and dreary way. Many of the mourners and friends resorted to the warm cabins, and among them were heard many reminiscences of the dead man, which occured to those who had known him during his eventful life. In the carriages were all sorts of people. The wealthy, those who had known Mr. Vanderbilt in his own home; the poor, those who had felt the benefit of his brain-work in generous benefactions and the fulfillment of great schemes. There had been no exclusion of the humblest employe who had cared to come, and these men were full of the theme of their chief's greatness, and warm in their admiration of the calmness and trust with which he met his death.

The boats moved very slowly until they had gone far out into the upper bay. There could be seen many flags displayed at half-mast in token of respect. As the Quarantine and Stapleton landings were passed it was seen that many of the Staten Island people had gathered along the wharves to see the funeral pass. In the meantime the wind had freshened, the clouds began to break, and as they swept away toward the east, the sun shone out brightly. By and by the clouds entirely disappeared, and the hills at Vanderbilt Landing gleamed brilliantly where they were covered with masties of snow. At the landing the steamers Josephine and Robert Collier, displayed their colors at half-mast. There was no attempt made to deck the boats with mourning badges, except to place the flags on the different staffs at half-mast. At Vanderbilt Landing the wharves commanding a view of the approaching boats contained many people, and from the ferry-houses all along the side of the village, the roadside was lined with spectators. In addition to the carriages from New-York, a large number of coaches and sleighs here awaited the re-forming of the procession to the cemetery. From the depot of the Staten Island Railroad and from the Vanderbilt House flags were displayed at half-mast, and in each case the staff displayed from the tall pole in front of the Seamen's Retreat, further back, on the brow of the hill overlooking the bay. The roads here were in a far worse condition than they were in New-York, the melting snow forming rivulet that ran noisily down the gutters leading to the sewers, overflowing the sidewalks and making locomotion extremely difficult and disagreeable. A special train was in waiting at the depot to convey those of the passengers to the cemetery who had been unable to find seats in the carriages.

THE LAST RITES.

The distance from Vanderbilt Landing to the old Moravian cemetery at New-Derp is called four miles. The road in Summer is a charming one, as it winds among hills dotted with pretty residences, from whose summits wide views are obtained of the upper and lower bays and a broad tract of intervening country as it slopes toward the shore. Yesterday the journey was a long one, the horses toiling with difficulty through the snow. It was after 3 o'clock when the first carriage reached the entrance to the church-yard. As it passed through the gateway the bell in the church on the hill-top a few hundred yards away began tolling. A few minutes later the procession filed by the church door, in front of which the hearse stopped, and the coffin was carried into the vestibule and up to the space before the altar-rail, where it was placed upon a bier. A crowd of people from the neighborhood, as well as from New-Brighton, Clifton, and other towns on Staten Island, had lingered about the church since 1 o'clock, patiently awaiting the arrival of the funeral procession. They had occupied many of the seats, the central part of the church, however, having been reserved for the family and friends of the deceased. The church is an old-fashioned little building. It is built high up on a hill, facing the south, with a porch supported by six square columns reaching across its front. Over the central door is a tablet with the inscription: "Protestant Episcopal Church of the United Brethren; founded A. D. 1763; renewed A. D. 1844. Peace be within thy walls." Near by is the residence of the Pastor, and all about the church the rain-soaked snow was treaden down into puddles by those who passed to and from the vault in which the burial was to take place. A force of 25 policemen were in attendance, but their services were not required. The interior of the little homely church was still decked with its Christmas greens, disposed tastefully about the chancel and the chandeliers. The gallery was densely packed. Among those present were many old neighbors of Commodore Vanderbilt, including Mr. H. L. Cortelyou—a venerable, gray-haired man—Mr. John W. Barnes, and Dr. Ephraim Clark, men who had known Mr. Vanderbilt for the greater part of his life. The largest proportion of those persons who came from New-York were able to reach only the porch, as the church was very soon filled to overflowing. The family and most intimate friends having been seated, the Pastor of the church, Rev. William Vogel, opened the services with an extemporaneous prayer. There were no musical services whatever. Following the prayer, Rev. Dr. Deems read the closing part of the Episcopal burial service, including those committal, and at the end of the service announced that, in order to permit those who desired to look for the last time upon the face of their deceased brother, the coffin would be opened. The lid was then removed, and the members of the family groaned about the head of the coffin to gaze for the last time upon the face of him whom they were about to put away from their sight forever. The scene at this moment was sadly impressive. Not a sound broke the stillness of the church but the subdued tread of the slowly moving lines of men and women as they passed up one side, by the head of the opened coffin, and down the opposite side to the door. When all the rest had left the coffin Mrs. Vanderbilt and several other members of the family once more stood by it for a few moments looking down upon the white face within, after which the signal was given to close the casket. A procession was then formed, Rev. Dr. Deems and Rev. Mr. Vogel leading. The coffin was borne behind them by six men, and the family followed immediately after the coffin, the simple procession passing across the porch, around the church to the right, and then back a few rods to the Vanderbilt vault. The entrance to the vault is through an iron door on the easterly front of the base of a granite monument 30 feet in height. The monument is a very plain one, a marble figure of a veiled female only relieving its severity. There is but one inscription upon it, although there are vacant tablets on the base which may be filled up. Over the door of the vault, in a pediment of granite, are the words:

VAN DERBILT.

The coffin having been deposited in an outer case, it was lowered into the entrance of the vault. With uncovered heads the spectators waited until it had been laid away, when Rev. Dr. Deems turned, and facing the attentive throng, pronounced the benediction, and the funeral was at an end. Mrs. Vanderbilt, who had stood near the door of the vault leaning upon the arm of Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt, stepped to the door of the tomb and looked in for a moment, several other ladies standing with her, after which they moved away toward the waiting carriages, and were soon on their way back to this City. Among those who followed the body to the grave besides the members of the family, were Judge Rapallo, of the Supreme Court, Mr. Augustus Schell, Mr. J. Lorimer Graham, and Mr. George Weaver, of Albany. The special boats conveying those who attended the funeral did not reach this City until 6 o'clock.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES.

PLEASANT COMMENTS BY COMPETENT CRITICS.

From the Hartford Courant, Jan. 1.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES continues to hold the place it took away from the Tribune as the favorite of the great morning dailies among "solid men." It has two columns of January dividends to one column in its rival.

From the Lebanon (N. H.) Free Press, Dec. 29.

It is full of valuable news and editorials, an able and fearless defender of Republican principles, and has done more to expose fraud and corruption than any other paper. It is the leading Republican journal of the country.

From the Lawrence (Mass.) American, Dec. 19.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES has deservedly won a high reputation during the past year as an enterprising journal of news, and an earnest, independent advocate of Republican principles. During the Presidential campaign it has unquestionably ranked as the first Republican paper, and during the exciting year to come will be sure to maintain the position thus won, while as a bright, newsy, clean journal it is not surpassed.

From the Orange (N. J.) Journal, Dec. 30.

THE TIMES is an out-and-out Republican paper, and fights for the cause with great energy, ability and intelligence. It has the courage, however, upon occasion to differ from the party leaders and to insist upon reforms which they would fain evade. As a newspaper it is one of the best in the country, and its literary character is high. It has constantly affirmed the election of Hayes and Wheeler, and has done much to give a right direction to popular opinion in regard to the present political imbroglio.

From the Knoxville (Tenn.) Chronicle, Dec. 27.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES is one of the ablest, most vigorous, most enterprising, and most reliable papers in the world. To it the American people are largely indebted for a true knowledge of the Democratic frauds attempted and perpetrated in the Southern States and elsewhere at the late Presidential election. It has been represented everywhere by able and enterprising special correspondents, who have kept the country thoroughly and reliably posted as to the exciting events that have stirred the nation for several months past.

From the Ypsilanti (Mich.) Commercial, Dec. 30.

It is a source of pride to a great party to have such an able exponent, fearless and independent, as THE NEW-YORK TIMES. Without THE TIMES Hayes and Wheeler could not have been elected. Without this great defender of the right there would have been danger of a lack of backbone, of moral nerve and power, in defending the rightful election of Hayes and Wheeler. Democratic bluster, Democratic fraudulent votes, Democratic bribery, Democratic ballot-box stuffing might possibly have triumphed. We look upon THE NEW-YORK TIMES as the greatest newspaper in America, if not in the world.

From the Little Valley (N. Y.) Republican, Dec. 28.

THE TIMES is now the leading Republican paper of the country, and in many respects is superior to any paper in it. Its sources of political information are more extensive and more reliable than any of its contemporaries of either party. It was about the only paper that did not concede Tilden's election on the morning of Nov. 8, and for a time Republicans even did not dare to put implicit confidence in its assurances that "all was well," and that Hayes was elected President. The facts were that THE TIMES had its own correspondents in all the disputed States, and was thus enabled to judge more correctly of the situation than other newspapers. It is a model paper, and should have a hearty Republican support.

From the Quincy (Ill.) Whig, Dec. 29.

At this season, when the reading public begins to provide a news supply for the year to come, it is a real pleasure to commend so clean and sterling a sheet as THE NEW-YORK TIMES. THE TIMES is comparatively young in years, but it is older in victories won in behalf of the Republic than almost any other paper in the country. Its exposure of the famous New-York thieves has become historic. It is, in fact, the foremost really recognized Republican paper published anywhere; while in the matter of its news and valuable domestic and literary intelligence it is absolutely necessary to be indispensable to the citizens of the West. We can confidently assure our readers that with a copy of the Whig and one of THE TIMES in their households, they need not be behind in a knowledge of all that transpires in the world that is worth knowing.

From the Pittsfield (Mass.) Eagle, Jan. 4.

Unquestionably the great Republican journal of this country is THE NEW-YORK TIMES. No paper has equaled or even approached it during the last Presidential campaign in party service, in courageous arraignment of the reform pretensions of the opposition, or in the ability and strength it has displayed in the remarkable struggle of the past two months. Its daily assurances during the campaign contest in the disputed States that the right would triumph then, and the bull-dosing and butchery practiced defeat the very scheme it was designed to accomplish, were an encouragement the party found in no other journal, and today the Republican Party finds its best support in its hopes of complete success in the unflinching faith of THE NEW-YORK TIMES. As a newspaper THE TIMES occupies the front rank. Indeed, its daily, from all parts of the country and every quarter of the globe, are a marvel of journalism. It is the great Republican journal and the great national newspaper.

From the Kalamazoo (Mich.) Telegraph, Dec. 28.

The greatest service ever rendered any community by a newspaper was that of THE NEW-YORK TIMES to the tax-payers of that City in fearlessly exposing and destroying the powerful and corrupt Tweed Ring. Valuable as that service was to the tax-ridden City of New-York, THE TIMES has rendered the whole country a more valuable one in the able and fearless exposure of the greatest fraud of modern times—Samuel J. Tilden. Although the stanchest and most reliable Republican paper published in this country, it does not hesitate in exposing fraud and condemning every appearance of evil among members of its own party. Aside from being celebrated as the great Ring smasher and fraud exposer, it is the best and most reliable newspaper on this continent. This fact was fully demonstrated by the perfect system of collating the election returns that enabled it to give the accurate result the first morning after election. If the Republican press of this nation are all as earnest in their patriotic labors as THE TIMES, the cause for which Abraham Lincoln became a martyr to his country will certainly triumph at last, and the war to perpetuate the Union will not have been fought in vain.

A CONTESTED SEAT.

The San Francisco Alta of Dec. 30 says that the facts in the Pacheco-Wigginton contest for the certificate to a seat in Congress from the Fourth District of California are to be passed upon by a jury. The circumstances are thus described:

Chief Justice Wallace delivered the opinion of the court as follows on the demurrer filed on behalf of Wigginton:

"We are inclined to overrule this demurrer, so far as the question is made about the petition being presented. We are inclined to the opinion—at least a majority of the court is—that when these returns came in from the Fourth Congressional District, it was the duty of the Secretary of State to proceed to count; and upon demand and refusal to proceed to count, at that time this writ would lie. As to the effect of this second return, that is another matter. The petition is sufficient on its face to support the judgment that he do count, and that is a sufficient answer to the demurrer."

The Court took a recess for one hour. At the afternoon session, the counsel for Wigginton read a long answer, denying all the main allegations in the petition for the mandamus. Counsel for Pacheco said they were ready for trial on the issues. It was stated by the court that the issues would be made up and submitted to a jury to pass on the facts. Counsel are to draw up the issues, and if they cannot agree the court will settle them.

FLORIDA HUNTING NOTES.

LOOKING UP WILD GAME FOR A CHRISTMAS DINNER.

EXPERIENCES OF A CAPTAIN, A DOCTOR, AND THE TIMES CORRESPONDENT—A LARGE BUCK KILLED—SEVERAL DUCKS AND A FEW TURKEYS SECURED—CAMPING IN THE EVERGLADES—AN IMMENSE RATTLESNAKE—HOW CHRISTMAS DAY WAS OBSERVED.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

NEW-SMYRNA, Fla., Monday, Dec. 25, 1876.

Friday and Saturday of last week were devoted by the men-folk of Smyrna to hunting for their Christmas dinners. Turkeys were the main object of these expeditions, but the possible capture of fresh meat—as game is called here—of all kinds was not forgotten in the preparations. I was fortunate in obtaining an invitation to join one of these parties, consisting of two of the best hunters and guides on the coast. Their instructions to me were to have two days' provisions, including raw coffee and sugar, bread, butter, cheese, cold meat, salt, knife, and cup, put up in a corn sack, and to be ready to start at 6:30 on the following morning. I filled my belt with No. 4 and buckshot cartridges, touched up my gun until her barrels shone inside like mirrors, swallowed a hasty breakfast, and was on the piazza smoking when Capt. Sams trotted up to the side gate, in the hammock. The readers of THE TIMES will bear in mind that in speaking of hammocks now, I mean something totally different from those I described in my account of quail-shooting last week. Those were clumps of scrub plants in the pine woods, equivalent to brush in the North, and seldom higher than a man's head. These are long, narrow patches of palmetto, live-oak, bay, cypress, and pine trees, growing thickly together, hung with long, gray moss, matted with vines as large around as a man's waist, and dotted with bunchy air plants, but with comparatively little undergrowth. The soil is soft and black with water in the hollows, and at present is covered with fallen leaves and withered palmetto fans which crack with a loud report when stepped upon. The shade is always delightfully cool. Tree hammocks stud the country in all directions, wherever there is a savannah, pond, marsh, or other body of water, deep or shallow. The coast is lined with them.

The Captain was mounted on Old Whitey, a cream-colored pony, notorious for his omniverousness. Salt pork, old shoes, raw fish, nothing comes amiss to him—a very useful propensity, by the way, for except in the matter of marsh grass and palmetto leaves, the Florida steeds boast of few luxuries at their masters' hands. Like the cattle, they are generally turned loose to shift for themselves, and have to be hunted up when wanted. A thick blanket was thrown across Whitey's saddle, and two sacks—one filled with corn and the other with provisions—were tied behind. Capt. Sams led for my use Crockett, a tall, well-appearing brown horse, and was followed by a lemon and white deer-hound of considerable local renown, called Buck. Following the Captain's instructions, I flung my blankets across the saddle as a cushion and strapped my sack on behind. Then mounting, I placed my gun athwart the pommel and away we went down the hammock road in a southerly direction. At a cross-path leading from his house, half a mile further on, Dr. Fox was awaiting us. The Doctor bestrode Billy, a diminutive brown pony, which, from long service in the hunting field, has won a reputation for woodcraft second to that of no human being in the region. What with blankets and sacks, and the Doctor and his gun, but little was to be seen of Billy but his little head, his nether limbs, and his worn tail. My companions were both men of no mean intelligence, and both had received a liberal education. They are fair samples of the older settlers of this region. Both were rich men's sons when the war broke out. When it ended they had nothing left. Being profoundly ignorant of the ordinary methods of earning a livelihood, they naturally drifted hither and took to hunting, fishing, boating, and stock-raising—pursuits of which they possessed an amateur's knowledge. They never cease to lament, in an unobtrusive way, what they might have been, but have grown accustomed to their present lot and do not hope to better it. They are Democrats of the most ultra stripe, accuse the Administration of all the evils that embitter their lives, and freely express their preference for the dominion of the Devil himself as a change from Republican rule. They are in favor of another war—in the North. As for themselves, they say they have had enough, and would take up arms again only as the most extreme resort. To Yankees (the generic term South for all Northerners) they have no personal antipathy, and more jovial, courteous, and pleasant companions it would be difficult to meet anywhere.

The day was clear and warm, with a delicious breeze from the ocean, all the indications pointed to a successful hunt and we pressed our horses onward in the best of spirits. It was not long before we reached the open pine woods, through whose dense undergrowth we began to thread our trackless way. The riding here was rather rough. Thick roots and stumps of fallen trees littered the sand, and every little while there was a gopher hole. Broad saw-palmetto fans brushed our stirrups from our feet at every step, and now and then a scrub-oak or a vine attempted to pull us from our seats. Our pace became a walk, the horses treading carefully over the obstructions, and sometimes stumbling on them. We wound in and out in Indian file, following the natural paths between the clumps of bush where we could, or crashing through the bushes where they grew too thickly. We skirted the edges of the savannahs when we came to any, the tough grass and dry mud affording better walking. At short intervals immense coveys of quail whirred into the air, alarmed at our approach, and from the tall grass of one savannah we frightened a flock of black-birds that must have numbered thousands. Eagles, hawks, and buzzards circled above our heads screaming, and thrushes, meadow-larks, and other small birds flitted from tree to tree, twittering loudly at the unwonted sight. We had no ammunition to spare on such as these. Fresh deer tracks were numerous in the sand, and before we had gone a mile Buck was busy trotting through the bushes or bounding over them. Track after track was followed and lost where the deer had crossed some body of water. Strung out like pickets we followed closely in the faithful beast's footsteps, stopping short when, the scent appearing to grow warmer, his circlings became more contracted, and his movements more animated. We had been thus disappointed several times, and my attention was fast slackening, when suddenly, at the edge of a small hammock about two miles from camp, I noticed the Captain and the Doctor clap their heels into their horses sides and dash forward. I followed quickly.

Having taken up positions at suitable distances from where the dog, in a perfect tremor of excitement, was whirling about the scrub, we stopped short, unlimbered our guns, jammed in a couple of buckshot cartridges apiece, and waited. Presently the long, musical howl of the hound rent the air, and a large buck bounded over the bushes broadside to us and not 20 yards distant. Our three guns rang out simultaneously and the buck disappeared. Riding to the spot we found the graceful animal stretched on his side and Buck holding him by the throat with a bull-dog grip. The Captain dismounted and cut off the deer's head and feet and disemboweled him. Then with the assistance of the Doctor he dragged the carcass into the hummock, covered it up well with palmetto fans, and left it to be taken up on our return. It was more than usually large and fat, and had shed its horns, an extraordinary circumstance so early in the season.

We had passed about a mile beyond an old Indian burial mound of sand in the middle of the woods, supposed to mark the site of an ancient battle-ground. The dog was following a trail in the open, and Capt. Sams was riding behind it. The Doctor and I were skirting the edge of a hummock, some 400 yards away, whither it was likely the deer, whose trail we were following, would run if he escaped the Captain's aim. A small savannah filled with very tall grass lay in front of us. When we got around it we were chagrined at the sight of three deer bounding off in a row about 300 yards ahead of us, their bushy white tails bobbing, and their brown backs gleaming above the saw-palmetto brush at every jump. As far as the eye could reach we saw those tails receding from us like the wind. Had we had rifles we could probably have slain all three. We shouted for the dog, but soon became aware that the Captain was yelling for us to come to him. Thinking Buck had found another quarry, we plunged our heels into our horses' sides and trotted quickly to where his master was. A curious buzzing sound arose from the bushes in front of where the Captain sat on his horse. "Come here and I'll show you something," he said. I approached, and there, within ten feet, lay coiled the largest rattlesnake I had ever seen. He was fully six feet in length and as thick as a man's ankle. "Turn your horse around and shoot him," said the Captain. I leveled my gun and blazed away. The snake fell all in a heap and I dismounted and pulled the rattles off his tail. We resumed our march along a well-defined trail, but had proceeded but 20 yards when the Captain, who was in advance, suddenly swerved his horse into the bushes on the left and shouted, "Doctor, look out!" Another enormous rattlesnake, but little smaller than the first, had run across the trail, square between the horse's legs. Dr. Fox reined in his pony and shot it dead. It had eleven rattles. These were the first snakes of the species either had seen in two years. They were the first of any sort I had met since my arrival. Snakes, in this portion of Florida, at least, are very scarce. The woods are burned over by hunters so frequently that it kills them off.

We journeyed the remainder of the 12 miles to our destination without incident. We were bound for Turnbull Swamp. Arriving at the largest hummock we had yet seen my guides swerved their animals into brush as high as man and horse which edge the hummock, crashing through it, and dismounted beneath a cluster of palmettos. The place selected as a camp was just inside the hummock. Then, shouldering our guns, we struck into the hummock in search of turkey signs and whatever game we might happen to meet. We went probably half a mile without seeing any, when we reached the edge of a swamp prairie, ankle-deep in water and thickly grown with butter weeds, a stout rush 20 feet high that in Summer is covered with yellow flowers. We pushed and paddled our way through this for probably 100 feet, and came to an open swamp, studded with gaunt cypress and gum trees, around the base of which the brown still water lay knee deep. We plunged along a short distance when a "quack! quack!" and a rustle like distant thunder halted the Doctor, who turned and whispered to me to proceed carefully, and keep a sharp look-out. The words were hardly out of his mouth, when a flock of 20 or 30 ducks rose above the trees 100 yards in front of us, and sailed away. The temptation was irresistible. We took no account of distance but banged away, and missed, of course. Just then a tremendous flutter to our left startled us, and fully 500 great fat mallards, pintails, and widgeons rose into the air half a mile off and sailed broadside to us out of gunshot. They did not go far when they turned. The Doctor shouted "Mark!" and we both stooped beneath two trees that stood near. Two large drakes left the flock and flew toward us, seemingly to reconnoitre. I waited until they had got within fifty yards, being five feet apart, and leveled my gun at them. The right shell missed fire. Taking another hasty aim, I pulled the left trigger, and the nearest drake dropped headlong. The other flew 20 feet further and pitched downward, striking a tree with such force as to knock the feathers from a space on his breast as large as a man's hand. The remainder of the flock turned and disappeared in the direction of the river. Other ducks, in twos and threes and small flocks, soon followed their example, it being near sundown; and, although we waited a while longer and traversed a good portion of the swamp, we did not get another shot at them. As we were wading back, however, a flock of white cranes passed over our heads, on their way to roost on an island in the river about nine miles from here. They had flown out of reach before we saw them. The Doctor had wanted a pair of crane-wings for a week to put upon his little daughter, who was to appear as an angel in one of a series of tableaux which were to constitute the sole dissipation of Christmas night in New-Smyrna. We accordingly stood still for some more of them to come along. We did not have long to wait. While we were still gazing at the flock that had gone by one of them turned and flew slowly back as though to find out what we were doing there. He came on until within 20 feet, and looked down at us with a most impudent leer. The next instant the Doctor's gun rang out, and the crane lay stone dead on the water of the slough. His wings measured five feet from tip to tip, and on his back was a beautiful plume.

We took a different path through the hammock, and on our way back to camp stopped several times to listen for the possible flight of a turkey, but in vain. Capt. Sams had arrived before us. He had started a roaring fire with the fallen pine as a back-log, and his stockings and undergarments were already drying on sharpened palmetto stalks before it. He had killed two ducks that we had frightened toward where he had stationed himself, and had found some turkey signs. After changing our wet clothing and exchanging experiences, some brown swamp-water was procured from a pool in the hammock, and we soon had a smoking-hot tankard of coffee prepared. Then the provision sacks were opened and their contents considerably reduced. The quail, toasted on sticks before the fire, added greatly to the relish of our meal. Feeding the horses and dog, spreading our blankets, "drawing" our ducks, which we hung by the necks to some palmetto boots, and preparing our shooting-gear for the morning next occupied our attention. Then we lighted our pipes and, stretched at full length on the blankets before the glowing log-fire, told stories until 10 o'clock. At length drowsiness crept over us, and, with a saddle each for a pillow, we wrapped ourselves in our blankets and were soon asleep.

A faint brightness was beginning to illumine the east when the Captain's voice shouting "daylight" startled me from a light slumber into which I had just fallen. Everywhere else, except where the embers of our expiring fire glowed redly, was in utter darkness, the moon having disappeared. The quacking over our heads of ducks, already on the way from the river to their feeding-ground in the swamp, brought us to a thorough realization of the work before us, and we sprang to our feet. Capt. Sams replenished the fire, while Dr. Fox went into the hammock for water, and we were speedily seated around our coffee, meat, and bread, making them vanish with a gusto that would have astonished our city friends. Having made everything ship-shape, and given each of the horses a good feed of corn, we shouldered our guns just as it was getting light enough to see well, and started in to look up the Captain's turkeys. We walked along in the most profound silence for about 200 yards, when we heard a loud "clank, clank," and a signal from the Captain caused us to stop. He pointed up a cypress tree almost over our heads, and instantly he and the Doctor had their guns leveled. I looked hard, but could distinguish nothing. I learned afterward that turkeys choose the end of a limb beside a clump of leaves, and sit perfectly upright and still, as that practice is required to enable a man to see them. Two reports echoed through the woods, and two black bodies came tumbling through the branches, falling upon the soft earth with a loud thud. A third turkey rose into the air and flew off with a great noise. "Why didn't you shoot?" asked the Captain and the Doctor in a breath. My explanation being satisfactory, the Captain set to work to give me another chance. He drew from his pocket a long, narrow piece of cedar, hollowed out on one side, and with the edges reamed. We all sat down, and he drew this instrument across the barrels of his gun, making a noise in perfect imitation of a turkey. In an incredibly short time an answering "putt" was heard, and presently the head of the turkey was seen bobbing up and down behind a clump of saw-palmettos. I waited no longer, but plumped a double charge of No. 4 shot into the bush—and that was the last we saw of that turkey.

It had occupied only a few minutes to dispose of the turkey business. We returned to camp with our game, and made a fresh start into the swamp after ducks. It now began to shower pretty hard. The Doctor had conceived such an opinion of my skill from my shot of the previous evening that he sent me forward to where it was probable the ducks would be found feeding, and posted himself near the entrance of the swamp, on the look-out for stray shots. I waded along until I thought I had found the right place, and stopped. There I stood for over an hour up to my knees, without seeing a duck. Meanwhile I heard the Doctor's gun go off three times, and pretty soon he came plunging through the morass, holding two fat ducks by the neck with one hand. He said he had killed the third, but it had fallen at such a distance from him that he was unable to find it. On hearing me shoot, he thought it probable I had lost my way, and he set out to look me up. I had mistaken the direction, and was a full quarter of a mile from where I should have been. Guided by the Doctor, I found the right spot at last, though it did not turn out to be the right spot after all. The ducks were further on in the midst of a dense thicket of willows, where the water was at least waist-deep. The Doctor told me to remain where I was, and he would venture into the willows and try to scare out the ducks. I cut two forked twigs, and set up the ducks the Doctor had killed in the middle of a little open space in front as decoys. Then I made myself comfortable on the low tr

WILLIAM MORRIS' LATEST POEM.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, AND THE FALL OF THE NIBLUNGS. By WILLIAM MORRIS, author of "The Earthly Paradise." Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1877.

If poetic fame can be earned by weight of books and accumulation of verses, William Morris must be considered one of the foremost poets of the day. The stream that began to flow so full and so pleasantly in the Earthly Paradise shows no signs of diminution. On the contrary we have in the Story of Sigurd a perfect freshet of rhyme on whose broad bosom we see gliding past us the greater part of Scandinavian mythology and heroic legend. There is no weakening in the hand that spins off line after line, canto after canto, like the following quotation from page 2:

Thus was the dwelling of Volsung, the King of the Midworld's Mark,
As a rose in the Winter season, a candle in the dark;
And as in all other matters 'twas all earthy houses crown,
And the least of its wall-hung shields was a battle-world's renown,
So therein withal was a marvel and a glorious thing to see,
For amidst of its midmost hall-floor sprang up a mighty tree,
That reared its blessings roofward, and wreathed the root-tree dear
With the glory of the Summer and the garland of the year.

I know not how they called it ere Volsung changed his life,
But his dawning of fair promise, and his noontide of the strife,
His eve of the battle-reaping and garnering of his fame
Have bred us many a story and named us many a name;
And when men tell of Volsung, they call that war-duke's tree,
That crowned stem, the Branstock; and so it was told to me.

This is the measure, with hardly the exception of a line, from beginning to end of nearly 400 pages of verse, each page having space for 30 lines. The old metrical chroniclers would not have blushed to own such a fine body of poetry, freely dealt out without regard to time or space, and fit to be recited by the yard by lazy minstrels to still lazier nobles in the Middle Ages. For that is what Mr. Morris is doing. He is reviving the Middle Ages in modern times, and although his topics are chosen from the most ancient legends of Germanic peoples, the form in which he casts them is purely—as far as a modern is likely to get it—mediæval. In this he is not singular in England, for Mr. Swinburne has done a good deal in the same line, may be said, together with Rossetti, to have started the fashion, while minor poets of the same set, like Edmund Gosse, carry out the mediæval word-painting into the province of miniature sketches.

The measure William Morris uses is that of the "Nibelungen Song" and the "Song of Gudun," two old Austrian poems of the twelfth century, but with this exception, that in these latter every fourth line has some additional feet. At first this peculiarity of the old songs is very disagreeable, but after reading for some time, it has the unsuspected merit of breaking the monotony of the verse. Not so with that Mr. Morris uses. Let us give an extract from the scene where Odin, in the shape of a one-eyed old man, appears at Signy's wedding and imbeds in the Volsung tree the wonderful sword which Sigmund only can draw out:

So strode he to the Branstock nor greeted any lord,
But forth from his cloudy raiment he drew a gleaming sword,
And smote it deep in the tree-bole, and the wild hawks overhead
Laughed 'neath the naked heaven as at last he spoke and said:
'Earls of the Goths and Volsungs, abiders on the earth,
Lo there amid the Branstock a blade of plenteous worth!
The folk of the war-wand's forges wrought never better steel
Since first the burg of heaven uprose for man-folk's weal.
Now let the man among you whose heart and hand may shift
To pluck it from the oakwood's e'en take it for my gift!'

* * * * * * *

So sweet his speaking sounded, so wise his words did seem,
That moveless all men sat there, as in a happy dream,
We stir not lest we waken; but there his speech had end,
And slowly down the hall-door and outward did he wend;
And none would cast him a question or follow on his ways,
For they knew that the gift was Odin's, a sword for the world to praise.

There is a slight variation on this form of verse when it comes to dialogue, for each speaker is given a verse, and a space separates them on the page. Thus when Sigurd, having hidden in a pit on the path or slot of the serpent Fafnir, the serpent that guarded the Hoard, stabs him from below, we read as follows:

But there was the ancient Fafnir, and the Face of Terror lay
On the buddied folds of the serpent, that were black and sahon-gray
In the desert lit by the sun; and these twain looked each on each,
And forth from the Face of Terror went a sound of dreadful speech:

'I am called the Wild-thing Glorious, and alone I went on the earth.'

'Pierce child, and who was thy father? Thou hast cleft the heart of the foe!'

'Am I like to the sons of menfolk, that my father I should know?'

'Wert thou born of a nameless wonder? shall the lies to my death-day cling?'

'How lieth Sigurd the Volsung, and the son of Volsung the King?'

The superscriptions to the books into which Mr. Morris has divided his work are in keeping with the tone used throughout, a tone not of this day, nor of the simple days when the earliest records of these legends were recited and sung. For the book from which the last quotation was taken, that called Regin, we read:

"Now this is the first book of the Life and Death of Sigurd the Volsung, and therein is told of the birth of him and of his dealings with Regin, the master of masters, and of his deeds in the waste places of the earth."

Naturally enough Mr. Morris has a tendency to repeat words beginning with the same letter in one line, for alliteration is part and parcel with Scandinavian and Anglo-Saxon poetry. But he does not make the attempt at least one German has, to carry over into English the system itself. We allude to a book founded on these very legends, written by one Jerdan in German. Like him, Mr. Morris has gone, for the main lines of the story, to what is called the Younger Edda, where a curious reader may find it all in a kind of prose "argument." The Older Edda, which is the most ancient record we have of the legends and mythology of what are vaguely call the Angle-Saxon race, but what the Germans call the Germanic or Teutonic race, furnishes him with a thousand hints, phrases, and passages to help construct the story. Both the Eddas have been translated into German by Karl Simrock, and have passed through numerous editions. In dealing with these Scandinavian materials, Mr. Morris assumes the position of the writer of the Austrian Nibelungen-lied above mentioned, rather than that of any other poet we can think of. What we find modern about him approaches Tennyson, who has turned to account a different set of legends arising from a different race.

The story of Sigmund has been divided into four books. The first recites the marriage of Signy, Sigmund's sister, the treachery of Siggeir, her husband, by which all the Volsungs, with the exception of Sigmund, are cut off, and the deception Signy practices on Sigmund, similar to that of the daughters of Lot in the Bible, whereby her child Sigurd becomes doubly endowed with the might of the fated Volsungs. Book second tells of this Sigurd's birth, his ancestral horse, the making of his sword from the pieces of that which belonged to his father Sigmund, and the slaying of Fafnir, the great serpent-dwarf. It closes with the awaking of the Valkyrie Brynhild upon the flame-encircled mountain. Book third is the Book of Brynhild, where we strike the legend as it appears in the "Nibelungen-lied." Sigurd, having sworn troth to Brynhild, who has been degraded from heaven for disobedience to Odin, is given a magic potion by the wife of a king with whom he is staying, the King of the Niblungs. He loses all memory of Brynhild, marries Gudrun, the Niblung princess, wins Brynhild for Gunnar, his brother-in-law, and is slain at the instigation of his deserted betrothed. The last book contains the revenge that Gudrun wreaks on her brothers for the murder of the great Sigurd and her own destruction after all.

Through all this tissue of gigantic deeds Mr. Morris passes on without a moment's faltering. It is only just to say that his verse gains a certain magnificent strength from the subjects, and that the Story of Sigurd the Volsung has more fire and energy than The Earth Paradise. He is evidently steeped in the legends he has chosen, and takes colors indiscriminately from many sources. Just as Wagner has buried himself in the Edda and the literature which has sprung therefrom, and thus evolved the trilogy of operas that was given last Summer at Bayreuth, so Mr. Morris has identified himself with the same legends and poured out the result in these thousands of swinging lines. It is needless to advise people to read them. Were they done with far less skill, their contents would be worth knowing as in some sort an introduction to the Edda. But they have, beside the unusual vigor which we have already noted, that old fascination of Mr. Morris' easy verse, which compels the reader to continue long after he has become quite certain of its monotony.

WORK FOR GENTLEWOMEN.

DOMESTIC SERVICE FOR GENTLEWOMEN. A record of experience and success. By ROSEMARY CRAWSHAY. London: Lady Help Office, Lower Seymour street.

Mrs. Crawshay is a remarkable woman. The wife of one of England's richest commoners, Mr. Robert Crawshay, she has attracted attention by her courageous speeches on social topics of national importance, and by her successful establishment of a system of lady helps for the upper classes. Mrs. Crawshay first moved educational society by an eloquent address, delivered as Chairwoman of a school board, in support of mixing the sexes in schools. She urged that boys and girls taught together and at the same time, instead of separately as at present, had upon each other a mutual influence for good, and her remarks were couched in language as eloquent as it was practical. She has written and spoken in favor of cremation, and she is, when in London, a regular attendant of Mr. Moncure D. Conway's chapel. But the scheme which has her special attention now is that of providing work for poor gentlewomen, and she has given to domestic economy a new word, "lady help," and a more extended application. Mrs. Crawshay tried the system of lady-help in her own house (Cyfarthfa Castle, in Wales,) for twelve months before promulgating her scheme, and having proved the correctness of her views, she read her experience before the British Association, and she is now about to publish the unpretentious book, the advanced sheets of which are under our notice, in the further interest of her plans. There are 900,000 more women than men in Great Britain, for whom marriage is an impossibility, and scores of these are poor but well-educated spinsters, orphan girls, daughters of clergymen and officers who find little or no chance of employment. Mrs. Crawshay urges that it is in the power of the wives of England to help the more delicately-nurtured of these women by giving them the places of upper-servants, and at the same time she calls upon parents to educate their children in home duties, so that in case of financial trouble they may really be able to help themselves at home and abroad. Mrs. Crawshay details her experiences with the earnestness of a true woman, and she has opened a registration office which is beginning to do a fair business in the introduction of ladies to domestic service; and, after all, the "lady helps" ask for no better treatment than New-York freely gives to its servants generally; but there is all the difference in the manners and customs of a people nurtured under the true personal freedom of a young republic and a country dominated in social life by an aristocracy whose airs and graces are imitated down to the lowest class of citizens and servants. In America, labor is honorable so long as it is free and honest; in England it is considered more honorable for a gentlewoman to starve in a garret than to earn an honest livelihood by taking a situation as a cook. Caste is as strong in England as it is among the natives of India; and that is why Mrs. Crawshay has to write, preach, and lecture, in the first place, to induce poor ladies to condescend not to die of starvation, and, in the next place, to get rich ladies to give their poor sisters the treatment of human beings in the character of servants; that she succeeds but slowly in her benevolent work is easily understood; but she is doing a large amount of good, if only in the humanizing direction of making rich women and ladies of fashion reflect that after all poor women and servants are flesh and blood, and that God did not make the world for the exclusive use of carriage-people and ladies who rejoice in the possession of a town house and a country mansion.

THE JERICHO ROAD; A STORY OF WESTERN LIFE. Chicago: JANSEN, MCCLURG & Co. 1877.

Here is a little book written for a purpose—a moral purpose, and, it may be confessed at once, a temperance purpose. The adventures of Lemuel Pankett furnish the text for a light and not uninteresting sermon on the egotism and covetousness of people, who hope to gain heaven by quoting the Bible and going persistently to church, while the real acts that will satisfy their conscience and win immortality go undone. Even more than a temperance tract, therefore, this little handy volume inculcates charity of the real, tangible kind, actual assistance of overworked employes, whether with money or a lightening of their hours of work, on the part of money-loving employers. After Lemuel has found and lost his father on the Wabash River packet Helen Douglas, he is taken in as man of all work by the Squire, a prosperous "store-keeper" in a Western village. The feverridden boy is taking his dinner in the kitchen:

"'What you wanted to bring home such a shadder for, I can't see,' said the lady.

'It is our duty to help the fatherless in their affliction, the Good Book says, Margaret,' the Squire replied.

'It says "visit" 'em, not help 'em,' retorted Mrs Barkum.

'Well, he can milk a cow,' said the Squire. Then as his wife looked critically through a crack of a door at Lemuel, the Squire continued, 'and he can make garden, an' mow the medder, an cut wood.'

'What have you got to pay him?' asked Mrs. Barkum.

'Nothin',' replied the Squire, 'that is, nothin' for a week.' * * 'But you see it was perfectly safe.'

'That's so,' assented Mrs. Barkum. 'Cast thy bread upon the waters, an' after many days it'll return to you again.' 'It's a powerful sight of bread, though—he's a eatin' fat.'

Lemuel Pankett is overworked and underpaid by the Squire until he takes to drink. Finally, the Squire throws him off, and although the rest of the village forms a critical chorus which does not spare the Squire for his hard dealings, yet no one steps forward to save the boy. The close is dramatic to the verge of suicidalness, the villain and the injured boy dying in a way which would be relished on the stage. Indeed the book shows considerable dramatic power, although evidently the work of a beginner.

American archæology has always had a footing in the City of New-York, although it has been a precarious one. New-York has rivaled even Albany, that city of genealogical trees, in cultivation of the records of by-gone days. The coming year sees the establishment of a new magazine devoted to American history, and therefore presumably to a wider field than that occupied by its forerunners. The gentleman who has been selected for its editor is a well-known authority on all that pertains to local or to New-York State history, and already occupies the position of Librarian to the New-York Historical Society. We trust he will be able to make this monthly an American historical repository in fact as well as name, in order that the early traditions and decaying manuscripts of the first settlers, from the St. Lawrence to the Rio Grande, may find a place to be recorded before they perish. The first number of a handsomely printed magazine of 64 pages, contains, besides historical and biographical papers, three reprints of such original documents. One is a poem by Thomas Paine, another a narrative of the occupation of New-York by the Hessians, from the pen of one of their officers, and the third, the Diary of Goldsbrow Banyar, Deputy Secretary of the Province of New-York in 1757. This last gives a clear idea of the difficulties in the way of raising troops to repel the French and Indians. In "Notes and Queries" a contributor sheds new light on the at present vexed question about the name "Pembina." It seems the northern Crees call the high-bush cranberry Nipiminan, or "waterberry," whence the French got Peminé and the following settlers Pembina. The new State is not to be named Pembina after all, but Huron; but here is a counter-explanation for the one given in Congress, namely, that Pembina means pain bénit, or holy bread.

LITERARY NOTES.

—J. B. Lippincott & Co. have in press, by special arrange, Three Years at Wolverton, by a Wolvertonian.

—J. R. Osgood & Co. will publish about Jan. 15 the third volume of Wilson's Rise and Fall of the Slave Power in America.

—Whitaker's Almanack for 1877, though prepared for the English market, has a large circulation in this country, and is just out.

—Mr. W. J. Middleton has given special attention to the reproduction of the works of Edgar A. Poe, and has brought out several editions of his writings.

—George Bell & Sons, London, have just published The Persecution of Diocletian, a historical essay by Arthur James Mason, of the University of Cambridge.

—Plutarch's Lives, as recently published in Boston by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., has gone over to England, and will be republished there by Sampson, Low & Co.

—Mr. William Leighton, Jr., author of The Sons of Godwin, has been specially unfortunate in treating in this drama the same subject which Tennyson covers in his "Harold."

—Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston, have just published The Frau Domina, from the German of Claire Von Glümer. The sister of Rev. J. F. W. Ware has made the translation.

—Mr. T. Whittaker has bound in a slender volume, under the attractive title New Traets for New Times, his three recent pamphlets on the "Ministry," "Foreign Missions," and the "Reconstructed Creed of Christendom."

— Mrs. Alexander Mitchell, of Milwaukee, is preparing a book of selections from the writings of Bryant, Longfellow, and Mrs. Stowe, the proceeds of which will be given to the hospital for consumptives at Jacksonville, Fla.

—Some Thoughts on the Duties of the Established Church of England as a National Church, is the title of Archbishop Tait's recent visitation charge in the diocese of Canterbury, and Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are its publishers.

—Mr. H. G. Reid, of the Sydney Treasury, has just published An Essay on New South-Wales, the Mother Colony of Australia, which is spoken of as the most accurate and comprehensive account of this great and comprehensive colony yet published.

—It makes people in Boston happy to be reckoned among the Boston Blue. The book which bears this name has been recently published in that city by Edward G. Clark, and the question at once arises why there should not be just such convenient hand-books for every large city.

— It is not often that a first book of poems reaches a third edition within a month from publication, especially when they are a collection of fugitive pieces, but this has been Mr. John W. Chadwick's good fortune in the publication of his poetry, and its quality deserves its unexpected success.

—The February Atlantic will contain a six-page ballad by Whittier, a bright picture of the Salem witches, with a love story thrown in; an important article on the "Political Situation in South Carolina," by a South Carolinian, and the first installment of Mr. Howells' new story "Out of the Question."

—Roberts Brothers have in press D'Ami Fritz, by Erckmann-Chatrian, and Boudoir Ballads, by J. Ashley Sterry. They are just ready to publish James Martineau's Hours of Thought on Sacred Things, Kismet, a brilliant novel of Nile travel, and the third series of the Imaginary Conversations of Walter Savage Landor.

—The Literary World, heretofore a monthly, will in the future be issued as a fortnightly journal, and its editor, who has been connected with the house of Little, Brown & Co., will now give his exclusive attention to the paper, which has won a creditable position for its careful reviews and general literary intelligence.

—Nonsense pays in England. Lewis Carroll's Alice's Adventures in Wonderland has reached a circulation of 52,000; Through the Looking-glass 40,000, and the Hunting of the Snark 16,000 copies. Macmillan & Co. are the happy publishers of this fortunate author, who is said to be a learned Theological Professor in one of the universities.

—The Autobiography and Memoir of Harriet Martineau will be published by Osgood & Co. about the middle of February. The autobiographical part was brought down to 1856 by Miss Martineau, and the memoir since that time has been written by Mrs. Maria W. Chapman, of Weymouth, an old acquaintance and long-time correspondent of Miss Martineau.

—Henry Holt & Co. have in press the Philosophical Studies of the late Chauncey Wright, the foremost metaphysical thinker in America. It is understood that Prof. John Fiske, of Cambridge, has prepared an elaborate estimate of his friend's work, with some adequate memorial of his life, and that it will speedily be published in one of our leading periodicals.

—The sister of Rev. H. W. Foote, in charge of King's Chapel, Boston, Mrs. Mary W. Tileston, has a genius for the editing of hymns. Her latest editorial selections are entitled Sunshine in the Soul, one of Roberts Brothers' "Wisdom Series," of which she is the editor, and her Quiet Hours has been generally accepted as one of the best collections of semi-religious pieces.

—Harper & Brothers have led the van in the list of the most successful publications of the past year. There was such a demand for the Rime of the Ancient Mariner, for Macaulay's Life and Letters, for the Farm Ballads, and the Boys of '76, before Christmas, that the manufacture of the books could not keep pace with the demand, and the publishers lost the sale of thousands of copies simply because they could not be had.

—The imitation of the binding of the "No Name Series," by Jansen, McClurg & Co., Chicago, in the case of The Jericho Road, a story of Western life, recalls the fact that Mr. Thomas Niles, of the firm of Roberts Brothers, Boston, is one of the most inventive men among the publishers. More new styles in the manufacture of books may be traced to him than to almost any one else, and in the "No Name Series," which originated with him, he has made one of the best hits of the season.

—The Bibliotheca Sacra for January, edited by Rev. Dr. Park, of Andover, Mass., contains eleven articles, chiefly on religious subjects. The topics of special interest to the public are: "Theological Education," by Rev. Dr. Frederic Gardiner; "Implements of the Stone Age a Primitive Determination between Man and other Animals," by Rev. Dr. Joseph P. Thompson, of Berlin; "The Slavic Races and Panslavism," by Rev. Dr. Hamlin, of Constantinople; and "Prof. Max Müller and his American Critics," by Rev. George F. Wright.

—Mr. James T. Fields has done many things well, but it remains to be seen how skillful he is in the use of the scissors. James R. Osgood & Co. announce two substantial volumes of about 800 pages each, which are to contain The Family Library of English Poetry from Chaucer to Tennyson, and The Family Library of English Prose from Roger Ascham to John Ruskin. Mr. Fields' object is to include in one volume nearly all the shorter standard poems in the language, and in another volume specimens of the best prose authors in the language.

—Messrs. J. R. Osgood & Co., or rather the printers, Rand, Avery & Co., whom they employed to do their work, have printed a book in probably the quickest time on record. The advance sheets of Tennyson's Harold reached Boston on Sunday. The drama was to be published simultaneously in London and Boston on the 26th. On Monday, Dec. 18, at 8 A. M., the sheets were placed in the printer's hands, and on Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 this book was printed, stitched, bound, and ready to send out to the booksellers. The drama is a 16mo volume, and contains 170 pages.

— Messrs. J. B. Lippincott & Co. are very busy with new books and new editions. They have in press Jonathan Elliot's Debates in the Several State Conventions on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution; they have nearly ready English Echoes in a German Song; they have begun the publication of a series of choice popular works, chiefly of fiction, the first volume of which, Courtship in 1720 and 1860, by Hawley Smart, will be published in a few days; and they are soon to bring out The Molly Maguires, a description of the reign of terror in our coal regions, by B. F. Dewees.

ASTRONOMICAL.

INTERESTING PHENOMENA IN 1877.

"The year 1877 will be more remarkable for interesting astronomical phenomena than any for some time past. On the 9th inst. a beautiful sight will be presented in our morning sky by the conjunction of Venus and Jupiter, the two planets being about two hours' distance from the sun, when Jupiter will appear less than one degree to the south of Venus. On March 1 Mars will pass Jupiter, near the point the sun reaches at his extreme southern declination, but this sight will not be as interesting as the former, as Mars will be nearly overshadowed by the superior brilliancy of Jupiter.

But the astronomical event of the year will be the opposition of Mars, which will occur on the 5th of September. This happens once in a little more than two years, but owing to the ellipticity of the planet's orbit a greater degree of brilliancy is presented when opposition and perihelion occur together, as is the case this year, Mars coming to perihelion Aug. 21, and to opposition 15 days later.

During the months of August and September the fiery little planet will blaze nearly all the night, with a brilliancy rivaling that of Jupiter itself. Oppositions of Mars are valuable for determining the sun's distance, by means of the planet's horizontal parallax, being for this purpose inferior only to transits of Venus. The comparative movements of Mars and Saturn will be interesting, the former passing Saturn on the 27th of July, retrograding past him on the 26th of August, and finally passing him on the 3d of November in direct motion again, Saturn being in retrograde motion all the time. On the 9th of November Venus and Jupiter will again be in conjunction, being about three hours' distance from the sun. They will not, however, be nearer than about two and one-half degrees. Venus being at her greatest heliocentric latitude south, and Jupiter but little past his descending node. During the months of September, October, and November the four planets, Venus, Jupiter, Mars, and Saturn will all be visible in the evening sky, forming in the first half of

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

We have entire confidence in Mr. SLOAN'S ability and fairness, and there can be no question that the composition of the Committees of the Assembly will give evidence of both. In the interest of this City, there is but one specific suggestion which we should like to make for his guidance. It is that the minority of the Committee on Cities should be selected with as careful a regard to the character and qualifications of its members as the majority. Mr. SLOAN is perfectly well acquainted with the men of his own party, and is in no danger of making blunders in designating their proper sphere of action. In choosing the Democratic members of important committees, he may be more likely to regard their standing within their own party than their capacity and honesty. For example, one of the most objectionable members of the New-York delegation is FRANCIS B. SPINOLA, and yet he will probably act as one of the leaders of the minority in the House. The presence of such a man on the Committee on Cities would simply tend to embarrass and delay every step toward reform legislation for New-York or relief for its tax-payers. A place ought to be found for him where he can do less mischief.

It turns out that the so-called "tax-payers" of South Carolina who met in Charleston, and highly resolved not to pay any taxes while CHAMBERLAIN is Governor, are not tax-payers at all. Several of these noisy protestants never pay any taxes whatever. One pays less than $1 50 per annum, and some of them pay in bills of a moribund bank worth ten cents on a dollar. The men who really pay taxes had nothing to do with the high-sounding manifesto of the politicians. It is always so. The men who cry for war are the very first to run away. On the other hand, the substantial citizens of South Carolina have met and have very simply expressed their determination to support the regular Government of the State. If it is any comfort to Mr. HAMPTON to have the sympathy of a portion of the citizens, he is assured that he has with him several people who never pay taxes to anybody.

Commissioner NICHOLLS ought to be glad that a January thaw set in on Saturday night. As a strict constructionist, Commissioner NICHOLLS is of the opinion that snow cannot be removed from the streets under existing laws. The appropriation is for "cleaning the streets." Snow is not dirty; therefore, to remove it requires a special appropriation. This is a refinement of logic. But the rain has reduced the snow to a condition of nastiness in which the most accomplished expert would fail to recognize any resemblance to the cleanly deposit which the law—according to NICHOLLS—says must not be removed except by special appropriation. From one end of the island to the other there is a horrible mass of muddy ice and snow. Now that this has been reduced to the requisite degree of filth, we presume that Commissioner NICHOLLS and his colleagues will joyfully embrace the opportunity to remove it according to law.

There is to be a new election for President in Mexico, Jan. 28, Gen. MENDEZ, a full-blooded and ignorant Indian, who acts as "Regent" while DIAZ is in the field, has issued the necessary proclamation for this election, in which IGLESIAS and his partisans are expressly prohibited from being either candidates or electors. This is the Mexican way of disposing of rivals. LERDO is out of the field—out of the country, indeed, and with a price set on his head. It is forbidden to vote for IGLESIAS or his supporters. All the rest is easy. In Mexico they probably call this a "compromise;" and the people who are opposed to DIAZ are offered the privilege of voting for him or nobody.

In these days of ostentatious and funereal pomp, the simple services over the remains of the late MR. VANDERBILT will be regarded as an innovation. If great wealth, influential position in life, and widely ramified business relations were of any account, Commodore VANDERBILT should have been carried to the grave with much pageantry and show of costly grief. As it happens, however, his services were as plain as could have been held over the last relics of one of our humblest citizens; and the usual flower-show—duly catalogued in the newspapers—was dispensed with. Mr. VANDERBILT was not a showy man. His funeral was ordered by himself, so far as was possible. And if the moderately rich should take pattern from this simple rite, it will be well for the very poor, who often beggar themselves in the vain attempt to honor the memory of those who are beyond the reach alike of their petty pride and their affection.

That unfortunate steam-ship, the L'Amérique, of the French line, has been lost again. Her former disaster was off the coast of Brittany, in 1874, when she was abandoned by captain and crew, to be picked up afterward as derelict, and carried into port by her lucky finders. This time she has been actually cast away on the beach near Seabright, New-Jersey shore, about midway between the highlands of Navesink and Monmouth Beach. Everybody who has ever been to Long Branch will recall the sight of that long unbroken stretch of sandy beach, which reaches from Sandy Hook to Long Branch. On this soft bed the costly steamer lies, broadside toward the shore. The lives of the passengers are secure, but three poor fellows of the crew were drowned in attempting to take a boat through the surf and ice from ship to shore. The L'Amérique was bound in, and it would seem that an inquiry only can fix the responsibility for the error which was committed in running her on the beach instead of into New-York Bay.

WAYS THAT ARE DARK.

With all due respect to the feelings of honest Democrats, it seems to us that they must be heartily ashamed of the showing their party has been making the past few weeks. It can be understood that a party, having, as it sincerely supposes, won a national election by a popular vote, should be restive under any construction of the laws, or any working of the Governmental machinery which deprives it of the fruits of the supposed victory. This was, beyond doubt, the position taken, candidly enough, by a great many well-meaning men in the Democratic party. The course which, from such a point of view, the leaders should have adopted, is plain enough. It was simply to ascertain the facts, to prove them to the country, to refrain from anything like bluster on the one hand, and on the other to carefully avoid any resort to trickery, legal or otherwise. That would have been a line of conduct which no fair man, however ardent a Republican, could have refused to respect. It would have been manly, patriotic, and reasonable.

But what has been the actual policy of the Democratic leaders? It has been the exact reverse of the straightforward one which we have outlined. They began by sending a committee to New-Orleans, and others to Columbia and Tallahassee. The former has, up to the present time, made no report on the facts. It has made a technical argument, full of small quibbles, but not meeting or pretending to meet the evidence produced on the other side. The committee found fault with the composition of the Returning Board, complained of the power of the board, and even undertook to say that there was no authority in the Constitution of Louisiana for canvassing the Electoral vote, though precisely the same state of the law had been used to give Greeley the Electoral vote in 1872. But on the question whether there had actually been the grave outrages on the negro voters, changing the apparent result in the State, as was charged by the Republicans, and concerning which there was ample testimony in their possession, the committee had practically nothing to say. Finally, when a resolution was passed to publish the testimony of this committee and that which the Republicans had taken in one volume, the Democratic Committee withheld their testimony, so as to delay the publication of the whole until it will be too late to have any proper influence on the popular judgment. The other committees, in Florida and South Carolina, have busied themselves chiefly with advising the local managers in vain efforts to confuse or postpone the casting of the Electoral vote by the action of the State courts.

As to bluster, we all know very well how much there has been of that, and on which side exclusively it has been found. From Messrs. BANNING and SPRINGER on the floor of Congress to the spouters at the ward and town meetings of the Democratic Party there has been a general chorus of threats. Doubtless these have been without the approval or sympathy of the great body of the Democratic Party. We are anxious to believe that this is the case. The bravado has come from the politicians of high or low degree. But it has passed nearly without rebuke, and what voices of manly and patriotic protest have been heard against it have come from the South. The worst feature of it is that it is utterly false in spirit. There is nothing of indignation against wrong, real or fancied, in it. It is a mere trick, intended to scare the country. Were it in earnest, it would be wicked. Being a sham, it is both wicked and contemptible.

We have said above that the Democratic managers, affecting, as they do, to contend for a victory given them by the popular vote, and which they pretend is to be taken from them by the forms of law, were under peculiar obligations to act in a straightforward manner. Anything like technicalities, to say nothing of out-and-out trickery, must be absurdly inconsistent in them. But their sole reliance has been on trickery. We are just learning some of the details of their scheming in Oregon, by which the confidential advisers and agents of Mr. TILDEN hoped to get an Electoral vote against the acknowledged will of the people of the State. The Governor of the State, at first reluctant to act in a fraud so bare-faced, is persuaded by arguments from head-quarters. The Democratic Elector who is to take the chief part in the plot, is paid for his trouble by money from New-York. Other sums are traced from the bankers of Mr. TILDEN'S adjutants to the Democratic managers in Oregon. A plan is laid with the utmost caution, and is carried out to the letter, and it is only its stupidity, and by no means its want of bad intent, which prevents it from bringing about a great offense against the voters of Oregon and the people of the country. The Democratic policy in Oregon is of a piece with the chicanery practiced in Louisiana.

Meanwhile, the effort at proving a popular majority is failing. The figures in the official returns do not foot up as was expected, and the deeper we get into the facts in the South, the plainer it becomes that the majorities claimed in the South are largely fictitious, while it is clear that there have been great frauds in the North. No well-informed man would now venture to assert that the majority in the late election was even a decided one, much less a large one, for the Democracy. The whole policy of the party has fallen through. Instead of being engaged in wresting an actual victory from the forms of law which give it to their opponents, they are occupied with twisting the law at every point to get a formal victory to which they are not entitled.

THE NEW AQUEDUCT JOB.

The extraordinary droughts in the Summer and Autumn of the past year, which occasioned the recent scarcity of Croton water in this City, came like a godsend to those who had started the project of building a new aqueduct at the expense of some twenty or thirty millions of dollars. As long ago as April last the Common Council took the first step in this ingenious attempt to raid the City Treasury, by passing a resolution requesting the Corporation Counsel to prepare a memorial to the Legislature on behalf of the Mayor, Commonalty, &c., and praying for the passage of an act authorizing the construction of an additional aqueduct, or other appliance, in order to afford this City a sufficient and unfailing supply of Croton water. During the period of scarcity, the advocates of this costly scheme took every means to familiarize the tax-payers with the idea of this imperial undertaking. Every few days articles appeared in certain newspapers demonstrating the absolute necessity of some immediate action on the part of "the authorities." The "people" clamored for a new aqueduct at whatever cost. So we were told about twice a week, in half-column articles, written by thoughtful patriots, and inspired by City Hall politicians. It was suggested that a conflagration might lay one-half of the City in flames because of the scarcity of water. The public became gradually accustomed to the idea. During the Summer every one felt the want of water; even the little that was vouchsafed us in dribblings was offensive in odor and unpleasant in taste. Many of our meek and submissive tax-payers began to ask themselves how many millions were really necessary for this much-needed improvement. Our neighbors were deeply concerned for us. Mayor EASTMAN, of Poughkeepsie, wrote a letter to Mayor WICKHAM, of New-York, in which he developed a new scheme by which to furnish the citizens of this parched City with an unfailing supply of water. He would tap the Hudson River at Poughkeepsie, pump up countless millions of gallons of water, which, he assured Mayor WICKHAM, was brackish only once in fifty years, and send it to us by special conduits, if the present aqueduct should prove inadequate. The whole expense—a couple of millions or thereabouts—was indeed a paltry sum when compared with twenty-five or thirty millions for a new aqueduct. Mayor EASTMAN considered his plan an economical plan—an actual saving of twenty odd millions of dollars. And moreover—though he did not urge this point—the greater part of the money would have been judiciously spent at Poughkeepsie under the immediate eye, if not under the personal superintendence, of the Mayor of that city. It will thus be seen that while our City Fathers have been energetically engaged in pushing the new aqueduct scheme, we have not wanted for active sympathy from neighboring cities.

But assistance came from a totally opposite quarter—it came from above in the shape of rain, which replenished the lakes, filled the reservoirs, and put us back in about the normal condition as regards water. We might have more, but we have enough. At present the water flows at all times in the second stories of most houses, and rises to the third stories before 8 o'clock in the evening. On the top of these various schemes comes the quarterly report of Commissioner of Public Works CAMPBELL, who assures us of a supply of Croton water sufficiently great to satisfy the wants of New-York City for many years to come. He tells us, further, that with the construction of additional storage reservoirs, the Croton water-shed is capable of supplying a city with a population twice as large as New-York. The present aqueduct is capable of conveying 110,000,000 gallons daily, which would furnish an average of more than 100 gallons of water daily to each man, woman, and child in the City. Even during the recent drought an average of eighty gallons a day was supplied every day. This alone is conclusive proof of the utter uselessness at this present writing of new aqueducts. The proposition to largely increase the City debt by an expenditure of $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 of the people's money for any such purpose, is simply and purely a gigantic job. Its advocates, never mind whence they come or who they are, should be marked and held up to the public as raiders on the City Treasury. What is wanted, is not fresh appropriations of the people's money, but the application of some plan for stopping the scandalous waste of water, which now obtains in almost every dwelling-house, manufactory, hotel, and store throughout the City. Another difficulty is that the pressure in the pipes in the higher districts of the City is insufficient. In most of the fine houses water does not rise above the second floor, but this is simply a defect in the service-pipe, which can be remedied at a comparatively small cost. As far as the necessities of the Fire Department are concerned, there is no need for a new aqueduct, if we may rely upon the expressed convictions of some of our most experienced insurance underwriters.

Mr. WHITNEY, the Corporation Counsel, has recently sent a communication to the Common Council in reply to the resolution of last April, embodying his advice about the movement for getting a better supply of water. He first speaks of the great diversity of opinion as to the proper course to be taken in this matter by the City authorities, and then points out the plan provided by the Legislature for determining whether the work of building a new aqueduct should be undertaken at all, viz., the Governor, with the consent of the Senate, appoints five persons, to be known as the Water Commissioners of the City of New-York, who are empowered to employ engineers, surveyors, and such other persons as, in their opinion, might be necessary to enable them to perform their duties. These Commissioners adopt a plan, fix upon the sum of money necessary to carry it into execution, and report the plan to the Common Council for their approval. The question whether the plan should be carried out is then submitted to the people at the next annual election for charter officers. If the electors sanction the measure, the Common Council instruct the Commissioners to proceed with the work. The present aqueduct is said to have cost $30,000,000. It is quite clear that the Common Council are after the people's money. If they can, by any possible legal machinery—Water Commissioners or otherwise—cause the adoption of a plan to build a "new aqueduct," they will do so, regardless of all arguments demonstrating the utter uselessness of such an addition to our public works and our City debt at this present juncture. We sincerely trust that our public-spirited citizens will not only closely watch the development of this contemplated twenty or thirty million swindle, but that they will band together and take active measures to crush it in the bud.

We do not believe that the Governor would appoint a Board of Water Commissioners, and saddle the people with all its attendant expenses, at the beck of any particular set of politicians. Unless he were personally convinced of the urgent necessity of such action he would take no step in this matter. Should those City politicians who propose to extract $25,000,000 from the pockets of the tax-payers of New-York through the medium of a new aqueduct persist in forcing such a measure on the people of this City, they will meet with the most determined opposition from people, and in quarters they little expect.

MESSAGE OF GOV. HAYES.

The eighth of the inaugural and annual Messages of the Governor of Ohio, although devoted to the discussion of State or local questions, possesses more than local interest. From the wise mode and proper manner of conducting the Executive business of one State, may be learned the best methods of conducting such business in all States. Unlike Govs. ROBINSON, HUBBARD, and VANCE, Gov. HAYES seems to be well aware that his present official position is that of Chief Executive of a State and not of the nation. Not being responsible, at present, for the management of National affairs, he wisely leaves those affairs under the control of those who are. He confines his attention, as he has done on seven similar occasions before, to the business of that political division of the Union over which his authority extends. Gov. HAYES is able to report officially the gratifying fact that there has been a reduction of the State debt during the past year of almost a million and a half dollars, and that, notwithstanding the extraordinary expenditures of the war, the debt has been reduced from over twenty millions in 1851 to six millions in 1876. This looks like doing a good State business. He directs the attention of the Legislature, as he has done before, to the rapid increase of municipal indebtedness. He utters a truth which may find application near home, when he says: "The burdens borne by the cities and towns must be shared, in part at least, by all who transact business with them. The town and the neighboring country have a common interest, and in most respects must be regarded as one community." He recommends a judicious limitation of the rate of taxation which local authorities may levy, and a constantly increasing sinking-fund to reduce the indebtedness already incurred. The Governor says: "In order to secure an honest, economical, and efficient administration of a City Government, the best citizens of all parties must unite and act together." * * * "Such a Government calls for the best work of the best men, and neither party alone can furnish it."

On the subject of the Centennial Exhibition, he mentions with pardonable pride that Ohio exhibitors received a larger proportion of awards than any other State for the same class of articles. In speaking of the State reformatory and benevolent institutions, the Governor says: "Experience has shown that the appointment of good men of different political parties on each of the Boards of Trustees of these institutions, is conducive to their best interests." This is a fact that may some day be learned by the civil service reforming Democratic Governors of some worse governed States. Gov. HAYES gives considerable space to the geological survey of Ohio, and recommends such liberal appropriations as will give the final geological report symmetry and completeness. He again urges the enactment of rigid registry laws to prevent frauds upon the elective franchise and on the ground of economy and convenience recommends an amendment to the State Constitution providing that the State election shall be held on the same day as the Presidential election. Upon the whole, this modest Message is business-like, free from flourish and flurry, and reveals an utter unconsciousness in the author of being to-day the most conspicuous and interesting character on the continent.

WASTE IN PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Gov. ROBINSON has called attention to two sources or modes of public extravagance in the State in which very heavy burdens are laid on our tax-payers. The public buildings have certainly been beyond "all rhyme or reason" in their outlay and expense of decoration. The instance of the new Capitol is too fresh and too annoying to need to be repeated; a building estimated to cost $4,500,000, whose expense has already reached $7,500,000, and which will cost in all probability, before it is finished, $14,000,000, and a structure, as the Governor says, not the least in keeping with its surroundings, or the tastes and habits of its frequenters—one which will not especially elevate the sense of beauty of our citizens, or give them a convenient house for their public business. Then come the asylums, reformatories, and other charitable structures of the State, and every one knows how the public are treated in the matter of the construction of these buildings. A reformatory or insane asylum is voted to be built, and its construction referred to a certain committee. The committee know nothing about architecture, but they know that if placed in their district or some favorite locality, it will add to the value of neighboring property. Then they start with the object, not of building the most economical and suitable structure for the purpose, but to have a building which will be "an ornament to the county." Suddenly there begins a structure on the scale of a royal palace, and in a style of architecture which will demand endless expense.

The first appropriation barely covers the foundation, though it was perhaps estimated to include half the cost. The Legislature is appealed to on the ground that more must be given, or the work accomplished will be lost. Another burden is laid on the tax-payers. This again is insufficient, and the appropriation is again repeated, until at last the State is saddled with an enormously-expensive asylum, in decoration unsuited to its objects, in plan perhaps inconvenient and entailing a new and heavy burden on the overtaxed community. Almost every asylum of the State has some such history. Some of them have scarcely gone beyond the foundations, and are on a scale to demand millions; some have been finished at immense cost. One—the Elmira Reformatory—was estimated in 1874 to cost $2,000,000, though it was intended to reach in its expense but a few hundred thousand dollars. We need not speak of that monument of expense, the Hudson River Asylum. The only exception, so far as we know, is the Asylum for Chronic Insane at Ovid. This was built in separate houses, very cheaply and with little ornamentation, but suitable for its objects. It should be a model for the others.

There certainly is no reason why the State should make honest working men paupers by taxation for the sake of those who, from vices or misfortune, have become paupers themselves. We agree, too, with the Governor in regard to the large expenses of our High and Normal School buildings and other public school structures. The only defense or excuse for taxing one person for the education of another is that thus a self-governing community like ours is made safer and more prosperous, by giving each member the education and intelligence necessary for his political duties. This reason certainly does not apply to the taxation of one citizen in order to furnish the child of another with a college education. We are not, however, prepared to say that, under broad views of government, this may not be the duty, at times, of a prosperous community. But even this view cannot excuse the erection of showy and costly buildings for such purposes, or of heavy outlays for this object when a people are poor and overtaxed. In the past ten years the State expenditures for school buildings and furniture have been over $19,000,000. The local expenditures have been immensely greater. In this City alone they have been excessive; and yet we are taxed for a free college, while there are not school places by thousands for the children of the poor.

For "normal schools," however, more is to be said than Gov. ROBINSON allows. They train teachers for our common schools, and they furnish an outlet for the female labor, whose condition is becoming such a problem in this State. The State, in other words, to a limited degree, fits young women to educate the masses, and provides thus for a class overweighted in the struggle for existence a useful and profitable means of support. It is in part a charity and in part a measure of security. We are inclined to agree with the Governor that some of the vast structures in the State, whose foundation has been laid, might well be left for a time unfinished, as a monument of our folly, and to relieve a people who are now struggling with all the burdens they can bear.

THE HAT PROBLEM.

Among the most fascinating questions upon which profound and subtle thinkers are in the habit of speculating is the question, what shall a man do with his hat in church? Great men in every age have grappled with this problem without reaching any satisfactory conclusion. It is true that the Jews have tried to solve it by wearing their hats in the synagogue, but this is a subterfuge unworthy of Christianity, and not much better than SPINOZA'S plan of evading the issue by not going to church at all. We, in this enlightened and Christian age, recognize the necessity of going to church, and the duty, while in the sacred edifice, of putting our hats somewhere else than on our heads. Where to put them is still as unsettled a question as it was when Sir ISAAC NEWTON formally placed it on his famous list of the arcana of nations.

Of all the various expedients by which ingenious church-goers have endeavored to safely dispose of their hats, there is not one that has not been abundantly proved to be fallacious. To hold one's hat continually in one's lap is practicable only in a Quaker meeting-house, where the worshipers remain seated during the entire service, and never use any devotional implements, such as prayer-books, and hymn-books. No man could successfully balance a hat in one hand and find the Epistle for the twenty-second Sunday after Trinity with the other hand; while to stand up in order to repeat the Creed or to sing a hymn, with a hat under the left arm, would be the height of absurdity. The hat, then, must be laid entirely aside during divine service, and our churches, being constructed with exclusive reference to souls instead of hats, afford no resting-places for the latter.

The extreme danger of placing a hat in the aisle immediately outside the pew is universally known. The first lady that sweeps up the aisle carries with her a confused mass of defenseless hats, which are deposited in the shape of a terminal moraine in the front of the pew which is her final goal. Of course the hats which have been subjected to this process are reduced by attrition to a rounded form and are covered with scratches, reminding one of the marks of glacial action on granite boulders. However interesting they may be to the geologist, they are of no further value as hats, and can rarely be bent into a shape that will allow their owners to wear them home. In the days when expansive crinolines were in fashion, the fate of the hat deposited in the aisle was still more appalling. When a well-dressed lady passed by in its vicinity, it disappeared totally from human sight. There are cases on record where one fashionable woman has thus caused the disappearance of thirteen separate hats during her passage from the church-door to a pew in the neighborhood of the pulpit. What was the final fate of those hats was never ascertained. Their owners simply knew that they vanished at the rustle of crinoline, and left no trace behind. Whether they were absorbed by contact with soft kid, or resolved into thin chemical elements by proximity to steel, is yet to be discovered. The boldest men shrank from making investigations as to their fate, and preferred to bear their loss in sad and dignified silence.

Next to the aisle, the pew-seat is the most dangerous position in which a hat can be placed. Statistics show that out of every one hundred hats thus situated, sixty are sat upon by their owners, thirty-five are sat upon by other people, and only five escape uninjured. It is a curious fact that more men sit down on their hats after repeating the Creed than after reading the Psalms or performing any other perpendicular part of the service; and another curious fact is the attraction which a hat thus exposed upon a seat exerts upon a fat person. Neither of these facts has ever been satisfactorily explained, although they are matters of general notoriety. A man may enter a remote pew in a strange church, and place his hat on the seat in a position where it is impossible that a fat man could perceive it on entering the church. Nevertheless, experience has shown that in six cases out of ten—or, to be exact, in 6.139 cases—the sexton will show a fat man into that precise pew within ten minutes after the hat is in position, while other and further fat men will from time to time hover about the locality, with the evident desire of ascertaining if the hat is still susceptible of further smashing. There is clearly a law of nature at work here which needs to be definitely formulated, and it is discreditable to science that this has not yet been done.

As to putting one's hat on the floor underneath the seat, no man who follows this reckless course can expect anything but disaster. If there is a small boy in the pew, he will infallibly discover that hat, and kick it to the further end of the pew within the first thirty minutes of the service. If there is a lady in the pew, a surgical operation will be required to remove her boot from the interior of the hat, while in any event the hat is certain to absorb every particle of dust within a radius of eight feet, and to fasten itself to the floor with the aid of forgotten Sunday-school gum-drops. Neither under the seat, on the seat, nor in the aisle can the worried hat find rest, and the plan of establishing a hat pound in the vestibule, where hats could be ticketed and kept during service, would simply result in converting a church into a hat-exchange, where the sinners would secure all the good hats, and the saints would be compelled to content themselves with worn-out and worthless ones.

Thus a severe and exhaustive process of reasoning shows that there is no place in a modern church where a hat can be reasonably safe. But let us be thankful that we are at the dawn of better things. A clever inventor has just devised a plan for solving the problem that has so long baffled the acutest minds. He has secured a patent for what he calls "an improved pew hat-holder." It consists of a sort of wire cage attached to the back of the pew, and intended as a receptacle for hats. When filled this receptacle revolves, and carries its precious freight into a safe and obscure recess, whence it is alleged that it can be withdrawn in an uninjured condition at the end of the service. Let us hope that the inventor is not too sanguine, and that his scheme will meet all the exigencies of the case. Who can tell how great will be the effect upon the spiritual welfare of the community when the masculine churchgoer can dismiss his hat from his mind and give his undivided attention to other, purer, and better themes.

GIFTS FROM FOREIGN EXHIBITORS.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION—PROSPECT FOR A PERMANENT BUILDING FOR THE UNITED STATES EXHIBIT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—It will be remembered that the President, in his last Annual Message, recommended that the Government Exhibit at the late Centennial Exhibition be removed to the National Capital, and a suitable building be erected or purchased for its permanent exhibition. Believing that Congress would second his view, he directed that the Government exhibit should remain in Philadelphia until the question of having it as a permanent exhibition should be acted on. Many foreign nations have voluntarily contributed their exhibits to the United States to increase the interest in any permanent exhibition which Congress may provide for, and for this act of generosity he recommended that a resolution of thanks be passed.

Prof. S. F. Baird, of the Smithsonian Institute, in a recent letter to Col. Syford, Chairman of the Board of Executive Departments at the late Exhibition, speaks of the great economical and industrial value of the immense donations made to the United States by the Commissioners of nearly all of the foreign countries represented at the Exhibition. They relate to the resources of the respective nations derived from the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms, together with many series illustrating the peculiar habits and characteristics of the people, especially of China, Siam, Japan, Australia, and New-Zealand. The countries that have made contributions of more or less magnitude are the Argentine Confederation, Austria, Brazil, Chili, China, Egypt, Germany, the Sandwich Islands, Japan, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Portugal, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tunis, Great Britain, Bermuda, Canada, New South Wales, New-Zealand, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmania, Victoria, and Venezuela. Prof. Baird further states that the value of these collections to the people of the United States cannot be overestimated, and urges that some provision be made for their removal to Washington, where they can be permanently exhibited. Such a collection could not be reproduced in a long period of years without the expenditure of a large sum of money. The utmost eagerness has been manifested by the representatives of technical, industrial, and educational institutions in the United States in gathering objects of the kind in question. It will be possible to make up from the various articles contributed duplicates which can be distributed to such institutions throughout the country as Congress may direct.

WASHINGTON.

VIEWS OF PRESIDENT GRANT.

NO INTERFERENCE IN LOUISIANA BEYOND THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PEACE—THE REPLY TO GOV. KELLOGG'S REQUEST FOR AID—RETENTION OF THE WHOLE OF THE GENEVA AWARD ADVISABLE—WHY THE DISTRICT POLICE COMMISSIONERS WERE REMOVED.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—It will be recollected that last week the Louisiana Legislature passed a resolution asking for military protection against apprehended Democratic violence, and that this resolution was telegraphed to the President and laid before the Cabinet last Tuesday, when it was deemed proper that no action should be taken upon it. Since that time Gov. Kellogg, actuated by a like fear, telegraphed to the President to the same effect, and desiring the recognition of the Republican Governor and Legislature, as two inaugurations will take place to-morrow in New-Orleans—that of Packard, Republican, and Nicholls, Democrat, by their respective parties. The President having prepared a reply to Gov. Kellogg's telegram, called an extraordinary meeting of the Cabinet to-day at 1 o'clock, in order to inform the members of his proceedings in the premises, and to secure harmonious action. The reply was unanimously approved, and this afternoon transmitted by telegraph to Gov. Kellogg. The substance of the reply was given by the President for publication, as follows: "There will be two inaugurations of Governors to-morrow, unless one of them is prevented. I do not, however, propose to interfere with them. I have nothing before me to justify action in the way of recognizing either Governor, and therefore cannot do so, particularly as a committee of each house of Congress is now engaged in investigating all the facts of the late election, including the contests of the two Governors and the two Legislatures, both claiming to be legally elected. For me, under these circumstances, to recognize one or the other would be hardly justifiable; and I have so informed Gov. Kellogg." The President further said that the Democratic State Government organization has the sympathy of such portion of the people of that State as have the requisite means to give sustenance to it, and their Governor and Legislature would be recognized by them, even if there were not half as many as there are now in the Democratic Party of Louisiana. The President repeated that he would not interfere by recognizing either Government until the contest should be settled through the Congressional investigation now in progress, but he should consider it to be his duty to keep the peace, if occasion require, and prevent bloodshed pending the political complications.

The President stated further that, contrary to a recently-published statement, he has no intention of sending a Message to Congress on the subject of the Geneva award. He thought, however, that Congress ought to extend the class of cases for which damages are claimed; that none of the award ought to go back to Great Britain, because the entire amount was less than the value of the ships destroyed, and that if there were any surplus it would be a good thing to expend it toward restoring our merchant marine to what it was before the depredations of the rebel cruisers.

The reason given by the President for asking the members of the Board of Police Commissioners of the District for their resignations was that, on reading the testimony taken in the recent investigation concerning gambling-houses, he was surprised to learn that their suppression had been neglected. He had been in Washington a long time, he said, but had not until recently learned of the actual existence of so many places of that character, which were carried on contrary to law, and should, therefore, be closed. He knew nothing of the alleged Police conspiracy against Representative Whitthorne except what two detectives related to him.

The President, in reply to a question concerning the recent removal of ordnance and ordnance stores, said the force at Jefferson being small they were sent to Rock Island, where they could be properly guarded, but he had no knowledge of a recent movement of like material from Baton Rouge to New-York, although the report might be true.

In regard to the recent publications as to the result of interviews with him, the President said that, like others, he had freely expressed his views on the Electoral question, but had not said what he would or would not do further than recognize his successor so legally declared.

The President, on being asked what he thought of the Democratic meetings to be held to-morrow in various places, said they seemed to be intended to intimidate the opposite party and make capital. The effect on the public mind of the North would depend on the character of the proceedings. The people were not to be brought to submission by attempted intimidation. If the speeches delivered at those meetings are temperate or moderate, advising conformity to law and order and acquiescence in the decision to be reached by Congress as to which Presidential candidate received the majority of the Electoral votes, the Democrats might strengthen their position; otherwise a contrary effect might be the result.

TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

THE BILL INTRODUCED IN THE HOUSE BY MR. WILLIS—THE RATE TO BE IMPOSED UPON BANK SHARES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—The bill of Mr. Willis, of New-York, with reference to relieving national banks from certain taxation, and which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, declares the purpose and intention of section 5,219 of the Revised Statutes to be that "no taxes shall be imposed upon shares of national banks by State Legislatures or authorities at a greater rate of tax nor larger valuation than the rate imposed and valuation put upon other personal and real property in the hands of individual citizens of the respective States, and to be entitled to the same privileges and exemptions with respect to taxation as other personal property."

EFFICIENCY IN THE NAVY.

THE REWARD OF GOOD CONDUCT DURING APPRENTICESHIP—UNITED STATES SEAMEN—HOW PROMOTION MAY BE SECURED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—A bill is now on the calendar of the House, with a favorable report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, having for its object to promote the efficiency of seamen in the United States Navy. It provides that whenever any apprentice in the Navy shall have attained to the age of 21 years, and can produce certificates from his commanding officers of good conduct during his apprenticeship, he shall be entitled to an examination by a board of officers, who shall report upon his professional and physical qualifications, and if such report be favorable he shall receive an appointment from the Secretary of the Navy as a United States seaman, which appointment shall be held until resigned by him, or until it be forfeited by the sentence of a court martial. Seamen and ordinary seamen who have served or who may hereafter serve in the United States Navy for five years, upon passing the examination already mentioned, shall be entitled to receive appointment as United States seaman. The bill further provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe rules as to the mode of examination, classification, increase of pay by length of service, distinction in uniform, leave of absence, and other privileges for such seamen; makes them eligible for promotion to the position of petty officers, and directs that the names of all such petty officers and of all United States seamen shall be borne upon the Navy Register.

The object of this bill is not merely to attach permanently to the Navy those who have been thoroughly drilled and disciplined by years of apprenticeship, but also to render the position of United States seamen so respectable and desirable, by assimulating it to that of the regular officer, that a good class of boys will be attracted to the naval service, and thus ultimately the efficiency and morale of the Navy will be materially promoted.

THE STOLEN MONEY RETURNED.

RESTORATION OF THE MISSING $11,000 BY THE THIEF THROUGH A THIRD PARTY—A CLERK IN THE TREASURER'S OFFICE SUSPECTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—It will be remembered that recently a package containing over $11,000, consigned by the Treasury Department to a national bank in Chicago, was stolen, and "boodle" or false packing, containing soft paper, substituted, and delivered by the Adams Express Company to the bank. All efforts of the detectives to trace the theft proved unavailing, and it would have probably remained a mystery had not the thief become conscience stricken and to-day returned the money to Treasurer Wyman through a third party. A clerk in the cash-room of the Treasury Department named Ferd. S. Winslow is suspected, and a warrant has been issued for his arrest. Winslow's duty was to direct the packages after they have been sealed, and he affixed the final seal. He is a Chicago man, and has been under suspicion and closely watched since the day after the loss was discovered. There has been no evidence, however, till within a short time, which would warrant an arrest.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE AND THE REBEL WAR CLAIMS—FAILURE TO REPORT A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT AS DIRECTED—PROSPECTS FOR ADVANCING IMPORTANT BILLS IN CONGRESS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan 8.—On Dec. 18 the House passed a resolution directing the Committee on the Judiciary to report within 20 days an amendment to the Constitution providing that no claim should ever be paid by the United States in the shape of damages for any kind of property used, consumed, injured, or destroyed by United States troops, or by order of any officer acting under the authority of the United States Government, during the rebellion. The time named in the resolution for reporting the amendment has expired, yet the Committee on the Judiciary has not even considered the question referred to them. Mr. Hunter, the mover of the resolution of instruction to the committee, proposes, to-morrow, to introduce a resolution reciting the failure of the committee to obey the expressed order of the House, and directing the Chairman to forthwith explain the reason for the committee's negligence.

The Senate Committee on Counting the Electoral Vote held a meeting to-night. The committee assembled at 6 o'clock P. M., and were in session until midnight. This makes the eighth meeting held by the Senate committee, and including the meeting to-night, nothing has been accomplished, nor has anything been done that would warrant the belief that an early settlement will be reached. The meeting to-night was attended by all the members.

Gen. McDougall, of New-York, is in town to-night, and will give the President an answer to-morrow to the tender of the appointment of Commissioner of Patents. Gen. McDougall will probably accept the office.

The sub-committee of the Committee on Pacific Railroads has been arranging to put into the Texas Pacific bill provision for several branch lines at the eastern end, to which no land grant was ever made, and for which the Governmen, was never in any way committed. But they are to have the guarantee of bonds all the same, though there is no more reason for a Government subsidy for them than for the Pennsylvania Railroad. This is a feature of the bill that will need attention.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

There is not much prospect for the transaction of any important business by the Senate until the return of the Investigating Committees from the South, and but few bills can be reported from committees before that time, as nearly every committee of the Senate is more or less affected by the necessary absence of Senators from the city, and by the pressing nature of the duties here to which they have been assigned. The special committee of seven to devise means for the amicable settlement of the Presidential contest, which meets almost daily, has four members of the Judiciary Committee upon it, Messrs. Edmunds, Conkling, Frelinghuysen, and Thurman. Mr. Stevenson, another member of the Judiciary Committee, is sick, and Mr. Howe is chairman of one of the investigating committees in the South. Messrs. Allison, Dorsey, Davis, Withers, and Wallace are the only members of the Committee on Appropriations now in the city, Mr. Windom, the Chairman, Messrs. West and Blaine having gone home to look after their re-election, and Mr. Sargent being in the South. The Committee on Foreign Relations has two members on Mr. Edmunds' special committee and one in the South. The Committee on Finance has two of its members in the South, another has been absent from the city for some time, and one is on the special committee of seven. There is not an important committee but has from two to five of its members either absent from the city or assigned to special duty, and it is impossible to secure a quorum of most of them.

The matter of the appointment of a United States District Attorney for the Southern District of New-York is still undecided and under consideration by the President. In addition to Mr. Bliss, the present incumbent, and Messrs. Dittenhoffer and Rollins, who are all strongly urged for appointment, the name of Franklin A. Paddock is now prominently mentioned for the position. He is a brother of Senator Paddock, and is said to be strongly backed by recommendations from the New-York City Bar and mercantile community. So far as has been learned Senator Conkling has not committed himself to the support of any one of the various candidates.

THE DROUGHT ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 7.—The drought continues unbroken. For the first time since the American settlement December has passed without a drop of rain. Yesterday dispatches from various points in the State seemed to indicate a chance of weather, but it has again cleared off. The crop reports received from all quarters indicate that in the extreme South the drought has had to some extent disastrous effect on grain and feed. In some parts of San Joaquin Valley, and the lower portion of the Sacramento Valley the crops are suffering. Along the coast counties, generally, the reports are favorable, and no trouble is apprehended if rain should be delayed until next month. In the northern portion of the State anxiety is felt, but no serious damage has yet resulted. The crops in Oregon are coming forward excellently. On the whole, the present indications are that with rains later in the Winter sufficient grain will be raised for home consumption, and a small surplus left. If rain comes within a couple of weeks, fair crops may be harvested under favorable conditions during the rest of the season, but a large yield can hardly be expected unless rains should be immediate and copious.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

DULLNESS OF LIFE IN LONDON.

A GLOOMY CHRISTMAS SEASON—THE SUN LOST SIGHT OF FOR WEEKS—THE EASTERN QUESTION AT THE BOTTOM OF IT—SWINBURNE'S ANSWER TO CARLYLE'S LETTER—THE HIGH-CHURCH PARTY AND THE LAW COURTS—THE LORD CHAMBERLAIN AND THE THEATRICAL MANAGERS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Dec. 23, 1876.

Any one who desires to experience the dullness and stagnation of life in its most absolute form ought to be here just now. For weeks past there has been a watery, leaden sky, a damp, depressing atmosphere, and not a glympse of the sun, except once or twice when it has shown itself in a sickly way, as if laid up with jaundice. Everybody has got neuralgia, rheumatism, toothache, small-pox, scarlet or typhoid fever. Christmas bills are pouring in, and hardly anybody, to judge from the common chorus of groaning despondency, has any money, the money market has sunk into paralysis after successive fits of delerium tremens, and trade of every kind is absolutely at a stand-still, except, perhaps, the butchers' and grocers' shops, which are having a spasmodic run at this proverbially genial season, though much less than usual. The best way to give an idea of the general gloom and weariness is to say that people have to nerve themselves for Christmas, and that the thoughts of its conventional and compulsory jollity deepen the blues in which society is plunged. Even the most devoted supporters of the Government are obliged, in vindicating its policy, to admit that at least there is nothing to be proud of. The absence of any authentic intelligence as to Lord Salisbury's doings and the chances of the Conference has convinced unreflecting minds that an impenetrable fog implies that there is a serene sky behind it, like the bowers of bliss which follow the dark scene in a pantomime in which the characters grope about in grotesque helplessness. The confident predictions of peace have failed to resuscitate financial confidence; and during the last few days there has been a complete suspension of vitality.

A strong suspicion has arisen that Lord Salisbury has fallen into a trap, and that the bland moderation and disinterestedness of the Russian agents only cloaks a treacherous ambuscade. Sensible people see that there is really no evidence on which to judge of the prospects of the negotiations, and that everything depends on two cardinal points, as to which nothing is yet known—what is the ultimatum of Russia and that of Turkey, or, in other words, where is the line at which they will come into inevitable collision. It is hardly to be wondered that at such a season turkeys should be found unusually tough, plum pudding sticky, and a strange absence of red berries be observable in the holly. No doubt this state of things will not last. Some day or other the sun will again reveal itself, and Europe will emerge from the clouds of mystification in which it is at present enveloped, and get upon the solid ground of real facts. But in the meantime, it is a very dismal outlook. On the 4th of January Mr. Henry Labouchere is to publish the first number of his oracle called Truth, which he says "will discuss current topics in as kindly a manner as the name of the journal will permit," and perhaps this will be a light in the prevailing darkness.

The public controversy on the Eastern question has almost ceased; but there is still a speech or a pamphlet, like the lingering sparks of an exhausted fire. Mr. Swinburne's pamphlet on the Eastern question, in answer to Mr. Carlyle's letter, is the only thing of the kind deserving notice, and is chiefly remarkable for its literary style, of which an example or two may be found refreshing by those who like strong language. He pays homage to Carlyle as "the greatest English writer now living," but accuses him of having made his detestation of liberty the great consistent principle of his prophecies and his gospel. "He has always," he says, "hated the very thought of liberty, abhorred the very notion of equality, abjured the very idea of fraternity, as he hates, abhors, and abjures them now. No man can doubt on which side or to what effect his potent voice would have been lifted at its utmost pitch before the throne of Herod or the judgment-seat of Pilate. No tetrarch or pro-consul, no Mouravieff or Eyre of them all, would have been swifter to inflict or louder to invoke the sentence of beneficent whip, the doom of beneficent gallows on the Communist and stump orator of Nazareth. Had there but lived and written under the shadow of the not-as-yet divine Emperor Tiberius—doubtless as 'strict and just a man' as any 'present Czar' or Emperor of his kind—a pamphleteer as eloquent and ardent an imperialist as these pitiful times of 'ballot-box and divine freedom could have brought forth even in this distracted country,' what a latter-day pamphlet on the crucifixion, what an occasional discourse on the Nazarene question might we not now possess, whereby to lighten the darkness of history and adjust the balance of judgment. It cannot be, therefore," he adds, "in His" (that is, Christ's) "most undeserving name that we hear the protest on behalf of suffering Christians put forth by the worshiper of every gallows upon earth but one—and that one the cross of Christ." In another passage he says: "A preacher who defends the gallows, an apostle who approves the lash, has lifted up his voice against oppression, and has cursed 'the unspeakable Turk' by all the gods, in the name of Francia; and in the name of Mouravieff the champion of Eyre Pasha in Jamaica has uttered his sonorous note of protest against the misdeeds of Achmet Aga in Bulgaria"—and then asks, "What is the peculiar sanctifying quality in the Bulgarian which is to exempt him at need from the good offices of 'beneficent whip' and 'portable gallows,' or from things insupportable and maleficent to him alone of human kind—or against the devil of Turkish misrule being cast out by the Muscovite Beelzebub, the Prince of the devils of despotism?"

There is evidently going to be a dead set made by a certain section of the High Church clergy against the operation of the Public Worship act. Mr. Tooth, the Vicar of Hatcham, has been suspended by the Court of Arches for various practices, such as wearing a chasuble, stole, amice, maniple, girdle, and so on, and taking up the wrong positions as to the altar, which he has introduced and which the court holds to be illegal; but he ignores the decision against him, and continues to act as vicar, and to wear the obnoxious raiment and perform the obnoxious genuflections. In a letter defending his conduct he admits that "direct refusal to recognize a court of law is an offense against religion and morals, except in extreme circumstances," but refuses to plead before the court in this case or to accept its decisions, "because the case is a Church question, and can from its nature only be tried by spiritual authority." The Public Worship act, he also contends, was passed—not for the administration but in order to put down Ritualism—that is, in his eyes, "faith, worship, and practical religion in the Church of England;" and, moreover, it never had the assent of the priesthood—the Bishops being unruly accredited as representing the clergy at large. There is, of course, no means of continuing argument with a man in this mood, and Mr. Tooth will have to be forcibly put down. It is only fair to say that his church wardens and the majority of his congregation are on his side; but still, although people are free to worship as they like, they have no right to use for the superstitions of Rome a church devoted to the religion of England.

The Brooklyn disaster has naturally caused much alarm here as to the state of the London theatres, and the Lord Chamberlain has been stirred into giving the managers a very plain and decided warning as to their duty in the matter, and the consequences of neglecting it. He insists on "the absolute necessity" of the following first four rules being attended to

1. All doors and barriers to open outward, or to be fixed back during the time when the public are within the theatres.
2. All gangways, passages, and staircases intended for the exit of the audience to be kept entirely free from obstructions, whether permanent or temporary.
3. No part of the auditorium to be without at least two means of exit in case of need.
4. All doors not habitually used for exit, but available as additional means of escape in case of alarm, to be indicated by printed placards in plain characters.

The Lord Chamberlain also intimates that he has given orders to be specially informed from time to time, and particularly during the Christmas holidays, as to how far extra chairs and seats are placed so as to block up the gangways, and that if any flagrant case is detected he will at once put in force the powers given him by statute to refuse or cancel the license of the offending manager. And, "finally, he confidently leaves it to each manager to do his best to guard against accidents of all kinds, and especially against the consequences of such panics as may be liable to occur at any time without any reasonable cause, and without any blame to the management of the theatre, from a mere act of malice, mischief, or folly on the part of some one present." All this is, no doubt, very well, as far as it goes, but it certainly does not go far enough; and it is also remains to be seen whether the rules laid down will be rigorously enforced. At the present moment the arrangements for extinguishing a fire, even by a supply of water in pails, are extremely inadequate, nor is there an efficient staff of firemen in any house. Moreover, the exits ought to be wider and more numerous, and the use, as far as possible, of uninflammable materials for dresses and fittings on the stage ought to be made compulsory. Among other vital precautions, work-shops should be kept separate from the theatre; the offices and refreshment rooms ought also to be cut off by strong walls from the auditorium, while the latter should be protected by fireproof masonry dividing it from the stage, with the exception of the space left for the proscenium, which should be provided with a metal curtain to be lowered on the first alarm of fire. There ought also to be in each theatre a body of skilled and well-disciplined firemen, instead of the supernumeraries and odd men who are now employed. Above all, there ought to be a system of regular inspection and supervision of all the theatres continuously carried out by competent persons, and leading to the immediate punishment by severe penalties of any offense against the established rules. Hitherto the Lord Chamberlain's department has looked sharply enough after the licensing of plays, but its duties with regard to the buildings have been either neglected or performed in a mere formal and superficial manner, so that managers practically have been left to do as they pleased. For the moment, the Marquis of Hertford, who is the present Lord Chamberlain, has been frightened into making a display of authority; but it is very doubtful whether he will have the courage to carry out his threats. There will never be proper order and security in the theatres till they are put under the inspection of the Police.

THE MAY-BENNETT DIFFOULTY.

Nothing new was learned yesterday respecting the difficulty between Mr. James Gordon Bennett and Mr. Frederick W. May. The friends of both gentlemen assert that they do not know where they are, but it is admitted by all that they have left this City for the purpose of fighting with deadly weapons. Several other gentlemen have disappeared from New-York since the encounter on Twenty-first street last Wednesday afternoon, and it is believed are now in the company of Messrs. Bennett and May. It was reported last night that Mr. Howland Robbins, and not Gen. Taylor, is to act as second to Mr. Bennett. Dr. May, the father of Mr. Frederick W. May, does not know, he says, where his son is, and the anxiety of waiting for news is visible in his manner. He does not believe that his son has started for Europe. An item for the consideration of the superstitious is furnished to the gossip of the clubs. It is said that on last Wednesday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, a picture of Mr. James Gordon Bennett's celebrated yacht Dauntless, which was suspended in the office of a broker on Broad street, fell from the wall and was destroyed. It was about the same time that Mr. May assaulted Mr. Bennett in front of the Union Club.

THE STREET CARS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your correspondent "D." has some crude ideas about street-car ventilation and warming, and the comparative dangers. It appears to me that to place 24 persons (the extreme seating capacity) in a car with some wet straw, to ride from Thirty-fourth street to the Astor House, with closed ventilators, they will generate considerable foul air, and if we add to this an 8-inch cylinder stove, no doubt dangers of cold and throat difficulties will be far greater than in a well ventilated though cold car. I have had some experience in other cities with heated cars, and have found that heat makes the passengers the more susceptible to outside air; and as the car is naturally kept closed up tight, the air is extremely impure and unhealthy to breathe, and influenzas and throat diseases very readily absorbed. Suppose instead of 24 persons in such a car there are 36 or 40. I approve of warming the cars, but only on condition that the ventilators, front and rear, at the top of the car shall be opened, and fastened open, so that these old covies may unsuccessfully prod at them with their canes and umbrellas. Nail the ventilators open, not shut. But, Mr. Editor, I mostly approve of that Gilbert Road. If the Sixth avenueis too valuable a street to put it on, then let us have the Seventh avenue, only let us have it right along, with a branch up Wooster street, University place, and Fourth avenue to Grand Central Depot. Do this, and let them consider the other routes to be established at their leisure. Give them a chance. We want the road, whether on Sixth or Fifth avenue.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Jan. 6, 1877. C. A. M.

AN UNFORTUNATE STEAM-SHIP LINE.

The steamers of the Transatlantic line have not been very fortunate in their voyages. The Ville de Havre, which left this port on Nov. 15, 1873, under the command of Capt. Sarmont, collided with the British ship Loch Erne, from London, in latitude 47° 21', longitude 35° 31', and sank shortly afterward, carrying down 226 souls, 87 only of the entire list of passengers being saved. The steam-ship Europe was encountered on April 2, 1874, in a disabled condition, in latitude 48° 21', longitude 30° 3', and her crew and passengers, numbering 400 persons, were rescued by the steam-ship Greece. After the rescue, a salvage crew of 20 men from the Greece, under the command of First Officer Buck, took charge of the steam-ship and endeavored to conduct her safely into port. They were compelled to abandon her at sea, however, and were rescued by the steam-ship Egypt and landed at Queenstown.

A FORGER IN CUSTODY.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 7.—Max Erlanger, the Baltimore forger, who was arrested a short time since in San Francisco, arrived here to-day in charge of a detective, and was turned over to Sheriff Mills.

THE BURNING COAL MINES.

NOTES FROM THE FRENCH CAPITAL.

THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RUSSIA AND TURKEY—THE DUTY OF A NEUTRAL STATE—ROUMANIA AS A COUNTRY—A TERRIBLE SCENE IN A CRIMINAL PRISON—ENERGY AND INDUSTRY OF FRENCH DETECTIVES—DEATH OF A FAMOUS LAWYER.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Wednesday, Dec. 20, 1876.

As to the conflict between Russia and Turkey, my impression is that Russia's objects are two-fold at this time: to give a diplomatic triumph which will compensate for her defeat at the time of the Berlin programme, and, secondly, to destroy the Treaty of Paris. And, both of these objects may be attained without recourse to arms if the Ottoman delegate to the conference shows the prudence that is expected of him. But nearly everybody here believes that war is certain, and if it does come the first country to suffer will be Roumania. The prudent and politic diplomatic representatives of that country are therefore trying their best to bring about peace. One of them has just written an able pamphlet to define Roumania's position before the Conference of Constantinople. His aim is to show that his country is neutral, and ought to remain so, since the preservation of its independence depends upon this policy. And this neutrality was stipulated when the Treaty of Paris was framed. Article 22 of that document says that "The Principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia will continue to enjoy under the suzerainty of the Porte all the rights and privileges then existing, the same to be guaranteed by the signing powers." Article 26 states that the powers agree to permit a standing Army to maintain order within and to guard the frontiers. Article 43 says that this Army may be called out, together with the Militia, whenever the frontiers are menaced. This constitutes all the positive law there is respecting the neutrality of Roumania, but the diplomatic correspondence of the past few years shows clearly that the intention of the great powers was to make it a neutral State, for the purpose of separating two great nations that might come to blows. Unfortunately the status of the neutrality was not clearly defined, and the efforts of the Roumanians are now directed to the work of getting their countryrecognized as an independent and neutral State, like Belgium and Switzerland.

Evidently the chief duty of a neutral State is to abstain from any act of hostility against its neighbors, but one of its duties is to prevent any violations of its own territory by hostile acts on the part of others. Roumania claims to have fulfilled its duties since the war began between the Turks and Servians, but its course does not seem to have attracted the attention of the powers which guaranteed their neutrality in 1856. None of them have declared themselves ready to protect the soil of Roumania in case of invasion, and it must be evident to all that her own forces are not sufficient to defend the neutrality in case Russia sees fit to march an Army to the Danube. Being only a semi-independent power, Roumania has not the right of making alliances, but the question now arises whether she is not justified in assuming this right, being apparently abandoned to herself, and of contracting alliances with some of the powers capable of aiding her in the protection of her soil.

Separated from Turkey by the Ottoman Empire, Roumania possesses all the attributes of sovereignity. She claims to have never intended renouncing it when placing herself under the protection of the Porte. By treaties, by her own stipulations, and by the position given her in 1856, Roumania claims to be independent, although she became a tributary State for self-protection. But Wheaton says that "tributary States do not cease to be considered as sovereign States," and Vattel adds that "although the payment of tribute to a foreign State takes something from the dignity of States, being the confession of their weakness, their sovereignity nevertheless remains." And according to many other authorities upon international law this is an established fact, so that Roumania can fairly claim her sovereignty, and, parting from this principle, she can claim the right of choosing her own allies as a sovereign State. Since there is a Hohenzollern Prince upon the throne, it is easy to see in what direction Roumania will look for an ally.

Since the beginning of the present century all wars have been preceded or accompanied by two sorts of declarations—one emanating from the belligerents, and indicating what favors will be accorded to neutrals; the other proceeding from the neutrals to make known the policy they intend to adopt during the struggle. In support of this may be cited the notes exchanged between France and Germany and Belgium at the beginning of the war of 1870. Roumania has declared in advance her intention of remaining neutral, and now calls upon Europe to see that there is a counter-declaration guaranteeing that neutrality, so that she can come before the conference and have her position more clearly defined than it was during the Congress of Paris. In presence of a situation that is full of peril she comes forward to declare her policy, and asks to be treated as the Swiss Confederation was when the peace of Westphalia was concluded in 1648. But the neutrality then guaranteed was twice violated—once in 1813, when Prince Swartzenberg marched an Austrian army through Switzerland, and once by Napoleon; but on the 20th of November, 1815, by the same means now employed by Roumania, Switzerland obtained a guaranteed neutrality of a definite character. In 1830 Belgium was admitted into the family of nations, but only on condition that she should remain perpetually neutral. On account of her geographical position Roumania is destined to play a part analogous to that of these two countries. Certainly, Russia has the power to send an invading army across her territory, but she would hesitate to do so if all the powers represented at the conference were to insist strongly upon the sacred character of treaties and firmly oppose any attempts to violate guaranteed neutrality.

At the moment I write a terrible scene is passing in one of our criminal prisons. It is this afternoon that their will be informed of the proofs collected against him. For the past few weeks the papers have been full of the woman cut in pieces. One morning the parts of a mutilated body were found in the Seine, and deposited at the Morgue. All Paris rushed there to examine the victim. She was a woman of 35, stoutly built, extremely ugly in appearance, and having the air of poverty. Pictures of the deceased were given in the illustrated journals, and when they reached one of the cafés a man remarked, "Look here! one would say that was the woman with the decoré." The decorated individual thus referred to was a person named Biloir, who had gained the military medal as a Sergeant, and who had frequented the café with his mistress. All present took a look at the picture and all recognized the resemblance. "By the way," said one, "we have not seen him of late?" In another journal was found the Police notice asking for information about missing women. The Police were informed of this café scene, and as Biloir could give no clear account of the disappearance of his mistress, he was taken in charge until an inquiry could be instituted. Then a great complication occurred. One hundred and twenty-nine women of this age were reported as missing, and in nearly every instance the witnesses recognized the photographs. But all were traced out by the Police, and all but one were found in some quarter of France. That one was Marie Le Manach, the mistress of Biloir. At the latter would say was that she left him after a quarrel, and he could not say where she had gone. The Police showed themselves worthy the traditions of Vidocq. When they had brought the 129 missing women down to one, they began to examine the apartment of Biloir. The cabinets were emptied, and in them were found portions of the viscera and the hair of the victim. In the room there were traces of blood, and in a wardrobe were found some leaves of laurel and of thyme. This may seem insignificant, but in the sinks, where the hair was found, the detectives found clinging to it one laurel leaf and two leaves of thyme. In this way the case has been gotten up, bit by bit, and to-day Biloir is to be examined and brought face to face with the apparently crushing proofs of his guilt that have been found.

The other day there passed away in this city one of the most remarkable advocates of the age. A grand silhouette will rise before the eyes of the readers of modern French history when they learn that M. Chaix d'est Ange (pronounced Shadestonge,) is no more. This remarkable lawyer and magistrate was born with the century, but began his legal career with the Restoration. He was in that group of eminent men which figured in the 1830 epoch, and he came out with Berryer, Paillet, Odilon-Barrot, Marie and Leon Duval. He soon made himself famous, not only as a pleader but as an elegant gentleman, showing himself in every way un homme du monde. He was one of those who first rallied to the Empire, and his devotion to it was nobly rewarded. In a few years he became a man of fortune. The specialty of Chaix d'Est-Ange was suits for separation, or what would be divorce in America, and he was nearly always found on the side of the wife, pleading against Duval. As a lawyer his name is associated with nearly all the great family scandals of the past quarter of a century. When a very rich man, lor a lawyer, he left the Bar for the magistracy, and occupied some of the highest judicial positions. Personally, he was a fine-looking, cultivated, and highly agreeable gentleman, and much more polished in his manners than many members of the nobility of France. In his later years he had a passion for works of art, and collected a rich gallery of pictures. He had a Teniers which is famous. When the Queen of Holland came here the other day to look after her wild son the Prince of Orange, now sowing his wild oats in Paris, she wrote to Chaix d'Est-Ange for permission to see his gallery. He invited the Queen to dinner, and she went there with the Princess Matalida, passing the entire afternoon.

A STORMY PASSAGE.

AN ATLANTIC STEAMER IN A GALE—THE TRIP OF THE CITY OF BRISTOL, OF THE INMAN LINE.

From the London Telegraph, Dec. 21.

The Atlantic steam-ship City of Bristol, Capt. John Ellison, which left Liverpool for Philadelphia on Wednesday, the 6th inst., arrived in Queenstown Harbor, Cork, yesterday morning at 8:15 o'clock. Up to the 9th inst., coming down Channel, fine weather was experienced, but on that day a gale from the south-west set in, attended by a high cross sea, and day after day it increased and veered at short intervals to the north-west, which caused the vessel to become considerably rougher and broken. On the morning of the 14th, when in latitude 48° 20' north, longitude 34° 32' west, the gale, which is described as terrible, reached its height, and in a heavy plunge the foremast went by the board, and the second officer, Mr. Twentyman, of Liverpool, and four seamen were washed away and drowned. At 11:50 A. M. the bowsprit, with all the running gear, went, and the decks were constantly flooded with water, the equalls all this time increasing. The ship was hove to under a reefed trysail to clear the wreck. She is greatly damaged. A portion of the side-lights is carried away, the forward wheel is completely smashed, and also the chart-room, which is gutted. Such was the fury of the waves that the saloon skylights were burst in from the weight or volume of water continually breaking on board. Several of the crew are injured, but none seriously. After the wreck had been cleared away Capt. Ellison consulted with his officers, and deemed it prudent to bear up for Queenstown. The City of Bristol is owned by the Inman Company, but was chartered by the American Line trading between Liverpool, Queenstown, and Philadelphia. Her decks are completely swept, and her forward part is greatly injured; throughout her machinery worked satisfactorily. It has been arranged that the Illinois, of the American Line, which arrives to-day, (Thursday,) will take the passengers of the Bristol and some of her light cargo, consisting of fruit which was intended for the Christmas market in New-York; the Bristol will then proceed to Liverpool for repairs. Some of the passengers were permitted to go ashore. The City of Richmond, of the Inman Line, which reached Queenstown on Monday morning, was in the same gale, and had to lie to limit for seven hours.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8—1 A. M.—In the Middle and Eastern States, rising barometer, west to south winds veering to brisk and possibly high northwesterly, decidedly colder, partly cloudy weather, and possibly, in the northern portions, occasional snow. The rivers in the Middle and Eastern States will probably rise.

HEAVIEST SNOW-STORM KNOWN IN YEARS.

ELMIRA, Jan. 7.—The heaviest fall of snow which has been known in this valley for years fell last night, commencing at 8 o'clock in the evening and continuing without interruption for 12 hours. As much as 12 inches on the level fell. Railroad traffic is badly interrupted; no trains are running on time. The roofs of a number of houses, and other buildings, have fallen in from the weight of the snow. Fifty miles east of this point the snow-storm terminated in rain.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 7.—The heaviest snow-storm of the season set in about daylight this morning, and continued all day. There is now about six inches of snow on the ground, and the temperature is falling. Street railway travel has been much impeded. Reports received late to-night say the storm has been general throughout the State, and that different railroads are experiencing difficulty in getting trains through on time. In some sections, especially in the West, snow has ceased falling and the weather is becoming very cold. East of this point the storm was not so heavy, and the prospects are that trains will be delayed but little.

WRECK OF THE SHIP SIMLA.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—The Signal Service observer at Barnegat, N. J., reports to the Chief Signal Officer as follows: "The ship Simla, of Portsmouth, N. H., 1,100 tons, bound from Marseilles to New-York, in ballast, (Capt. Salter,) ran ashore seven miles south of Barnegat Inlet, at 11:30 o'clock last night. The weather was foggy and blowing a gale from the east at the time. The crew were brought ashore by life-saving crews Nos. 19 and 20. No lives were lost. The vessel will probably prove a total loss.

CHAMPION BILLIARD PLAYERS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 7.—A billiard match of 1,800 points for $400 and the gate money, which was finished by Messrs. Sexton and Slosson to-day, resulted in a victory for the former, the latter scoring but 976 points. Sexton's average was 24; Slosson's, 13 7-37. Sexton's largest run was 417 (the largest on record;) Slosson's, 100.

SENTENCE OF A MURDERER.

DAYTON, Jan. 7.—Harry Adams, who was convicted of murder in the first degree several weeks ago, was yesterday sentenced to be hanged on the 27th of April. His counsel will take the case to the Supreme Court.

DUELS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

The Boston Transcript says: "A duel on the Puritan soil of Massachusetts Bay would not be an entirely unheard-of thing. In fact, the first affair of honor in American annals is one that took place in 1621 at Plymouth, between two serving men, who were therefor sentenced by the stern and prompt moralists of our ancient hierarchy to be tied neck and heels together for 24 hours. The next famous duel, too, chronicled in MILLAR, was that on Boston Common (under the late lamented big elm) in 1728, when young Woodbridge killed young Phillips with his sword, to the great and painful scandal and excitement of the community. Dueling was not always under the quasi stigma now attaching to it. Gen. Washington approved of Gen. Greene's decision to accept a challenge, if the latter thought his honor would suffer from a refusal."

DEATH OF GOV. HENDRICKS' BROTHER.

The Indianapolis Journal of Saturday says: "The reception of Gov. Hendricks last night was saddened by the receipt early in the evening of news of the death of his brother, Mr. John Hendricks, which occurred at his residence, in Delhi, Ohio. On this account his Excellency did not appear to welcome the throng of legislators and citizens who called to pay their respects to the distinguished gentleman who is about to leave official life. In his bereavement Gov. Hendricks will have the sympathy of the entire community."

LATEST NEWS BY CABLE.

THE EASTERN COMPLICATIONS.

SATURDAY'S MEETING OF THE CONFERENCE AT CONSTANTINOPLE—NO FURTHER CONCESSIONS TO BE MADE TO TURKEY—THE LATEST COMMUNICATION EQUIVALENT TO AN EUROPEAN ULTIMATUM.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—A dispatch from Constantinople to-day states that the European plenipotentiaries met at the Russian Embassy on Saturday evening. It is said they decided to declare at Monday's sitting of the conference that they have not modified their views and cannot make any further concessions.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—A Vienna telegram to the Standard says trustworthy information has been received there that the memorandum of Safvet Pasha is so categorically opposed to the proposals of the powers that, unless the plenipotentiaries make considerable concessions in the conference to-day, hardly a chance of agreement remains.

A dispatch to the Daily News, dated Constantinople, Sunday, says: "The situation has again become clear and well defined. The European Goverments have instructed their representatives in the Conference to refuse to consider Midhat Pasha's constitution and to present on Monday what is really the European ultimatum. The powers are very determined and undoubtedly mean to try to force the Porte to accept their proposals. The plenipotentiaries will give the Porte until Wednesday or Thursday for a final and direct answer. In the event of a refusal they have decided to withdraw from Constantinople. The Porte begins to show a disposition to yield, particularly in regard to some sort of an international commission, which is the most important part of the scheme.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says the Porte seems willing to grant a consular commission for Bosnia and Herzegovina, but resists in regard to one for Bulgaria. The correspondent concludes an exhaustive review of the situation as follows:

"The difficulties still existing are not quite so irreconcilable as not to excite hope that a compromise is possible, or at all events that a further delay in the decision for a few days is justified."

The various special dispatches as to the probable attitude of the Porte at to-day's sitting of the conference are very conflicting. A Pera special to the Daily Telegraph, dated Sunday, says the Porte is apparently still determined to make no further concessions. The Marquis of Salisbury has already engaged a steamer to depart on the 16th inst. The same correspondent confirms the report that some sort of an ultimatum will be presented to the Porte to-day.

The Times' correspondent at Vienna telegraphs there is every hope that the differences between Roumania and Turkey will be arranged. Turkey has already informed the Roumanian Government that the Porte never could have any intention of altering by an act of internal policy the position which Roumania derived from international treaties.

According to the latest account, Gen. Tchernayeff will not return to Servia, but will go to Nice. His thorough disgrace is probably owing to orders from Russia. The difference between the Servian Government and the Russian volunteers has been settled. The men are to continue to form a separate corps under their own officers, with Gen. Nikitine as their commander.

The Times's Berlin dispatch says Austria is calling out the reserves in Bohemia and elsewhere.

THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

HAVANA, Jan. 7.—The English mail steamer has arrived here from Vera Cruz and brings the following intelligence:

CITY OF MEXICO, Dec. 29.—Whole brigades and regiments of Iglesias' army have pronounced for Diaz, but the latter has not yet dared to attack Iglesias, he being strongly posted with 15,000 men, at Silca, about 50 miles from Guanajuato. The States of Jalisco, Zacatecas, Durango, San Luis Potosi, and Nuevo Leon have pronounced for Diaz. Gen. Mendez, who was appointed Regent by Diaz, to act in his absence, has issued a convocatoria for the election of President, Chief Justice, and members of Congress on Jan. 23. Gen. Mejia and Iglesias are both excluded as candidates or Electors; also all members of the Lerdo and Juarez Governments. This is denounced as one of the most arbitrary acts ever perpetrated in the name of a republic, and is considered as unwise as it is tyrannical. There is, however, a prospect of temporary peace which animates everybody. Lerdo succeeded in making his escape from the country, having embarked at Acapulco.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—The Standard's dispatch from Madrid states that the extradition treaty between Spain and the United States includes crimes committed in Cuba and other colonies. The relations between Washington and Madrid are very cordial in respect to the claims connected with Cuba.

ROME, Jan. 7.—The elections held to-day at Vittoria and Congliano, to fill vacancies, resulted in the return to Parliament of Signori R. Borghi and Visconti-Venosta, members of the late Cabinet.

The Berlin correspondent of the Daily News reports that Prince Bismarck is not well. His illness is not serious, but will render it necessary for him to return to Varzin.

LEIPSIC, Jan. 7.—Hermann Brockhaus, the distinguished Orientalist, is dead.

OF THE
CITY OF CINCINNATI.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK BY THE UNDERSIGNED, AS AGENTS FOR THE PROPER AUTHORITIES OF SAME UNTIL

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 10, 1877,

AT 2 O'CLOCK P. M., for the whole or any part of the sum of $2,800,000, MUNICIPAL BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI, as authorized by an act of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, entitled "an act relating to cities of the first class having a population exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants," passed May 4, 1869, and "an act supplementary thereto," passed Feb. 24, 1873, a vote of the people of the CITY OF CINCINNATI, and a resolution of the City Council as prescribed by the said act.

SAID BONDS WILL BEAR INTEREST AT THE RATE OF 7 3-10 PER CENT. PER ANNUM, PAYABLE ON THE 1ST DAY OF MAY AND NOVEMBER IN EACH YEAR, AND THE PRINCIPAL WILL BECOME DUE IN 1906, BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST BEING PAYABLE AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK IN NEW-YORK.

Each proposal should be sealed and indorsed:

"PROPOSALS FOR 7 3-10 PER CENT. BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI," AND INCLOSED IN A SECOND ENVELOPE ADDRESSED TO THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK.

The right is reserved on the part of the undersigned to reject any or all of the bids, if, in their judgment, the interests of the city require it.

AWARDS WILL BE MADE ON JAN. 11.

THE NEW SILVER LAND.

MILLIONS IN THE SAN JUAN MINES.

LIFE IN A WILD COUNTRY—WHAT IT COSTS TO LIVE IN A MINING TOWN—THE LAWS THAT RULE THE LAND—CUSTOMS OF THE PEOPLE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

DEL NORTE, ON THE RIO GRANDE, } Wednesday, Dec. 27, 1876. }

Over 8,000 fortune-hunters have flocked into the San Juan mines since the 1st of May. Ten good-sized towns have been built, and about 20 camps, each numbering from 25 to 100 persons, established. The two or three settlements which were laid out a year or two ago have grown into cities. The country new contains as many as 12,000 inhabitants. This is a large population, when we consider the great drawbacks to settlement. The San Juan region was almost unknown four years ago. The Ute Indian reservation covered a large share of it. Very few white settlers had ventured in. There was very little temptation to explore such a wild, mountainous region. Even the hints about rich silver leads which the Indians had repeatedly made by displaying wonderful quartz, did not not stir up much excitement. Other quarters were gaining the attention of the prospectors, and the scalping of Baker's party was still fresh enough in their minds to deter them from taking any great chances. But finally several squads of well-armed miners made their way into different parts of the country. They got along without any trouble, and when they came out, reporting very rich discoveries, and exhibiting some of the fruits of their search, almost a stampede for the San Juan country followed. This was in 1873. Del Norte was laid out that far, and became a base of supplies. The success of the Government in making a treaty with the Utes, by which they ceded that portion of their reservation which contained the mining districts, put away the greatest obstacle to its rapid settlement. The past two years, and more particularly the past season, have worked wonders. Del Norte, the place from which I write, although only on the borders of the "promised land," has grown into a city of 3,000 inhabitants, with a well-organized government, schools, churches, a bank, newspaper, and many large wholesale stores, besides a myriad of traders' stands. There is no other large town within 100 miles, and such a brisk, bustling American air in a country almost wholly Mexican, as all South-western Colorado is, is as encouraging as novel. But the San Juan mines have built the town. And this is not the only base of supplies. Saguache, (Sa-watch,) north of here, and Cañon City, Pueblo, Trinidad, and Santa Fé, though distant from 100 to 200 miles further from the mines than Del Norte, are striving hard to secure this trade; and all have a share in outfitting parties who are going in, and supplying the merchants now established at the different mining towns and camps.

The railroads, too, are looking after the San Juan trade and travel in a lively way. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Company has circulated millions of their "San Juan Guide" throughout the East, and even in Europe, giving full information about the mines. This company finished its line to Pueblo, where it connects with the Denver and Rio Grande, last Spring. The Kansas Pacific also makes a bid for this business. The local railways are also confident that San Juan is worthy their attention. The Denver and Rio Grande narrow-gauge line, which originally aimed for Santa Fé and El Paso, has during the Summer built from Pueblo south to Trinidad, and branching off from Cucteras, midway between these two latter points, a line was run to the foot of Sangre de Christo range, where a town called La Veta has been laid out and is now quite a flourishing place. Since July this point has been the nearest railway station to the mines, stages and freighting teams having run daily to Del Norte. Meanwhile the Denver, South Park and Pacific Railway, which three years ago was built as far as Morrison, the mouth of Bear Creek Cañon, 14 miles, has been working up the cañon toward Fairplay, having been reorganized under the name of the Denver and San Juan Railway. Construction Company, with the intention of going into the south-western country and making Lake City its terminus until some good chance should show the way for its extension through to Salt Lake City. The Denver and Rio Grande Railway, disposed to keep the advantage already gained, has broken ground for laying the rails over the Sangre de Christo range to Fort Garland, and thence to Del Norte, expecting to reach this place by next Summer. It crosses the range through Veta Pass, and the station at its summit will be 9,300 feet above sea level, being the highest railway station on the continent.

THE MINES.

The mines in the San Juan country are principally silver, though there are also gold districts. The latter—Summit, Decatur, and Alamosa—lie south of Del Norte from 40 to 50 miles. The chief centre is the Little Annie Mine, the camp where it is located being called Summit. The Government has a signal service station there, the only one besides Denver and Pike's Peak in the Rocky Mountain country. The gold mines have not been worked to any great extent as yet, and there are but few that can be called rich. The total product of the three districts during the past year has not been over $75,000. But all the old California and Montana miners who have been through the country have great faith that it will turn out wonders some of these days. One week's "clean up" of the Annie Mine the past Summer was 25 pounds of gold, worth $6,000, from 50 tons of ore. But the great scramble is for silver, and the great districts are Animas, Lake, Eureka, Adams, and Uncompahgre. These lie in the San Juan Mountains, west of Del Norte, on both the east and west slopes, to some extent almost covering the summits, and at an altitude of from 7,000 to 15,000 feet. Going up from Del Norte, the first show of silver is at Cuaningham Gulch. At Antelope Springs, 50 miles from Del Norte, the roads branch off, one going north-west, to Lake City, 35 miles, and the other directly west, to Silverton, 60 miles. These two places are the central camps of the five silver-mining districts. Ouray, also, lying over the Uncompahgre Mountains, 25 miles beyond Silverton, is a point of some importance. These various districts cover a tract of country about 80 miles east and west by 30 north and south. The towns and camps lying within this area, besides those already mentioned, are Howardsville, Animas Forks, Eureka, Mineral City, San Juan City, and several of less note. There three counties, La Plata, Hinsdale, and San Juan, all created by the Territorial Legislature of 1875, and a bill is now before the State Legislature for the creation of another county, to be called Ouray, out of San Juan County. La Plata, the largest county, occupies the south-west, bordering on New-Mexico and Utah, and there is not much of it within the silver belt. Its western portion is attracting attention of late as containing the San Miguel placers, the only gold gulch mines of any great promise in Colorado, except perhaps those about Montezuma, in Summit County, and Oro City and South Arkansas, in Lake. Its principal camp is Parrott City. Just outside the area mentioned other mining districts have been started, and the whole mountainous part of South-western Colorado is likely to be overrun by prospectors. Lake City, Silverton, and Ouray, as I have said, are the three largest places in the mines. They are from 25 to 40 miles apart. From Del Norte to Lake City is 85 miles, Silverton 110, and Ouray 125, but the latter being over the range, is easier of access from Saguache or Santa Fé. Lake City has the advantage in population, and the mines in its immediate vicinity are better developed, and more capital has been expended in tunnelling, as also in works for reducing the ores, than in the other places. Lake City was started in the Fall of 1874, and is now about two years old. A man named Hotchkiss had been looking about to see what he could find. He picked up several fine specimens of "float ore" on the site of the present city. One of these pieces was sent to California for assay, and found to run at the rate of $40,000 per ton. The Hotchkiss mine was staked out and worked, yielding richly. The long severe Winter coming on prevented much work. In the Summer of 1875 13 log-cabins constituted the town. The inevitable newspaper was first in the field, and in June the Silver World appeared. It was "struck off" in a mud-hut, and the editor, mounting his broncho, took the first edition through the thinly-peopled districts, and thence to Saguache, where it was mailed to Denver and other parts of Colorado. The first mail was brought in on horseback on the 30th of July. The population increased rapidly, brought hither by the fame of the mines. The record of the camp up to the middle of February, 1876, is thus depicted in a copy of the local newspaper:

"With a population reaching nearly 400, we have, up to this time, never had a death or a wedding; never had a Sunday-school nor religious service of any kind; we have neither a doctor nor a lawyer; no dance-houses nor courtesans; had a printing office before we had a store or Post Office, and a public school before a saloon."

This may be considered an anomalous beginning for a mining camp, and speaks well for the quality of the first settlers. But the Summer of the present year witnessed a wonderful transformation. Miners and capitalists, speculators and freighters, crowded in. The results may be rapidly sketched. Lake City now contains a population of 1,500, has 2 banks, 4 hotels, 52 stores and places of business, 15 lawyers, 10 assayers, 9 surveyors, and other trades and professions in proportion. Hundreds of valuable mines have been opened, reduction and concentration works erected, good wagon-roads up Henson Creek and to other camps have been built. Town lots, which a year ago were not thought worth the jumping, are now held at from $500 to $1,000 each. There are news depots, jewelry stores, musical instruments, public schools, and churches, showing taste and refinement already among the people. Although business is quiet through the Winter, owing to the fact that large numbers of the mines will be shut down, yet preparations on a large scale are being made for next season. The wholesale houses are arranging to stock up heavily, and expect to sell goods to all the camps and districts. The new wagon-road up Henson Creek, built at a cost of $30,000, will be finished, and daily stages will run to Silverton, reaching, also, Howardsville, Eureka, and Animas Forks. Reduction works are being built at several points in the neighborhood, and saw mills, planing mills, machine shops, and foundries are under way. All the mine owners are expecting great things, and will be prepared with more capital and better facilities for working the lodes all along the Henson, Animas, Upper Uncompahgre, and Lake Fork. I spoke of Ouray as one of the coming camps. It is over the range, not easy of access from either Lake City or Silverton. It is reached better over the road from Santa Fé coming in on the west side of the mountains. It is likely to control the trade of the Uncompahgre district. At present the population is only about 250, but will be largely increased next season. There are projects for establishing a bank, reduction works, and other enterprises in the Spring. There is a very fair wagon-road from Ouray to Saguache. Its altitude being about 6,000 feet, which is lower than Del Norte, it is a fair place to Winter in and accessible the year round.

Silverton, the third city of the mines, has an altitude of 9,400 feet. The locality used to be known as Baker's Park. The situation is on a level patch of ground one and a half miles long and about three-quarters wide, surrounded by six towering peaks. Kendall Mountain, on the south, is 13,380 feet high, Sultan, on the east, 13,336, while Hazleton, Blair, and Galena Mountains are nearly as high. Four miles up the Animas is Howardsville, 9,700 feet high, a town of 50 cabins, and near by are Animas Forks and Eureka. In the Summer Silverton and its neighboring camps has a population of about 1,000; in the Winter hardly half as much. The mines about Silverton were the first silver mines opened, and the town, laid out two years ago, is the oldest in the San Juan country. Hundreds of claims have been worked in the immediate vicinity, and during the past season's great deal of tunneling has been done in the neighboring mountains to cut the lodes. The place has a newspaper, several large trading-houses, and next season expects many other accessories of a large, live, mining city.

Some idea of the demand for supplies coming from these new towns and camps may be gained from a glance at the trade of Del Norte, though it is but one of several points furnishing goods to the San Juan country. Eight business firms dealing in miners' supplies, groceries, and clothing, have had a trade amounting to $600,000 the past year. There are about 20 other firms. The aggregate sales will exceed $1,000,000. Most of the goods have gone to Lake City, Silverton, Summit, Ouray, and Mineral City. As an indication of what is coming from the mines, I may state that the Bank of San Juan, located at this place, has bought during the Summer $100,000 in silver from one of the smelters at Silverton, $75,000 in gold from Summit district, and from Lake City and the Sangre de Christo mines about $75,000 more, making a total of $250 000. The product of the mines put into market the past six months has been about half a million dollars, of which all but $75,000 was in silver. Ore taken out and ready for treatment at the different silver mines will exceed $2,000,000. Next year, with mills and machinery in operation, it is believed that the San Juan region will send into market from two to three million dollars. What has been most needed are stamp-mills and reduction works. As soon as enough of these are supplied to either buy the ores or treat them so that miners can realize cash from their labors, a great impetus will be given to the business.

THE MINING LAWS.

The mining laws are sufficiently strict to guard each man's rights, though in a new country like this the tendency of all the camps is to be a law unto themselves. Generally the sanfid judgment of a squad of miners, though not backed by citations, is final, and more satisfactory than the decisions of courts. Interests sometimes unexpectedly clash. A tunnel company not long ago located a site near the centre of Burrows Park, and started a drift. They had not driven far when they struck a rich vein. As soon as this "lucky find" became known, a couple of miners set up the claim that the tunnel encroached upon the boundaries of a "prospect" staked by them some time before. The tunnelmen had hunted and found no location stake, and denied the claim. It was finally agreed to leave the point at issue to a miners' mass-meeting. Everybody in that district was on hand. The meeting was organized, and the names of 36 men having been written on slips and placed in a box, 12 were drawn out, and this constituted a jury to try the case. The witnesses were examined under oath, and after all were heard, they went out and viewed the premises, taking a surveyor with them. They decided that the tunnel company were trespassers and must vacate. The same meeting looked into a "mine-jumping" case, and issued a series of resolutions to the effect that it would not prove a healthy business to follow. Since that time there has been no jumping of mines. There is not much of a show for poor men in the mines. Owing to the high altitude in most of the district, Winter lasts from October to June, and there is not more than four months of the year when mining can be carried on without interruption; so there is work only during the Summer. A poor man may discover a good lead, but he will be put to his wit's end for means to prove up his claim and work it. The chances are that he will go from bad to worse, getting poorer every day. If he is able to get out ore he will sell it to the millmen for a mere song, he is in such straits for money. It costs a good deal to live. At Mineral City or Ouray flour is worth $12 a sack of 100 pounds; bacon, 25 cents per pound; butter, 70 cents; potatoes, 4 to 6 cents per pound, and everything else about in that proportion. Del Norte, the nearest point of any considerable supply, is over 100 miles away. The roads on the east of the range are rough and steep—sometimes in Winter wholly impassable. So at the various camps they are obliged to lay in a Winter's supply of food and clothing. As the deep snows lock up the mines to so great an extent, large numbers come down to Del Norte, or go to Pueblo or Denver and spend the Winter, while some go East and take the opportunity to show some of their picked samples and stock up a company or sell a share or two in their mines. I have yet to meet a San Juan mine owner who does not feel rich. He always carries a few nuggets in his pocket, and has a sack full of ore handy. He talks glibly of mineral rock, pay streaks, and lodes, and, though frequently "dead broke" or "busted," as the prospectors more commonly call it, yet he names $50,000 as a trifling sum for a quarter-interest in his mine. He never wants to sell out, but is always ready to "raise a stake" for working capital. It is a hard matter to estimate the value of mining property, but basing it somewhat upon sales already made, it is probable that there are between Lake City and Ouray, including the district from Animas Forks to Silverton, 6,000 claims and 500 good mines, in all stages of development, some with the rock but slightly torn up, others with considerable tunnel-shafts, all of which could be put into the market at an average of $20,000 each, making a total of $10,000,000. Were we to count in the thousands of claims taken up, the most of them barely scratched over, and rate them at the expectant owners' figures, it would foot up something like a hundred millions. This might be thought wild guessing, but when we consider the fact that the Caribou Silver Mine sold three or four years ago for $3,000,000, and that 10 of the Gilpin and Clear Creek County gold and silver lodes have in the past five or six years turned out bullion to the amount of twenty millions, it is easy to see that good mines in the Rocky Mountain country are worth something.

THE VOYAGE OF THE PARTHIA.

The steam-ship Parthia, of the Cunard Line, which was due here on Wednesday last, did not arrive until yesterday morning, having been delayed by a strong head wind and a heavy sea during her passage. She encountered rough weather throughout the entire voyage, but being one of the steadiest going ocean steam-ships afloat, the passengers suffered no inconvenience during the trip. The chief officers of the vessel informed a TIMES reporter that they experienced nothing more than the ordinary Winter gales to be expected at this season of the year, and that the delay was owing more to a heavy sea than to high winds. The Parthia brought 31 saloon and 25 steerage passengers.

SUNDAY PULPIT THOUGHTS.

SCIENCE AND REVELATION.

REV. JOHN COTTON SMITH ON THE GENERAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THESE SUBJECTS, AND THE HARMONY OF THE TWO.

Rev. John Cotton Smith, D. D., lectured yesterday afternoon, in the Church of the Ascension, on "The General Relations between Science and Revelation, and the Harmony of the Two." Dr. Smith said that science and revelation were perfectly consistent with each other. The fundamental truth of Revelation was that there is a God. Some said that there was no God but nature, and nothing personal in nature save humanity. Thousands believed that there was no personal God, and that only nature, coming from germs, was God, and a vast amount of literature of the present day inculcated and sustained such theories. What proofs have we that an intelligent First Cause and Ruling Power exists? There was our own vast solar system, with its furthest planet—Neptune—at the awful distance of 3,400,680,000 miles from the sun. If our solar system was the only one in existence it would still be wonderful. Only six of the planets in our system were visible to the naked eye, and yet we could easily see myriads of other stars which were grand centres of other solar systems. And yet all we could see, both by the eye and telescope, was only one universe of myriads of other universes, and the human mind was staggered at the contemplation of a subject so vast and stupendous. Throughout this inconceivable number of worlds the same order and laws prevailed as were found in our own system. He who accepted at revelation did not rightly understand nature. Science and revelation, rightly understood, were twin sisters, shedding light on the stormy ocean of life. The first chapter of Genesis had been much criticised by reason of the account there given of the creation. A day in the account of the creation did not mean 24 hours, but an indefinite period. A day was used in this sense in the Hebrew language, as were also the terms morning and evening. Hugh Miller had asserted that not a single scientific truth militated against any detail given in the Mosaical account of the creation. The Scriptures said that all men were of one blood, and this had been a stumbling-block to many, it being contended that the different races on the face of the globe could not have had one common origin; that the Caucasian and the negro could not have descended from the same family. The great system of Darwin had shown that apparently permanent and widely distinct varieties of the human race could be in time produced from the same stock. The human family, originating in Asia, has spread all over the world. Essentially the same traditions and religious rites and ceremonies, especially that of a bloody sacrifice, had been found to prevail almost universally, among the most polished as well as among the most savage nations. Science, rightly pursued, proved the truth of revelation and the common origin of mankind. Everywhere were found traditions of the deluge, among the Greeks, Romans, Egyptians, Chinese, North American Indians, the Mexicans, and the aborigines of Cuba. The Pagan mythologies were very largely derived from the same sources as our own religion. Mythology everywhere recognized facts connected with Adam and his sons or Noah and his sons. Recently, the discovery of many ancient inscriptions in the palaces of the Assyrian kings had abundantly sustained the truth of some of the most interesting and important narratives given in the Bible. Kepler, on reading the account of the star appearing to lead the wise men to Bethlehem, thought that there might be a possibility of proving the appearance of the star as an astronomical fact, and discovered that a conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn in the constellation of Pisces actually occurred about that time, and would present in Judea the appearance of a bright and resplendent star. It was not improbable that Eastern astrologers, knowing the old prophecies about the star, and expecting the conjunction to take place, did in fact come to Judea to verify the prophecies and their expectations. A natural, except man, praised and acknowledged God. Man, in his pride, was slow to accept the truths of Revelation, but the very means taken to disprove Revelation, would in the end, so fertile its truths as to make science the great demonstrator and champion of the truth of the Christian religion.

TALMAGE ON JOURNALISM.

A DISCOURSE TO NEWSPAPER MEN IN THE BROOKLYN TABERNACLE—THEIR TRIALS AND HARDSHIPS DEPICTED IN GLOWING LANGUAGE.

At the Brooklyn Tabernacle yesterday, Rev. T. De Witt Talmage began a series of sermons to the members of the different professions, the first of which was addressed to journalists. After the opening prayer the hymn "Hold the Fort" was sung as a mark of respect to the memory of its writer, Mr. P. P. Bliss, who was killed at Ashtabula, Ohio, and who, Mr. Talmage said, had sung it in the old Tabernacle in the East at the opening of the Lay College. Before beginning his discourse, the preacher said he supposed it would be well to state that there was some snow on the roof; for in these days large audiences were easily alarmed. He referred to the fact that while worshiping at the Academy the congregation became almost panic, stricken by some snow that was on the roof sliding downward. He then announced his text, from Jeremiah xxiv.: 2, 3: "One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe, and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, they were so bad. Then said the Lord unto me, 'What seest thou, Jeremiah?' And I said 'Figs; the good figs very good, and the evil very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.'" It had been generally believed that on this occasion Mr. Talmage would administer some very stern reprimands to the members of the newspaper profession, and when he proceeded to show that they, as a class, were the most abused set of men in the world it occasioned no little surprise.

The figs of which the Prophet Jeremiah spoke in his text were very like the newspapers and the periods of which he was to speak. There were only two classes of newspapers—the one good and very good, and the other bad and very bad. One was the very embodiment of news, the delectation of very good taste, while the other was a brigand among newspapers, a besilmer of reputations. Had his hearers any doubt as to which of them should be the victor, it was only necessary to refer to the prophecies. The great battle was not to be fought with steel swords, but with steel pens; not with bullets, but with types. After a reference to the great strides the profession of journalism had made since Peter Sheffer first invented metal types, the preacher went on to say that the press and the telegraph had gone down into the same great harvest field to reap, and the telegraph said to the newspaper. "I will rake and you can bind," and the sheaves were daily given to the public in the shape of a morning or evening newspaper. That man who did not either take or read a newspaper yourself, as the Continental Britisher does, was not a good citizen. One thing was a greater curiosity than the great engine. How many words of comfort and sympathy do you men of the newspaper profession get during the year? asked the preacher. Not ten. How many words of excoriation and hypercriticism do you get during the same time—about 10,000. The compositor, if he was the type "pied" in a form at midnight, or who is in turn abused by the editor for a failure to get the "forms" up in time. The editor also gets his share of abuse for failing to meet the views of the publishers, and they, in their turn, are called upon to explain by the proprietors for an unsatisfactory dividend. The reporter is made responsible for the errors committed by the public speaker, the compositor, and the proof-reader—in short, for everything that is not done right. There is plenty of abuse for all these, but no sympathy. He had been in a position to see and know these things, and had, therefore, decided to deliver a sermon to them. One of the great trials of the newspaper profession was, that those engaged in it were compelled to see all the shams of the day. Through the newsaper offices went, day by day, all the weaknesses of the world. Into the rooms of the editors and reporters went all the dull speakers who pretended to be thought eloquent, and who wanted to set right; all the crack-brained philosophers, whose ideas are as cloudy as their finger-ends, for want of soap, as well as all the other itinerant bores who come to stay a minute and stop an hour. Considering all the shams that men in this profession were exposed to it was indeed a wonder to him that they believed in anything. Another of their trials was inadequate compensation. There was not a harder worked class of people in the world, and yet many of them had to struggle hard to obtain bread. Another great trial of the newspaper profession was the unhealthy, craving appetite for diseased intelligence—murders, scandals, and all other kinds of moral slush. Did any among his auditors for one moment suppose that publishers would give these things to their readers if they did not demand them? It was only a case of supply and demand, and the newspaper men were not at fault, for so long as there was an indifferent demand there would be an iniquitous supply. Another, and perhaps the greatest trial of the profession, was the allurements which surround its members. The great stream was on the brain, but it was often the case that they were compelled to work in damp and cold places, and were subjected to heat and cold alternately. Besides this, the blundering political speech must be made to read correctly for the sake of the party, and the reporter has to make every part of it perfect, even though each sentence was a catastrophe to the English language. Under these troubles, too many, alas! of the members of the profession resorted to artificial stimulants to keep their spirits up. Another trial was in the fact that no one seemed to think of their souls.

THE CIRCASSIAN VICTIMS.

The bodies of Capt. Williams, the mate, three apprentice boys, and two seamen of the wrecked ship Circassian, found on the Bridgehampton beach, were buried at Bridgehampton yesterday. Rev. J. D. Stokes, of East Hampton, preached the funeral sermon. The bodies of the Long Island wreckers, belonging to the Shinnecock tribe of Indians, were also buried yesterday afternoon at the Indian Reservation.

ARRIVAL OF BRENT, THE FORGER.

THE EX-CASHIER OF A LOUISVILLE BANK IN THE HANDS OF THE AUTHORITIES—HIS CRIME AND THE PROCEEDINGS FOR EXTRADITION IN ENGLAND.

Charles J. Brent, formerly the Cashier of the Falls City Tobacco Bank, of Louisville, Ky., who on Feb. 15 1876, absconded from that city with $15,000, the proceeds of a forgery perpetrated by him on the bank in which he was employed, and who was recently arrested in London and committed for extradition at the Bow Street Court, arrived in this City yesterday on the steam-ship Partbia, of the Cunard Line, in custody of Inspector John Sheve, of Scotland Yard. He was delivered to the custody of a Louisville officer, and left for that city last evening. After leaving Louisville Brent made his way to this City, and remained concealed until Feb. 26, when he sailed for Liverpool under the assumed name of Clarence Rivers, on the steam-ship City of Richmond, of the Inman Line. Pinkerton's detectives learned of his departure, and at once informed the Police authorities at Queenstown, requesting them to cause the arrest of the fugitive upon his arrival at that port. The steamer reached Queenstown on March 7, and Brent was arrested. Upon his person were found a bill of exchange for 39,000 francs, drawn by Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., of this City, and £50 sterling. He was taken before the magistrates at Queenstown, and after a short examination was ordered to be sent to London, preparatory to extradition to this country. Upon his arrival in London he was committed to the city prison, and on March 10 he was arraigned in the Bow Street Court. The Solicitor of the London Bankers' Association appeared on behalf of the Falls City Tobacco Bank. Detective Shore, of Scotland Yard, was the principal witness. He testified that the prisoner had practically admitted his guilt in conversation with him. He had found £56 and a draft for 39,000 francs on the prisoner, whom he arrested at Queenstown. Brent was remanded for further evidence, and was again arraigned at the police court on March 28, when the deposition of Mr. Levi Warren, President of the Falls City Tobacco Bank, was read, stating it as his belief that Brent had forged a check for $15,000. A warrant was provided, authorizing Officer Wilkinson, of Pinkerton's force, to bring the prisoner to this country. Eugene Warren, a son of the President of the bank, identified Brent, but declined to make any statement or ask any questions. The prosecuting attorney, in summing up, drew the attention of the magistrate, Sir Thomas Henry, to the fact that the prisoner was charged with "forging and uttering." He also reminded him of the evidence of Inspector Shore, who brought Brent from Ireland, to the effect that the latter "had practically admitted his crime," and Brent was once more committed. Nothing further was accomplished until June 19, when Brent's friends, who had been actively engaged in an attempt to secure his release, made an application before the Court of Queen's Bench for his discharge. Sir John Holker, the Attorney General, offered no resistance to the application, but stated that negotiations were at that time in progress between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States as to the meaning of the Extradition Treaty. He could not, however, say when the negotiations would be concluded, and as the two months during which the detention of the prisoner was legal had elapsed, he left the matter in the hands of the court, who granted an order for the discharge of the prisoner. Brent loitered around London awhile, a rumor having gained credence that he had signed a release of the money taken from him at the time of his arrest at Queenstown, and apparently becoming penniless, he enlisted in the Sixteenth Lancers as a private. On Dec. 2, while serving with his regiment at Canterbury Barracks, he was again apprehended, and taken to the Bow Street Police Court, and arraigned before Sir James Ingham, in his private room, on Dec. 4. The warrant for his arrest had been granted upon application of the United States Legation on Nov. 27, but as Brent was with his regiment, and could be kept under surveillance, and as his arrest might become known to Winslow and Gray, the forgers, he was not arrested until it was satisfactorily ascertained that Winslow and Gray had decamped for Brest, who was arrested by Detective Shore on Dec. 2, was not surprised, as he said he "knew that there would be an agreement between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States about extradition this month." When arraigned before Sir James Ingham, Brent made the following statement: "All I have to say is that I was three months in the House of Detention, and was released because the Governments could not come to an arrangement about extradition. On my release I authorized Detective Shore to return my money, watch, rings, &c., to the Merchants' National Bank of New-York. I should like to go back to the United States as soon as possible, without waiting for the expiration of the 15 days." Sir James Ingham told Brent that he must wait 15 days according to law. He then formally committed the prisoner, because he had been previously committed on evidence satisfactory to Sir Thomas Henry.

THE WILL OF COL. W. R. VERMILYE.

The will of the late Col. W. R. Vermilye has been admitted to probate in the Bergen County, N. J., Surrogate's Court. It places $25,000 in the hands of Trustees who are to pay the income quarterly to his sister, Mrs. Joanna M. Ruton, and similar trusts are made for the benefit of his sister Margaret Vermilye, and his brother, Robert G. Vermilye. The principal is to go, on their death, to their respective children. A trust fund of $25 000 is created for the benefit of his sister Rebecca Hawthorne; of $5,000 for the benefit of Mrs. Henrietta D. Sprague, his sister-in law. The direct bequests made in the will are to his brother Jacob D. Vermilye, $10,000; Mrs. Martha P. Wood, his sister-in-law, $2,000; to his servant Margaret McKenley, $1,000; Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, $5,000; Board of Home Missions, Presbyterian, $5,000; American Bible Society, $5,000; American Tract Society, $5,000; New-York Eye and Ear Infirmary, $2,000; Northern Dispensary of New-York, $1,500; Society for Aged and Disabled Ministers, Presbyterian, $1,000; Church Extension Committee of the Church the lot of land adjoining and south of the church property, as a site for a parsonage. The sum of $200,000 has been set apart for the continuation of the banking business of Vermilye & Co., on Nassau street, New-York, his son, Washington R. Vermilye, to whom is given the houses and grounds lately occupied by the deceased, to be a special partner. The remainder of his property, valued altogether at $1,000,000, is to be equally divided between his son, Washington, and his daughter, Mrs. E. A. Brinkerhoff. The will is witnessed by Livingston K. Miller and John E. Miller, and bears date Aug. 4, 1874.

DAMAGE BY THE STORM.

The rain-storm that set in on Saturday evening, and which was followed by the thaw of yesterday, resulted in a great deal of mischief to property in all parts of this City. Along the streets bordering on the North and East Rivers, where the enlverts were blocked up with ice and frozen snow, the water was backed into low-lying cellars, flooding them so completely as to drive out their occupants, and render many apartments for the time uninhabitable. But the damage was not confined to houses overflowed in this manner. All over the City complaints are heard of the bursting of leaders, and of the overflowing of roofs where the leaders have been choked up with ice. In many instances heard of the water has ruined curtains and carpets, and converted apartments that were considered out of the reach of any sort of storm into damp and discolored places. Many areas have been so flooded with the water that had accumulated from the melting of snow, that streams have poured into basements and cellars, to the destruction of much property and the misery and despair of tenants of the premises. Along the streets the falling of huge icicles which have accumulated about the overhanging eaves of buildings has added a very serious source of alarm to pedestrians, who have already had enough to do to maintain their equilibrium, and who have, for a week enjoyed a sense of security. A few considerate persons have taken the precaution to cut away these heavy masses of ice, but it is to be feared that with mild weather again to-day the danger in this direction will be greater than it was yesterday.

FOUND DEAD IN A CELLAR.

At 8 o'clock yesterday morning, Patrolman O'Neil, of the Twentieth Precinct, while passing the building at the corner of Eighth avenue and Twenty-ninth street, noticed the dead body of a man lying at the bottom of the stairs leading to the basement. The body was taken to the station-house, where it was subsequently recognized as that of John Dolan, a painter, 38 years of age, who resided at No. 225 West Twenty-ninth street. The deceased was of very dissipated habits, and had not had any steady employment for some months. What he earned by working at intervals was spent for drink. He worked two or three days last week, and on being paid for his labor on Saturday he went on a "spree." He failed to return home during Saturday night, and his friends knew nothing of his fate until his body was found. It is believed that Dolan, on his way home either late on Saturday or early yesterday morning, while intoxicated, fell down the steps and was killed. When found his head was at the bottom of the steps, and the whole weight of his body rested against the head. There were no external marks of violence, and death is supposed to have resulted from asphyxia or a fracture of the vertebral column. Coroner Flanagan was notified and gave permission to remove the remains from the station-house to his late residence. An inquest will be held in a few days.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Victoria C. Woodhull lectured on the "Social Problem" at the Park Theatre last evening.

The reception of the Upantheon Pleasure Club will be held at Irving Hall on Wednesday evening, Jan. 10.

Dr. S. M. Landis will lecture to-morrow evening, at Chickering Hall, on "General and Sexual Physiology."

The annual dinner of the New-York Horticultural Society will take place to-morrow evening at Mouquin's, No. 141 Fulton street.

The Goethe Club will give a complimentary reception to Mr. George H. Calvert at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, at 9:30 P. M. on Wednesday evening.

Mr. T. F. Neal was robbed of a valuable gold watch while on a Fourth avenue car, opposite the Grand Central Depot, last evening. The thieves escaped.

Dr. Sara B. Chase will deliver a course of physiological lectures to gentlemen at Cooper Institute, beginning to-morrow evening, with the subject of "Love."

Laura S. Webb will give Shakesperean and original readings at the Masonic Temple, Sixth avenue and Twenty-third street, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 10.

Rev. H. M. Galagher will lecture before the Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen at Steinway Hall on Thursday evening next. Subject, "Put Money in thy Purse."

The second annual Charity ball, under the auspices of the Young Men's Catholic Association, for the benefit of the poor of Yorkville, will take place this evening at Terrace Garden, Fifty-eighth street, near Lexington avenue.

John Cain, aged 42, of No. 340 East Fourth street, died suddenly last evening at Solari's restaurant, corner of University place and Eleventh street, where he was employed as an oysterman. Death was caused by apoplexy.

It is reported that Cardinal McCloskey, accompanied by Rev. Dr. Edward McGlynn, will soon go to Rome, and that the latter will be made Coadjutor Bishop of New-York. It is also reported that Rev. Michael O'Farrell, of St. Peter's, will be transferred to St. Stephen's; Rev. James H. McGean to St. Peter's, and Rev. Thomas J. Ducey to the Church of the Transfiguration.

BROOKLYN.

A gold watch and chain belonging to P. Bernardo, the character actor, valued at $175, was stolen from the dressing-room at Hooley's Theatre on Saturday afternoon.

Jewelry and wearing apparel valued at $150 were stolen from the residence of William S. Roberts, No. 79 Rosa street, on Saturday night. The thieves gained access to the premises by means of false keys.

The Handel and Haydn Society give their first concert of the season to-morrow evening, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The proceeds are to be devoted to the relief of the sufferers by the Brooklyn Theatre fire.

Two overcoats, valued at $58, were stolen from the hallway of the boarding-house of Mrs. Gatehouse, No. 230 Washington street, on Saturday evening, by a person who called there pretending to wish to engage board.

A meeting is to be held this evening in Dr. Putnam's Church, Pierrepont street and Monroe place, for the purpose of awakening public sentiment in favor of establishing a hospital in Brooklyn for the proper care and treatment of the insane.

John Stuart, of No. 423 Union street, was arrested yesterday afternoon by Detective Roche, of the Third Precinct, charged with stealing a watch and chain, valued at $40, from the cigar store of John Berner, No. 295 Smith street, on Saturday afternoon.

The jewelry store of David Foulke, No. 232 Atlantic street, was entered by burglars at 1 o'clock yesterday morning, and robbed of a valuable clock. Herman Borger, a saloon keeper, of No. 221 Atlantic street, was arrested subsequently, by Detective Mahoney, of the Third Precinct, on suspicion of having been concerned in the burglary, as he had the clock in his possession.

Martin Kaveny and James Donohue, of East New-York, started yesterday afternoon to carry the body of Patrick Donohue from Cypress Hills Cemetery to Staple on, Staten Island, when they came in collision with a Fulton avenue car, near East New-York, upsetting and smashing their wagon and throwing the coffin violently into the street. Both men were arrested for intoxication and taken to the Twelfth Precinct Station-house, and the coffin and its contents were taken to Tracy's Morgue, in Fulton avenue.

NEW-JERSEY.

Rev. Paul D. Van Cleef, of the Wayne Street Reformed Church, Jersey City, yesterday celebrated the 27th anniversary of his pastorship.

John Dunn, of East Newark, was recently convicted in the Essex County Court of Sessions of assault on the evidence of Herbert Mulford. On Saturday Dunn charged before Justice Jessup, of Newark, that Mulford had committed perjury on the trial. He was arrested Saturday night, and is held for trial.

Richard Kelty, aged 19 years, leader of a gang of thieves, insulted some ladies coming out of the Church of the Holy Innocents, in Hoboken, yesterday. Officer Clark undertook to arrest him, when he bit the officer on the hand, inflicting an ugly wound. He was finally captured and locked up.

The annual reports of the heads of the various city Departments of Newark, made to the City council on Friday night, show a degree of efficiency exhibited by few city governments. The Police force consists of 177 men. During last year the made 6,270 arrests. The number of lodgers accommodated at the Police stations was 21,031. The report of the Chief Engineer of the Fire Department shows the department to be in good condition. During the year there were 109 bell alarms and 54 still alarms. The losses on buildings were $28,383 30, covered by insurances amounting to $167,101; losses on stock, $41,293; covered by insurances aggregating $138,991 50. The cost of maintaining the department for the year was $145,246 80. The death roll of the city shows the total number of deaths to have been 3,691.

A BROOKLYN WAREHOUSE BURNED.

A fire took place at 7:30 o'clock yesterday morning, in the storage warehouse at the foot of Vahdyke street, Red Hook Point, South Brooklyn, which resulted in the destruction of about $50,000 worth of property. The building was a large one-story frame structure, and was owned by George E. Archer, of No. 153 State street, Brooklyn. The following property was on storage in the building at the time of the fire, and was destroyed: The amount of insurance could not be ascertained: 22,000 barrels of lime, owned by the Atlantic Lime Company of New-York, valued at $22,000; 1,153 barrels of pondretts, owned by Isaac Ronmain, of Jersey City, valued at $3,300; 690 casks of china clay, owned by Browniug, Archibald & Co., of New-York, valued at $6,000; 107 casks of soda ash, owned by James Lee & Co. and J. Baker & Brother, of New-York, valued at $2,500; 471 barrels of lubricating oil, owned by Libby & Co., of New-York, valued at $4,710. The loss on the building is $10,000, which was insured for $8.000. The tools and working materials destroyed were valued at $1,000, and were insured for $600. The fire is supposed to have been caused by a leak in the roof, which let the water in among the unslacked lime, setting it on fire.

DEMOCRATIC BLUSTERING.

THE MEETING IN WASHINGTON.

A MOTLEY CROWD THICKLY SPRINKLED WITH GAMBLERS AND LOAFERS—THE MATCH-TAX THE CHIEF GRIEVANCE—ABSOLUTE POWER CLAIMED FOR THE HOUSE—FUNNY SPEECHES BY WATTERSON, JOE PULLITZER, AND TARBOX—THE ONLY SENSIBLE MAN PRESENT A SOUTHERNER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—For some days past a number of the Washington papers here have published the following notice:

A grand mass-meeting will be held at Ford's Opera-house on Monday, Jan. 8, under the auspices of the Tilden and Hendricks Reform Club, to give expression to the sentiment of the Democracy of the District of Columbia upon the pending political crisis.

In accordance with this announcement a motley throng of unemployed laborers and others, headed by a fair sprinkling of gamblers and other disreputable characters, assembled at the place of meeting designated. They had completely filled the Opera-house long before 1 o'clock, the hour appointed for the opening of the proceedings, and for an hour or more occupied themselves by yelling for "Tilden, Hendricks, and Reform," and by admiring the bunting with which the hall was lavishly hung. The only thing remarkable about these decorations was that all the flags, of which they principally consisted, bore 38 stars, which may perhaps be taken as a tacit understanding that the Democracy of the District acknowledge the sovereignty of the State of Colorado. Over the stage was hung an immense banner, which bore the words: "Demand nothing that is not right; submit to nothing that is wrong." An old gentleman, who entered the hall just as the meeting was about to commence, created a good deal of merriment by reading this aloud, and then exclaiming in a deep, tragedy voice: "What do you think of a one-cent stamp on a box of matches?" This remark may be taken as an indication of the spirit in which "the grand mass-meeting" was conducted. The proceedings were opened by the election of Richard T. Merrick, of Washington, to the chair. He read a long and carefully-written speech, the chief point in which was an oft-repeated statement that, in case of a disagreement as to the will of the people regarding the Presidency, the House was the only body that had a legal and constitutional right to make a decision. At the close of his remarks, Mr. Merrick appointed a committee, to draw up a series of resolutions, and after due consultation they submitted a long preamble and resolutions which were prepared some days ago by Hon. Montgomery Blair and Hon. Jeremiah Black. The first regular speaker was Mr. Watterson, of Kentucky. He was greeted with shouts of applause, and made an address of the most glowing character. He did not want war, he said, but much less did he want usurpation, and if he could not get through the present crisis in peace, then he was going to get through some other way. Of course, this sentiment was applauded. Mr. Watterson said, that if the people needed another Jackson he would be forthcoming; but he did not state who he referred to. His concluding remarks may be regarded as a huge joke. He said that he had not spoken in a partisan spirit, and this, too, immediately after declaring that there would be one hundred thousand men in Washington on the 14th of next month to see that justice was done Mr. Tilden.

After the "favorite son of Kentucky," came a person who was introduced as Mr. Henry Pullitzer, but was recognized by some of the audience as Carl Schurz's false friend, Joe Pullitzer. He made a fiery speech of the order which was current among the German students of 1848. He appeared to think that the country would be ruined if Tilden was not inaugurated, and to prevent that terrible result he was, to use his own words, "ready to bare his breast to the bullets of the tyrants, and rush headlong upon his glittering steel." This was too much for even the "Tilden and Hendricks' Reform Club," and much to Mr. Pulitzer's mortification, they laughed.

Mr. Tarbox, of Massachusetts, followed the enthusiastic German gentleman with but little better result, and the whole proceedings were degenerating into the veriest farce, when Gen. Hooker, of Mississippi, was introduced, and by his moderate and dispassionate address, did much to restore decorum. He counselled peace and an obedience to the laws, and declared that if Hayes was found to be elected, honestly and fairly, he was willing to acknowledge him without debate or question.

The Chairman read letters of sympathy with the objects of the meeting from George B. McClellan, David D. Field, Francis Kernan, John Lee Carroll, and others, and shortly after an adjournment was had.

The Democratic Colored Mass Convention, called about two weeks ago with a great flourish, by some employes of the House, pretending to be a Democratic club, was not heard of. There were no responses, and probably none were ever expected, the call being a transparent fraud to make people believe there are really negro Democrats in the country.

BLOWING HOT AND COLD IN OHIO.

GEN. TOM EWING IN A HIGH STATE OF WAR-LIKE RAGE—A REBUKE BY GEN. DURBIN WARD—NEITHER "WINDY HARANGUES" NOR FORCE TO SETTLE THE DISPUTE—PENDLETON IN A BITTERLY PARTISAN VEIN — THE RESOLUTIONS — THE ASSEMBLING OF A CROWD OF DEMOCRATS IN WASHINGTON, FEB. 12, ADVISED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 8.—The so-called People's Indignation Convention, held here to-day, was as strictly a partisan Democratic gathering as that which nominated Tilden and Hendricks at St. Louis. True, men were cunningly put forward as its principal mouth-pieces who were on the Union side in the late war, but not a single Republican, or any one of recent Republican antecedents bore any part in it whatever, or gave it the least countenance. The attendance was good, notwithstanding the violent snow-storm which prevailed last night and throughout the morning, but not commensurate with the extraordinary efforts that were made to produce an impressive outpouring of the masses. It is a liberal estimate to say there were 2,000 Democrats here, exclusive of those who came from this Democratic city and county. With the management of the meeting and its utterances, the general crowd had nothing whatever to do, the entire programme having been prearranged and strictly adhered to. The speakers were called in their turn with stage exactness, and those who listened were merely permitted to applaud when the hint was given. There was a good deal of enthusiasm when anything defiant and warlike was spoken, the boldest utterances commanding the heartiest applause. Many of the delegates wore badges bearing the words, "Tilden and Hendricks have been elected and shall be inaugurated," and the proceedings were pitched in that key.

Gen. T. Ewing was the principal speaker, and made a short but intemperate and revolutionary appeal to Democratic prejudices and passions, fiercely denouncing the Louisiana Returning Board. He said they "sneaked into a corner and secretly threw out 11,000 Democratic votes, giving no reason, specifying no poll or parish rejected, but audaciously substituting their will for the will of the people of Louisiana." To the atrocities of Democratic bull-dozers he made no allusion, except to declare the horrible Pinkston story "a lie to darken counsel with passion." He then violently denounced the Administration at Washington, saying it was "arraying the Army and Navy to silence all opposition by the last argument of Kings." Referring to the counting of the Electoral vote he said: "In no single instance in the whole history of our Government was a return counted against the objection of either house." "The assumption," he said, "that the President of the Senate may count the votes and declare the result, without the assent of the House of Representatives, has not a shadow of support in the Constitution or in the precedents of former elections." Concluding, he said: "The time to prevent the usurpation is now; the way to prevent it is not by cries of 'peace,' 'submission,' 'business,' 'property,' but by a manly resolve to preserve, at all hazards, the established order and methods of free elections. The promoters of this scheme, be they the President incumbent or elect, be they Senators, Governors, or Generals, are conspirators against law, order, and liberty. Opposition to them is not only a right, but a duty. Resistance to usurpation is obedience to law."

Gen. Durbin Ward, who was the permanent Chairman of the convention, spoke in a less violent strain. He said the disputed Presidential succession was not to be decided by windy harangues, or by force. He argued that the two Houses of Congress should determine the matter, and not the President of the Senate. Now and then Ward uttered a phrase that had the flavor of fight, but in the main his speech was moderate and conciliatory compared with Ewing's. George H. Pendleton spoke briefly. His words were full of bitterness toward the Republicans, but contained no saltpetre. Speeches were also made by Gen. Warner, who left the Republicans on the financial issue two years ago, and by Gen. Morgan and a violent Copperhead named Heisley, both of whom supported Vallandigham in 1863.

The first of the resolutions adopted declares that the Government of the United States is founded on universal suffrage, and that its existance depends on good faith and obedience to the laws. The second declares the votes cast Nov. 7 alone determine the result of the election, and that they cannot lawfully be changed by any officer authorized to canvass them and determine the result. The third reads that while clear in the conviction that Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks have received not only a large majority of the popular vote, but a majority of the Electoral vote, and are, therefore, selected President and Vice President, we yet declare that any decision made by the Senate and House of Representatives will be cheerfully acquiesced in by the whole people, and that any attempt to inaugurate a President simply upon the proclamation of the President of the Senate will be an act of usurpation that will be resisted by the people to the last extremity, even should that extremity be an appeal to arms. The fourth declares the charge that the protesting Democracy desire to foment civil war is impudent and unfounded. The fifth denounces President Grant for military interference with State Legislatures, and for massing troops at Washington. The sixth pronounces the inauguration of a President rejected by the people, to be fatal to republican government, and the seventh requests the National Democratic Committee to call a National Democratic Convention at Washington Feb. 12.

The war utterances were almost exclusively confined to the speakers and resolutions, the delegates generally being very peaceable and conciliatory in their talk. Hundreds of them, and even some who wore the red ribbon badges, called at the executive office and paid their respects to Gov. Hayes. The managers of the convention were inspired with the belief that something aggressive must be said in order to arrest the conciliatory feeling of the Southern Democrats, and, if possible, counteract the charge of pusillanimity made by the southern against the northern wing of the party. For Ohio people who understand the make-up of the convention, nothing it could have said or done could have the least terror, as they have become used to hearing like expressions from the same source.

THE INDIANAPOLIS MEETING.

A CUT-AND-DRIED PROGRAMME CARRIED OUT—BAYLISS W. HANNA'S DEMAGOGISM—G. W. JULIAN BITTER, BUT INEFFECTIVE—A BOMB-SHELL FROM AN EARNEST DEMOCRAT, WHO EXPRESSES HIS MIND.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 8.—The Democratic indignation, war, or Tilden and Hendricks meeting, is a thing of the past. In every respect, it was one of the regular old-fashioned Democratic conventions; a howling unmanageable mob, and by no means a gratifiying representation of the party. The most partisan members among the old leaders and such new converts as Julian and Gooding were satisfied, however, and gave it the character of large, patriotic, and intelligent. The convention was originally called for 12 o'clock, but owing to the fact that the inaugural exercises of the day were held in the Academy also, by a change of arrangements, at the eleventh hour, an adjournment was had until 1 o'clock, at the conclusion of Col. Gray's speech. At 1 o'clock, a surging, crowding, unmanageable mass was at the doors of the Academy, and at 1:30 the lower part of the auditorium was filled, while the galleries were comparatively deserted. In a little while these too were filled, and during the afternoon the capacity of the building was fully tested. The proceedings up to the time of Mr. Julian's speech, after the convention was called to order, were marked by nothing so much as disorder, and had it not been for the cut and dried arrangements, the convention would probably not have been organized yet. That the whole affair was cut and dried, everything in connection with it goes to prove; but two things crept in which the managers did not know anything about. The first of these was a long tirade by Bayliss W. Hanna. It was a dry array of statements concerning the counting of the Electoral vote, which the convention was not in a mood to listen to quietly, and it was not long before they made their dissatisfaction apparent. But Bayless has talked too often to the Democracy of Indiana not to know what to say to please them, and the screed near its close contained an allusion to Senator Morton that pleased the audience greatly. It was an infamous and gross assault by the meanest innuendo, which the physical weakness induced by his trip to California after the State election, as Chairman of the Senate Committee to investigate the Chinese question, seemed to the speaker to give him his opportunity. It was so low and degrading that even Bayliss W. Hanna had not hitherto been considered capable of uttering it. But because it attacked their old foe and inveterate enemy, Senator Morton, the convention rolled it as a sweet morsel under the tongue, and forgave Bayliss for the long harangue he had inflicted upon them in introducing it. Another, and the principal irruption into the programme, was the motion of Calvin Taylor, of Sullivan County, (the county in which they shot draft officers, and killed sanitary messengers to the sick and wounded, in the effort to end Gov. Morton's life during the war,) to amend the report of the Committee on Resolutions, so as to make them more emphatic. He said the committee had not said anything in their report, and the convention had met not to talk in an undecided way. This was re-echoed by the convention in a decided manner, but it would not do, of course, to have such an expression go out, and Calvin was squelched. He was held up, so to speak, by D. D. Dykeman, the ferocious quartermaster from Cass, who put the motion of Taylor in another form before the Convention, viz.:

Resolved, That we will have a fair count or a free fight.

This was finally voted down, but not by an overwhelming majority, and the crisis had passed.

After the crowd had quieted down under the somnolent influence of Julian's inanimate delivery, the proceedings passed off in a tolerable and even quiet way. These were the salient features of the day's proceedings, because they possessed the only flavor of freshness belonging to the affair, and may be considered as the expression of the real sentiments of the body. As was expected Julian's speech was bitter and malevolent, but it created no enthusiasm, save at the close. The crowd was disappointed in not hearing more from Dan Voorhees, but that "cry-eating" statesman has taken caution from his previous experiences, and said nothing to commit himself or the party. The appointment of the Committee of Safety and Correspondence, which he provided for by resolution at the close of his speech, is but a part of the plan by which agitation of the question is to be kept up until after the 4th of March. The committee consists of M. D. Manson, Chairman of the State Central Committee; Gen. John Love, David Turpie, Bayliss W. Hanna, and Graham N. Fitch. This committee is to correspond with similar committees of other States, and arrange a plan for concert of action and also to learn the sentiments of the party upon the proposition to call a national convention of the Democratic Party.

The convention adopted a declaration of principles instead of resolutions. It begins by setting out the objects sought by the Democratic Party in the campaign of 1876, restoration of good government in the South, purer civil service, and economy in administration of the Government. Upon these points it claims that a large popular majority voted favorably, and that a majority was cast in Florida and Louisiana, and it protests against being counted out there under any pretext. It denounces the assumption of the power to reject votes on the ground of intimidation, as arbitrary, unrepublican, and revolutionary. While the Government should punish offenders who intimidate voters, no just power resides in a free Government to deprive a whole community of their votes, because some lawless men live in it, whose lawlessness it is the duty of the Government to repress. It denounces the assumption of power by the Louisiana Returning Board, as unjust and tyrannical; the board is wanting in no bad feature of an hereditary despotism. Under the Constitution of the United States it has no claim to recognition. It has changed the Government of the State, and intended to change the Federal Government, by arbitrarily rejecting thousands of votes legally cast by citizens of Louisiana. Certificates from such a board are a mockery and an outrage on the rights of the people. A government set upon such a technicality would command and deserve no respect. The proceedings of said board were fraudulent, and its decisions and findings void. Is it expected that 4,000,000 of voters will acquiesce in being deprived of the fruits of the contest just passed through by a political machine, unknown in the previous history of the country, whose organization is legally defective and invalid, and whose action is fraudulent, null, and void. Entertaining these views, we resolve that it is the imperative duty of Congress to provide by law a plan for counting the Electoral vote; that according to the plain meaning of the Constitution and according to all past political usage, the power of counting the vote resides in the two houses of Congress; that if Congress shall provide by law a just plan for counting the Electoral vote—one which will be fair, not only in the present emergency, but for all future elections as well—we pledge our acquiescence in the result, whatever it may be; that if the Senate shall claim that its presiding officer, like the Returning Boards of Florida and Louisiana, has absolute power to designate the President and Vice President, we shall upon the House of Representatives to exert all its constitutional powers to defeat the usurpations, and we pledge it our support, with all the resources which a people whose fundamental liberties are threatened can constitutionally command.

VIRGINIA DEMOCRATS REBUKED.

TILDEN'S MEETING AT RICHMOND A DISORDERLY GATHERING—SPEECH OF THE EX-QUARTERMASTER — HE WOULD RATHER DIE THAN LIVE THE SLAVE OF A DESPOT—"GENTLEMEN" INDIGNANTLY REBUKED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RICHMOND, Jan. 8.—This evening, in pursuance of orders from W. T. Pelton, of New-York, the Democracy of Richmond met in the State Capitol to express their views in regard to the existing political situation. The proceedings were of a tumultuous and inharmonious character. Judge Meredith moved a committee of nine to report out and dried resolutions, which he had in his pocket. This was strongly opposed by many, among them Capt. Chamberlayn, editor of the State, of this city, whose remarks were greeted with hisses and cries of "Put him out." The meeting met at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and it was not until 6:45 P. M. when Judge Meredith's motion for a committee was declared carried by the Chairman. The vote, however, was so uncertain, to say the least, that the decision of the Chair raised a general laugh. During the debate Col. W. F. Gregory, of Petersburg, supporting the motion for a committee, said that "though the Republicans threaten war if Hayes be not allowed to assume the Presidency, they are playing merely a game of bluff, at which both sides could play. But if war must come so be it, rather than submit to the vilest frauds and usurpations. This Republic is ours, and I would rather die than live the slave of a drunken despot." At the last words a well-known Conservative member of the General Assembly cried out, "Quartermasters to the front," an exclamation which had a double point from the fact that Col. Gregory is an ex-Confederate Quartermaster. During the disorder that characterized the meeting, Col. Meade, Chairman of the State Conservative Executive Committee, indignantly rebuked the disorganizers, calling upon them to remember that they were Virginia gentlemen.

THE ILLINOIS "CONVENTION."

THE MEETING NUMERICALLY A FAILURE—THE TONE OF THE SPEAKERS PEACEFUL AND OF THE RESOLUTIONS BELLIGERENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 8.—The Democratic Convention held here to-day was rather a failure in point of numbers. Gen. John Farnsworth, ex-Gov. Palmer, and Lyman Trumbull spoke in favor of peace, while the logical result of the resolutions duly advocated, and which were adopted, would be a resort to force.

THE PACIFIC SLOPE DEMOCRATS.

NO MEETING IN SAN FRANCISCO—THE OREGON MEETING—RATHER TEMPERATE RESOLUTIONS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 8.—In accordance with the views of the County Committee and leaders of the party, the Democrats of this city held no mass meeting to-night.

A Salem (Oregon) dispatch reports that a large and enthusiastic meeting was held there. Resolutions were adopted to the effect that Tilden and Hendricks received a majority of the popular vote, and rightly a majority of the Electoral vote; and while willing for the sake of peace to acquiesce in wrong perpetrated through recognized forms of law, servile submission to a false declaration of the result of a Presidential contest, attained through usurped authority, is no less dangerous to the welfare of the country than the consequences of armed resistance and civil war. While deprecating appeals to passion and favoring moderation, they equally favor firmness in action and resistance to every species of usurpation or fraud. They solemnly protest against the inauguration of Hayes and Wheeler, and denounce the threatened attempt to prevent the House of Representatives from participation in the counting of the electoral vote as a threat of revolution and a menace against civil liberty. They appeal to all citizens of the Republic to resist this revolutionary attempt upon the Government by all means known to law-abiding, liberty-loving people, and, lastly, indorse the action of Gov. Grover in the Watts-Cronin matter.

A Santa Rosa dispatch reports that the Democracy of Sonoma County met and passed resolutions of the same general tenor as the above.

WHAT VERMONT DEMOCRATS SAY.

MONTPELIER, Jan. 8.—A large number of prominent Democrats, representing nearly every county in the State, met with the State Committeee to-night and adopted resolutions touching the Presidential controversy, sustained the action of Congress in sending investigating committees to Florida, Louisiana, and South Carolina, and insisting on the right of Congress to determine the Electoral vote.

THE BENNETT-MAY DUEL.

MR. MAY SERIOUSLY WOUNDED.

THE DUEL FOUGHT IN DELAWARE—MR. BENNETT UNHURT—ARRIVAL OF HIS PARTY IN PHILADELPHIA—CONTRADICTORY DISPATCHES REGARDING THE COMBAT—RETICENCE OF MEMBERS OF THE MAY FAMILY—EXCITEMENT IN THE CLUBS, ON WALL STREET, AND IN OTHER CITIES.

The May-Bennett affair has ended in a duel, the particulars of which are as yet unknown in this City, save to a very few friends of the principals, and up to a late hour last night these gentleman refused to state them. It was learned from several friends of Mr. Bennett, however, that Mr. May had been seriously wounded, but that Mr. Bennett had escaped unscathed. The first dispatch of an authentic character relating to the matter reached this City about 7 o'clock last evening, and was addressed to Mr. August Belmont. It stated the facts as above given, together with some additional details, the nature of which, however, Mr. Belmont refused to make public. Another friend of Mr. Bennett was also the recipient of a dispatch of the same purport. Neither Mr. Belmont nor the gentleman last alluded to would state whence the message came, and, as many rumors to the effect that a meeting had been had in Canada were circulated during the afternoon, the universal opinion was that the Dominion had really been the scene of the sanguinary conflict. Later in the evening, however, Gen. Hancock was met, coming out of the Union Club, and he stated to a friend that a dispatch had just reached the club from a point in Delaware, to the effect that Messrs. Bennett and May had met at Slaughter's Station, near Havre de Grace, and that Mr. Bennett was not hurt. The dispatch was ominously silent in regard to Mr. May. Rumors then began to circulate, and in the course of half an hour Mr. May was reported to be dangerously wounded, then unhurt, and again it was asserted that the combatants had fired blank cartridges at each other. Indeed, this last report was very generally credited about the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and of course gave a farcical aspect to the whole affair. Later in the evening, however, inquiry at Delmonico's elicited the information that Mr. Lawrence Jerome had received a dispatch from a member of the dueling party stating that Mr. May had been very seriously wounded, but that Mr. Bennett was unhurt. Inquiry at Mr. May's residence revealed nothing whatever in relation to the affair. Dr. May said he had not heard from his son since he left home, and was still ignorant of his whereabouts. The extreme reticence of the members of the May family in this City regarding the affair gives rise to the most painful apprehensions regarding the fate of young May.

A gentleman who is a relative of the May family, and a member of the Union Club, was met last night by a TIMES reporter and interrogated as to the truth of the report that Messrs. Bennett and May had fought a duel. He said he knew nothing of a definite character. He heard however, various rumors in the Union Club-house and on the street, in none of which he put any confidence. He felt certain that if Messrs. Bennett and May had fought, and either had been wounded, even though not dangerously, he would have been apprised of the occurrence. There had been two dispatches received at the club-house, announcing that a duel had taken place. One of these stated "Mr. Bennett is all right." The other ran, "May is well." He did not knew whether or not the different wording of the two dispatches had any significance, nor was he willing to state the place whence the dispatches were sent.

A dispatch was received last night by Mrs. Eldridge, the aunt of Frederick W. May, in which the statement was made that Mr. May was well. The comment was made upon this report that it seemed to indicate that Mr. May had been wounded, but was in a comfortable condition, and was not likely to suffer great inconvenience from his hurt. Indeed, all the dispatches reported during the night elicited this remark.

The subject of the hostile meeting was the general topic of conversation last evening in all the principal clubs in the City. The reports which had been received up to a late hour were so contradictory that it was impossible to reach any definite conclusion as to the result of the encounter. The only thing about which there appeared to be any certainty was the fact that the duel had been fought, but when or where, or which of the combatants had proved victorious, was involved in doubt. A member of the Union League Club informed a TIMES reporter between 9 and 10 o'clock, that he had just seen Mr. Belmont, of the Union Club, and that he informed him that he had received a dispatch from one of the principal persons in the transaction, containing information that the encounter had taken place, and that Mr. Bennett came off uninjured. This statement implied that Mr. May had been wounded, though the dispatch made no reference to the matter. A similar telegram was received by Judge Bedford, and another dispatch was to the effect that Mr. Bennett had been dangerously wounded. Under these circumstances opinion was pretty evenly divided as to the result, those who were partisans of Mr. May claiming that his antagonist had been shot, while Mr. Bennett's friends maintained that he had escaped unhurt. At the New-York Club no special interest seemed to be evinced in regard to either party. The current rumors in circulation were anxiously discussed, without reference to the merits of the case. The members of the Union Club were evidently deeply interested in the result of the fight, but declined to enter into conversation with the representatives of the press. At the Manhattan Club no information had been received by any of the members respecting the affair excepting the rumors which gained circulation generally through the City. At the Racquet Club, of which Mr. May and Mr. Bennett are members, no special information had been received from the scene of the encounter.

Wall street yesterday was all excitement over the affair. The operators did little else throughout business hours than comment upon it. Some of them, with fruitful imaginations, conceived remarkable jokes relating to the topic, and a few of these were so deceptive, that even the reporters for the afternoon newspapers were deceived into publishing accounts of a duel in which Mr. Bennett had been wounded. Much sympathy was expressed for Mr. Bennett. On the Gold Exchange it was stated that Bennett was dead, and the manner of his decease was speculated upon for a long time. A pertinent question to the originator of the report, however, revealed the fact that he meant the paternal progenitor of the present proprietor of the Herald was no more. At this deception everybody expressed disgust. When the evening newspapers, announcing that the duel had been tought in Canada, appeared on the street they were bought up eagerly. Interest in the matter never lagged, and when the operators left Wall street they repaired to the up-town hotels and clubs to discuss the imbroglio, while impatiently waiting for news of its settlement.

District Attorney Phelps stated last evening that upon the meagre information concerning the matter thus far received, it would be impossible to state what steps would be taken by the authorities. Even if any were now under consideration, it would not be politic to disclose them. When authentic information was received, then it would be time to consider a proper enforcement of the laws on the subject. The State law was very strict, he said, and covered not only dueling, but the sending of a challenge, and makes it an offense to leave the State for the purpose of fighting a duel. By these provisions all parties to the affair became amenable to the laws.

Slaughter's, or Slaughter's Station, supposed to have been the scene of the conflict, is an insignificant station on the Maryland and Delaware Railroad. It is in Kent County, Del., and has a population of 40 souls. The country is wild and poorly cultivated, and this reason, together with the fact that the place is sparsely settled, but is easily accessible by rail, doubtless led to its choice. Then, too, the laws of Delaware are said to be particularly mild in regard to dueling.

MR. BENNETT AND PARTY IN PHILADELPHIA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 8.—A mysterious party of three persons arrived in this city on the midnight train from the south, and immediately proceeded to the Continental Hotel, where they were registered as J. G. Bennett, H. A. Robbins and C. Phelps, New-York. The first-named is James Gordon Bennett, of the Herald. He immediately retired to his room, while the other gentlemen, who looked as if they had been traveling hard, gave orders for baths. Bennett did not register the names, and they are all in the handwriting of Phelps. Bennett seemed haggard and care-worn, and the rest of the party were very morose. They had no baggage with them except sachels.

2:30 A. M.—Mr. Bennett retired to his room shortly after midnight, and positively declined to discuss the subject of his difficulty with Mr. May. Gen. Barlow, of New-York, says the fact is certain that they fought at 2 P. M. today at Slaughter's Station, Del., near the Maryland boundary, and that Mr. May is seriously wounded.

THE REPORTS OF A DUEL CONFIRMED—A RECONCILIATION EFFECTED AFTER AN EXCHANGE OF SHOTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 8.—A telegram just received here states that James Gordon Bennett and Frederick May fought a duel to-day at Slaughter's Station, on the Delaware Railroad. After an exchange of shots a reconciliation was effected, when all the parties returned to Philadelphia. Frederick May, of this city, acted as second for his cousin, and Howland Robbins for Bennett.

THE WAY THE VERMONT OFFICIALS PROPOSE TO RECEIVE THE DUELLISTS.

A dispatch from St. Albans, Vt., says that on Sunday evening Sheriff Drew, of Burlington, arrived in the first-named city with warrants for the arrest of James Gordon Bennett and Frederick May if found within his precinct. Drew was accompanied by A. N. Merchant, of Burlington, supposed to be a newspaper reporter. They returned to Burlington yesterday morning. Diligent inquiry in St. Albans and of passengers and train men failed to elicit any information of the whereabouts of the missing editor.

GOSSIP ANENT DUELING.

INCIDENTS AND TALES OF THE ORDEAL BY BATTLE—DUELING IN FRANCE—THE PRECISION OF DUBLIN ATTORNEYS—THE PRACTICE AMONG GERMAN STUDENTS—SOME HINTS OF AMERICAN DUELS.

If proof of human folly were wanting among the descendants of Adam it might be found in the history of the duel, or the record of combats between two men for the purpose of settling some disputed point of honor, of avenging some real or fancied slight, or of giving vent to a hidden and smouldering grudge. The duel, speaking generally, is merely a combat between two persons. In this sense the first duel was the one in which Cain killed his brother Abel, and the catalogue of duelling would not be complete without the record of Mr. John Morrissey's pugilistic encounter with Yankee Sullivan at Boston Corners, some 20 years or more ago, which was followed in after years by the election of the victor to Congress. Using, however, the term duel in its stricter sense, the first one recorded perhaps was that between David and Goliah. Many such combats are also set forth in the glowing words of Homer. The practice of duelling prevailed among the Arabs and among the Asiatic nations from quite an early date, and savage tribes in all climes have ever been partial to its existence and continuance. The Goths and Vandals, who overran the Roman Empire, brought the duel with them, or rather would have done so had it not existed previously among the successors of Romulus and Remus. If they did not introduce it they at all events changed its character greatly by drafting on the idea of the combat, the notion that it was a solemn appeal by ordeal of battle to the Almighty. During the dark period of the world's history known as the Middle Ages, duels were very abundant, and were approved as a judicial ordeal by jurists and churchmen. During this period, too, the duel was among the cheerful expedients by which were ascertained the titles to real and personal property. Other means employed were the ordeal by fire and the treading on red-hot plow-shears. In the ordeal by battle each party was permitted to represent the other by a champion. The jousts and tournaments of the times were, in great measure, merely duels between opposing champions. Various attempts were made at times to break up the practice of dueling, and Louis IX. and Philip the Fair both framed laws against it. In the Fourteenth century, Louis X. restored the ordeal by battle in civil cases, but this was soon abolished. In 1386, Jacques Legris denied a crime, and, though innocent of it, was condemned to fight, and being overcome was hanged. The perpetrator of the crime afterward confessed his guilt, and the incident created so profound an impression that the duel as an ordeal was altogether abolished. In the time of Francis I., during the sixteenth century, dueling was revived as a means for the redress of insults among haughty courtiers and others. Dueling in France, however, reached its height under Louis XIII. Its frequency diminished under Louis XIV., but increased again under the Regency. The practice declined during the revolutionary period, but was afterward again revived. There have even been duels between females in France. In Spain the duel has flourished from time to time. In Great Britain, and especially in Ireland, the duel has also flourished. In the latter country, indeed, the practice of dueling was particularly favored until quite recently. On such occasions the populace turned out en masse to enjoy the spectacles. Attorneys in Ireland were in those days about as much inclined to the practice as it is alleged were two members of the profession in this City recently, though no instance is recorded where a difficulty arose about the spelling of a word. If an Irish attorney in those times filed a declaration and the opposing attorney filed a demurrer, the former immediately challenged the latter. The reason of this was, that a demurrer charges that the declaration is insufficient in law, and consequently that the attorney who drew it did not know what the law was. This being an imputation upon the legal ability of the first attorney, was an insult which could only be wiped out by a hostile meeting on the famous "ten-acre lot" in the Phœnix Park at Dublin, which was the approved dueling-ground. It may be recalled that an attorney who was thus challenged, and had, therefore, the choice of weapons and ground, named the "ten acre lot," adding with true attorney's precaution, "be the same more or less." As to dueling in England at the present time, a paraphrase may be made of the famous "Chapter on snakes in Ireland," which said, "There are no Snakes in Ireland," by mentioning "there is no dueling in England." In France the duel still exists, but does not seem to flourish vigorously. The usual combatants are newspaper editors. They fight generally with swords, though pistols are sometimes resorted to. The former are much the safer weapons, since drawing blood satisfies wounded honor, and a combatant may come off with only a scratch, while a bullet is apt to do serious mischief. In Germany, among the students, the duel is as time-honored an institution as is lager beer. The students are divided into chores or cliques, which have each their favorite swordsmen and challenges are constantly passing between the various rival bodies. The duellist is wrapped from head to foot in bandages which are impervious to any ordinary sword cut, but the face is sometimes left unguarded. In such a case a gash across the face of an adversary is a triumph for the inflictor, and the scar is ever afterward exhibited by the sufferer as a certificate of bravery. Bismarck carries a scar upon his face which is said to have been inflicted in this way. Under the ancient Norwegian system, the combatants were bound together by a belt which encircled the two. Each held in his right hand a short knife—something like the sheath-knife used by sailors at the present day—and they wrestled and stabbed each other until one was put hors du combat. In Iceland it is said that the combatants write their friends to meet them at a specified time and place, within some large township. The company being assembled, each of the contestants in turn recites in verse the evil attributes of his competitor, and those present decide which has abused the other most successfully, and he is declared the victor, while his opponent retires overwhelmed with disgrace. In Spain and Italy the practice at present are not much given to dueling, though dead men, with knife wounds upon their bodies, are occasionally discovered. In this country dueling has not been especially favored, though there have been quite a number of noted encounters, beginning with that between two serving men at Plymouth in 1624. The first years of the Republic's history were marred as well as marked by several duels, the most prominent having been that between Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr, in which the former was killed. Andrew Jackson and Thomas H. Benton each killed his man. Great excitement was created by the duel in 1838 between Congressmen Cilley and Graves, in which the former was killed. Another duel which aroused intense public feeling was the one between James Watson Webb and Thomas F. Marshall, in June, 1842. This was fought on Namaan's Creek, in Delaware, and resulted in Mr. Webb being shot in the leg.

ARRIVAL OF THE RUSSIAN FLEET.

CHARLESTON, Jan. 8.—The Russian Minister, N. Shisken, accompanied by Rear Admiral Crown, of the Russian Navy, arrived here by rail from Washington this morning, and took quarters at the Charleston Hotel. About 8 o'clock A. M. the Russian corvette Begatyie hove in sight off the bar and was boarded by a pilot-boat, which brought her commander, Capt. Schafroff, and six officers to the city, where they had an interview with the Russian Minister. The corvette has 12 guns, 350 men, and 20 officers. Three other vessels of the Russian fleet are expected to-morrow, namely, the frigate Svetlana, eight guns; the corvette Askead, eight guns, and the dispatch boat Cruiser, three guns. The Svetlana is commanded by the Grand Duke Alexis in person, whom the Russian Minister expects to meet here to-morrow. The Bogatyie is 42 days from Carthagena, Spain, having made most of the passage under canvas. She now lies anchored about a mile outside the bar.

The fleet stops here for coal and provisions, after obtaining which it goes to Port Royal, in which harbor it will remain until the Winter weather is sufficiently moderate to enable it to go to New-York.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

THE WORK OF DRAGGING THE RIVER DISCONTINUED—RECOVERY OF VALUABLES—BURIAL OF THE UNRECOGNIZED VICTIMS—A MONUMENT TO BE ERECTED BY THE RAILROAD COMPANY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 8.—The work of dragging the river has been discontinued for the present, owing to the danger from falling timbers or tools from the new structure above. Mr. J. E. Earle, general manager of the Anchor Line of steamers, leaves for his home in Chicago to-night, as does Mr. Thorne C. Wright, a leading merchant of Nashville, Tenn. A bunch of keys were to-day recognized by Mr. McDavy, of Boston as having belonged to his friend, William F. Wilson, of the same city, who perished on the fatal train. In response to the proclamation of Mayor Hepburn, and the vigilance of the police officials, various articles stolen from the scene of the wreck have been recovered.

A meeting of the citizens of Ashtabula was held to-day for the purpose of taking proper action in regard to the burial of the unrecognized victims, and appropriate committees were appointed to take the matter in charge. Mr. A. A. Strong, station agent here, has been instructed by the railroad company to take steps toward the purchase of a lot for the burial of the unrecognized dead and the contract for a suitable monument to be erected in memory of the sad event.

THE STEAM-SHIP COLOMBO REPORTED LOST.

A report was extensively circulated at the Maritime Exchange and among shipping men yesterday that the steam-ship Colombo, of the Wilson Line, from Hull, had foundered at sea, and that all on board were lost. The report lacked confirmation, and is probably based on the fact that the steamer in question is nearly five weeks out, and is at least a fortnight overdue. The consignees, Messrs. C. L. Wright & Co., profess to feel no anxiety as to the safety of the steamer, although they admit that it is long behind its usual time of arrival. The Colombo has about 50 persons all told on board, and was last seen off the Lizard, a point near Land's End, 32 days ago. She is a stanch iron steam-ship, of 2,500 tons burden, and is commanded by Capt. William Lovet, a trustworthy officer of long experience. She was built on the Clyde in 1872, and is owned by Thomas Wilson's Sons & Co., of Hull, England. The Anglia, of the Anchor Line, which left London at the same date, is also overdue. Mr. Wright's opinion is that the Colombo has, in all probability, met with some accident to her engines or machinery, and is making her way to this port under sail. There were only one or two passengers on board. The cargo, which is a miscellaneous one, is insured on the other side.

A FALL RIVER STEAMER ON THE BEACH.

NEW-HAVEN, Jan. 8.—This evening the steamer Traveller and revenue cutter Grant made an unsuccessful attempt to pull the steamer Newport, of the Fall River Line, off the beach in the harbor. There is no likelihood that the Newport will get off before next perigee-tide, or until easterly winds bring a full tide. She lies very easy.

A MAIL TRAIN THROWN FROM THE TRACK.

RUTLAND, Jan. 8.—A mail train from Boston on the Rutland Railroad was thrown from the track near East Wallingford this afternoon by a broken rail. The engine and baggage-car remained on the track, but the passenger and mail cars went over an embankment 20 feet in height, the former turning bottom side up. There were 30 passengers

L'AMERIQUE DISASTER.

THE STEAMER STILL STRANDED.

THE CARGO UNINJURED, BUT FEARS ENTERTAINED FOR THE SAFETY OF THE VESSEL—THE ACCIDENT DUE TO MISCALCULATION AND OVER-CONFIDENCE—THE SPECIE AND MAILS SAFELY REMOVED, AND PASSENGERS BROUGHT TO THIS CITY.

The steam-ship L'Amerique, which went ashore at Seabright, about three miles north of Long Branch, on Sunday morning, was still high up on the beach last night, her head opposite the cottages of Mr. A. Q. Keasby and Mr. Amzi Dodd, a short distance south of Seabright Station. The huge hull rose prominently above the low bluff along the shore, the tall masts and red-striped smoke-stacks being visible for miles around. The news of the accident had spread far and wide, and the avenue along the shore was all day lined with carriages of all kinds, stages, and open wagons which came from places miles away, carrying loads of country people who had made the journey to see the ship that had leaped like a sportive fish, high and dry on the beach. Crowds of men and women watched the vessel from the bluffs and the piazzas of the deserted cottages, while about the spot where the life-line connected the ship with the shore, there was constantly a throng who curiously eyed the slow work of transporting passengers across the surf to the deck of the stranded ship. The bow of the steam-ship points toward the north, and she lies parallel with the beach, so close to the low water mark that when the tide is out it would be possible for a man to wade out to her side without danger. At an early hour yesterday morning the tug Lackawanna, of the Coast Wrecking Company, arrived off the beach, and Capt. Merritt went on board L'Amérique. Their anchors were got out to prevent the tendency of the surf to drive the steamer higher up on the beach. The cargo will not be touched until this morning, and no effort will be made to move the steamer until the cargo has been taken out. As the waves rolled in, even with the moderate surf prevailing yesterday, the broke occasionally with such force as to threw a cloud of spray over her side, and shook the immense hull from stem to stern. No water has yet entered the vessel, and the cargo is entirely uninjured. With a high tide and a south-easterly wind the Captain says he hopes to get the steamship off, but all seamen and men in the service of the Life-Saving Board shake their heads ominously, and do not see how it is to be done. Should a northeasterly wind arise, the very worst might be expected, and the cargo would be ruined.

The Captain and pilot make statements which agree in many particulars, and lead to the conclusion that the accident was the result of miscalculation and over-confidence. Their statements agree in most particulars, and each makes the remarkable admission that the shore was seen at least five minutes before the ship struck, and that, although the weather was "thick" at the time, there was no fog. The pilot is not held responsible by the Captain, who is disposed to magnanimously accept the blame as his own; but the pilot, although a man of 10 years' experience, who has repeatedly taken charge of ocean steamers before, makes the statement that he did not examine the compass of L'Amérique critically, and that he accepted implicitly and without objection the calculations of Capt. Pouzolz. A difference existed between the actual position of the steam-ship and that calculated by the Captain of 15 miles, or about a point and a half of the compass. From all accounts given there was no lack of discipline on board the vessel, but it was said in the Transatlantic Company's office, yesterday, that it was difficult to give a full list of officers, as it has been customary with the line frequently to change the subordinate officers of their ships. The loss of life on Sunday seems to have been unavoidable, and occurred when the Captain was endeavoring safely to land his passengers. The testimony of all on board is flattering to Capt. Pouzolz, who bears the reputation of a gallant officer, and who has served with credit as a Captain in the French Navy. All the crew remain on board the vessel, and the fires are banked and steam constantly kept up. The vessel is still in excellent condition, standing nearly upright, and under almost any circumstances will remain intact several days. The vessel is said to draw 18 feet when she is light. She is now loaded, and there are but 15 feet of water on the starboard side—that toward the ocean.

Specie to the amount of $100,000 was yesterday removed, and, with the passengers, was brought to this City, and the mails and baggage were also safely transferred. Although it is possible, should tide and wind favor, that the vessel may get off, it is feared that she will never be dislodged from the spot where she stands, and that she will be a complete loss.

STATEMENT OF CAPT. POUZOLZ.

The Captain makes the following statement:

On Saturday at noon, the vessel then being in latitude 40° 29′ by his calculation, the pilot-boat No. 21 came alongside, and Mr. Wever, the pilot, who was to bring L'Amérique in, came on board. The weather was fine, a clear sky, a bright sun, and a light wind blowing. Soundings were taken, and the pilot, after a consultation with the Captain—is the course of which it was found that the true latitude was exactly that which Capt. Pouzolz had calculated—spent a part of the afternoon with him on the bridge. According to the Captain's calculation, by steering due west, over the course he was then sailing, he should have seen the light-ship soon after midnight. A light was seen to the southward, and the course of the vessel was changed slightly to the south, as the Captain thought he had headed too far north. The pilot then went below to take a nap, as the Captain had not, he said, resigned control of the vessel to him. He had merely consulted with him. At 11:30 P. M. the pilot was called. Capt. Pouzolz said to Wever, at 2 o'clock, after the vessel had been running at half speed, "I shall sound, and expect now to find 17 fathoms, and the light-ship is just ahead." Soundings showed 17 fathoms, pebbly bottom, and both pilot and Captain agreed that all was right. Directly after soundings were again taken, and 15 fathoms were found, corresponding exactly with the depth marked on the chart as the spot where the Captain calculated the vessel was. "I said to the pilot," said the Captain, "presently I shall sound again, and expect to find 13 fathoms." The soundings were taken, after running 15 miles under half speed, and the depth was 13 fathoms, as expected, with pebbly bottom. Both the Captain and pilot were satisfied. Suddenly the shore was seen—the houses and the beach. The engines were immediately reversed, and put at full speed in the opposite direction to that they had been running. "Not seven minutes elapsed," said Capt. Pouzolz, "before she ran on shore." She touched the beach at 3:30 in the morning. There had been all the evening a strong current setting astern, and the wind had carried the vessel forward with great momentum. She ran bow on shore, and the attempts to back her out were resisted by both those influences. The water broke over her up to her main-top, and the wind soon carried her stern around until the vessel was parallel with the beach. The passengers were excited. Capt. Pouzolz called upon Mr. and Mrs. Jewett to set an example of calmness to the other passengers. They complied with his request, and Mrs. Jewett, he said, behaved like such a woman as to inspire confidence in all the rest of the company in the cabins. The story of their trip ashore was referred to, and the life-saving crew complimented. The Captain said that they did all that could have been expected of them. As soon as the ship touched, in order to ascertain what sort of a landing could be made, a boat with 11 men and an officer was lowered. The sea was very high, and she capsized immediately, three of the men being drowned, and the other nine being washed ashore. At daylight the men of the life-saving station threw a shot over the boats and the passengers were landed. Capt. Pouzolz said that he hoped the vessel would be got off. The unloading will begin to-day, but it would be some days before her cargo could all be removed; and then, if the weather did not become very stormy, with the aid of the wrecking company the steam-ship would again be floated. The Captain said that it was customary with the officers of the line to retain command of their ships until the light-ship was sighted, and he assumed the responsibility of continuing on the course adopted, which had been approved by the pilot, but which in the light of later events was shown to be wrong by a difference of 15 miles.

STATEMENT OF PILOT WEVER.

Pilot Henry L. Wever made a statement yesterday morning to a reporter of THE TIMES, which was substantially as follows: He had been a pilot for 10 years. On Saturday at noon, when he had been at sea cruising off Nantucket since the 24th inst., he got on board L'Amérique, in latitude 40° 30′. He thought the pilot-boat was about 110 miles east of the light-ship, but found that his calculation in that respect was incorrect, as the Captain showed him by soundings that the distance was 180 miles. The weather was good, a light breeze blowing, and the vessel kept on the Captain's course all day. From noon until 2:30 o'clock he was on deck; then the Captain told him that there would be nothing for him to do until they sighted the light-ship, and he went below and slept until 11:30 at night. He was then called, and, going on deck, found the weather thick and rainy. The ship was still sailing the same course she was on during the day—due west according to the Captain's calculation—and the pilot thought it was right. He did not look at the compass at the time, but the Captain was heading her due west by his compass. At about 2 o'clock he took a cup of coffee with the Captain, and then soundings were taken, 17 fathoms of water being reported. The Captain said: "I shall sound again directly and find 15 fathoms," and he did sound and found that depth of water, and then altered the course of the steam-ship slightly to the northward. He then sounded again, finding, as he expected, 13 fathoms. The pilot thought they were then off the Cholera Grounds, as the bottom corresponded with that indicated on the chart. As he then believed they were but 15 miles from the light-ship, he thought he would stay on the bridge, although he had not received control of the vessel. The Captain said he had seen the light of a Scotch ship three miles south of his course, and so he changed his course about half a point. The pilot said, "I guess we are all right," and the vessel kept on at easy half-speed, as she had been running since 17 fathoms were reported. It was rainy and thick, not foggy. "What we call thick," said Wever. The Captain, chief officer, and the pilot were on the bridge together. The Captain was looking out over the ship's side, when he turned to the pilot and pointing toward shore said, "What is that there?" Wever said: "I looked in that direction and saw the houses along the beach. I exclaimed, my God, Captain, that's the beach! Stop her right away." Then the engine was run at full speed back, and he felt kind of flurried and anxious, fearing that the head way, current, and wind could not be resisted. It was not five minutes after they saw the beach before the ship struck, and she slid up on the shore. When she began to back the sea broke over her astern; but she would not shove off, slewing around instead, until she got into the sands, when he turned to the Captain and said, "It's no use, Captain, we are fast ashore." One hour after the vessel went on shore the wind shifted to the northward and eastward, helping to fasten her in her bed of sand. Wever said he had brought in the Labrador and France, of the same line, and had piloted the steam-ships of every line in New-York. He felt that he would be held responsible, although the Captain had not handed the ship over to him, and he seemed to be greatly troubled about the affair, and oppressed with a sense of impending censure.

STATEMENTS OF THE PASSENGERS.

Mr. Cornell Jewett, of Washington, who with his wife was among the first-class passengers of L'Amérique, yesterday stated to a reporter of THE TIMES that he had joined the vessel at Plymouth, England, early on the morning of Dec. 24. They sailed about 4 o'clock on that morning, and from that time until Saturday last had very tempestuous weather. Heavy gales were encountered, and the vessel was kept running at about half her usual rate of speed, which made the voyage a disagreeable and tedious one. Everyone seemed to have entire confidence in Capt. Pouzolz and the seaworthiness of the steam-ship. Saturday last the weather was very clear and the sea as calm as it usually is on a Summer day, and when about 190 miles outside of Sandy Hook they took a pilot on board from pilot-boat No. 21. At this time there was every indication of the vessel reaching this port on Saturday night or early on Sunday morning. The fine weather continued until midnight, when a gradual change was perceptible. Soon the wind was blowing almost a gale, and a thick haze was settling. This again necessarily made the progress of the vessel very slow, and nearly all of the passengers retired to bed. They could have been asleep only a short time when they were awakened by the shock caused by the vessel striking the beach. This was at 3 o'clock, and the fierce raging of the elements at that time seemed to indicate the immediate destruction of the ship, and she thumped up and down the beach for some length of time, the waves breaking over her and the spray reaching to her very topmast. The Captain ordered a yawl-boat to the shore, which could be dimly seen through the fog, the private residences of Seabright appearing like forest trees. One of the boats was lowered and 12 men started for the shore, but their craft was speedily capsized and three of them were drowned, the other nine reaching the shore almost lifeless. Mr. Jewett was then spoken to by the Captain, if he would hold himself in readiness to leave the vessel first with his wife in any manner possible as an example to the other passengers, and he promised to do so. The tide was gradually receding, and the sea was breaking over the ship in such a way that fears became general that she would capsize. These fears, however, were soon allayed by the vessel sinking rapidly into the sand. About 6 o'clock signals were made from the shore by men connected with the life-saving station, and with the aid of a mortar, a line was thrown across the vessel upon which the life-can was rigged. The apparatus was entirely new to most of the passengers and excited much astonishment among them. In it, however, all were transferred to the shore in safety. Mr. Jewett states that the sensation while enclosed in the life-can was like that of being buried alive. He adds that the kindness and bravery of the officers during the entire voyage were very commendable. Mr. A. Gros and other passengers corroborated the statement made by Mr. Jewett.

LIST OF THE PASSENGERS.

The passengers of the wrecked steamer L'Amérique were brought to this City by the New-Jersey Southern Railroad Company yesterday. The train was met at the Sandy Hook landing by the steam-boat Jesse Hoyt. The passengers of L'Amérique, 56 in number, were taken on board, together with their baggage, immediately afterward. Mr. Charles Chamberlain, Wrecking Master of the Coast Wrecking Company, superintended their transfer, and the boat left for this City 15 minutes later, and landed her passengers at pier No. 8 at 3 o'clock.

The names of the first and second cabin passengers are as follows:

Mrs. Cereul de Parody, Sister Marguerite de la
Mr. and Mrs. Cornell Jewett,
Mr. Dronin,
Mr. and Mrs. Guillemot and child,
Mrs. Ineas Hucket,
Miss L. Ross,
Mr. Grumbach,
Sister Anne du Sacré Coeur,
Sister St. Delphine,
Maternité,
Sister Léopoldine Maria,
Sister Denis Martin,
Sister Marie Justina,
Sister Josephine Albert,
Sister Leocadia,
Mr. Schmidt,
Mr. Zedutat,
Mr. Gros,
Mr. and Mrs. Blonden

The following is a list of the steerage passengers:

John Yoder,
John Sulberger,
Francis Rapp,
Simon Jacob,
George Hugel,
Caroline Jogel,
Jean Vegere,
Jean Onesseme,
Emma Vaver,
Jacob Fallen,

Frosine Barnet,
Carl Ostrean,
Paul Beron,
Henry Chepler,
Louis Bernard.

THE CARGO.

The cargo of L'Amerique was a miscellaneous one, consisting of silks, clothes, wines, hides, skins, gloves, glass-ware, paintings, &c., the whole valued at between $250,000 and $300,000. The manifest is a long one, and comprises between 300 and 400 packages consigned to different owners in this City. The following are among the larger consignments:

Seventy-five casks Cognac to Ives, Beecher & Co., 50 casks bromide of potash to B. Defoynines & Co., 400 casks wine to order, 300 cases champagne to V. Bishoff & Co., 66 hogsheads porcelain to Haviland & Co., 230 packages champagne to Bouché Fils & Co., 93 packages straw goods to C. Dord & Co., 100 casts cognac to Clement Hearde & Co., 40 hogsheads porcelain to C. Field Haviland & Co., 7 bales raw silk to A. A. Low & Co., 375 barrels plaster (gypsum,) to E. Lamentagne, & Co.; 4,000 dry hides to order; 2,514 dry hides to order; 153 barrels oxides of zinc, to order; 38 tubs cheese to Acstlinberger & Co; 20 casks glycerine, to Knanblauch & Lechtenstein; 200 bundles willow to F. Dreyer; 50 cases wine to F. S. De Luze; 500 baskets wine to Renault, Fits & Co. In addition to the miscellaneous cargo there was a consignment of $100,000 in specie to private parties, the whole of which has already been removed from the wreck.

THE SHIP SIMLA ASHORE.

Yesterday was a day of marine disasters. Close upon the heels of the Amérique affair came the report that the fine ship Simla, of Portsmouth, N. H., had gone ashore five miles south of Barnegat. Inquiry at the office of the consignees, Messrs. Salter & Livermore, No. 65 Beaver street, confirmed the truth of the report. The knowledge of the consignees, however, was limited, and, beyond the fact that the ship had gone ashore late on Saturday night and that her master had been out away to save her, they had no intelligence to communicate. It is known that all the crew, consisting of the Captain—Albert Salter—two mates, the cook, and 14 men before the mast, were saved. As the accident occurred at a distance of 40 miles south of the Hook, it is supposed that she was driven ashore through stress of weather, and not by the obtuseness or inefficiency of a pilot. As soon as the news reached this City, the consignees dispatched one of the Coast Wrecking Company's vessels to Barnegat to get the ship off. The loss in any case will be restricted to the vessel alone, there being no cargo of any account on board. At the time of the disaster, the Simla was 62 days out from Marseilles, having made an unusually quick passage for this time of year. The ship, which was built in Portsmouth in 1863, is 179 feet long, 36 feet beam, and 23 feet depth of hold. She has two decks, and is of 1,110 tons burden. The hull is composed of white oak, with iron and copper fastening, and is sheathed with yellow metal. She is owned by J. M. Tredick, of Portsmouth, N. H., and was last classed in October, 1875, at Liverpool. The amount of insurance on the Simla is not known, but as her owner was noted for fully insuring his property, it is presumed that most of the loss is covered. The value of the ship is estimated at between $50,000 and $60,000. Up to a late hour yesterday her consignees entertained strong hopes of saving the vessel, and as she was in ballast at the time of the accident, the chances are thought to be in their favor.

THE BROOKLYN ALDERMEN.

FAILURE TO ELECT A PRESIDENT.

THE REPUBLICAN AND DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES RECEIVE AN EQUAL NUMBER OF VOTES—AN INDEPENDENT DEMOCRAT VOTES FOR HIMSELF—THE VOTING CONTINUED FOR THREE HOURS—THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE TAKEN UP AND READ.

The Brooklyn Board of Aldermen met yesterday for organization, and for hours the approaches to the Common Council Chamber were thronged by crowds of anxious politicians. It will be remembered that unusual excitement attended the election for Aldermen last November, and that the Democrats resorted to the most questionable means to obtain control of the board. The reason is to be found in the fact that on the complexion politically of the Common Council for this year depends to a large extent which of the two parties shall govern the City of Brooklyn for some time to come. The terms of the Commissioners in the different boards by which the City is governed expire next May. These commissions are filled by appointment of the Mayor and confirmation of the Board of Aldermen. The Mayor is Republican, and hence the struggle for control of the Common Council. By colonization (the elections for Aldermen being held only in the odd wards) the regular Democrats succeeded in electing five Aldermen. One Independent Democrat [Shannon] was elected, and this gave in the Board of Aldermen 13 Democrats to 12 Republicans. Alderman Donovan, Democrat, of the Twelfth Ward, had repeatedly shown a disposition during the year to rebel against the dictation of the Democratic Party leaders, and this fact, taken in connection with the further fact that the regular Democrats opposed the election of Shannon, made it very difficult to determine from which party the President of the Common Council would be selected. It is virtually conceded that whichever party elects the President of the board will triumph in May. To elect a President of the Board of Aldermen a majority of all the members present, if a quorum is in attendance, is required. Alderman Shannon voted with the regular Democrats, but Alderman Donovan voted for himself, and thus created a deadlock which may or may not be broken during the coming week. What object Donovan had in view in voting for himself can only be inferred. Should the Democrats elect the President, it will give them a majority in the Board of Health, and the right to dispose of nine or ten places in that department. Two Assessorships, and several other appointments that must be made at once, fall to the party obtaining control of the board. The voting yesterday lasted for three hours, with the exception of a short time devoted to routine business, and was witnessed by a large number of leading local politicians.

At 2 o'clock the board was called to order by City Clerk Bishop. Alderman Easton, of the Twenty-fifth Ward, moved that Alderman Murtha be made Chairman pro tem. of the Board. Alderman Fisher moved to amend that Alderman French be made Temporary Chairman. The amendment was carried by a vote of 11 to 12. Alderman Donovan (Dem.) voting with the Republicans. On taking the chair, Alderman French returned thanks for his election, and asked the pleasure of the board.

Alderman Fisher (Rep.) moved that the board proceed to elect a President for 1877, and that each Alderman rise in his seat and announce his choice.

Alderman Reardon, of the 14th Ward, (Dem.,) moved that the board proceed to vote by ballot. The latter amendment was lost by a vote of 12 to 13. The original motion was then put and carried. When the roll was called, 11 Aldermen voted for William H. Ray, Republican, and 11 for Robert Black, Democrat, and Alderman Donovan for himself. Neither Ray nor Black voted.

Another ballot met most matters. When the second ballot had been taken, with a like result, Alderman Fisher moved that the election of officers be laid over for the present, and that a committee of two be appointed to wait on the Mayor and inquire if he had any communications to send to the Aldermen. Aldermen Fisher and Black were appointed such committee, and a short recess was taken.

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE.

Mayor Schroeder returned with the committee, and read his annual Message, which commenced with a statement of the City's debt, which may be summarized as follows:

Permanent debt	$27,148,000 00
Temporary debt	11,068,500 00
Tax certificates of indebtedness	1,900,000 00
Total	$40,116,500 00
Less sinking fund	$4,530,129 60
Amount advanced by sinking fund to redeem Gowanus Canal and interest on loan	29,310 69—4,559,449 20
Net	$35 557,050 71

Concerning the Hempstead Reservoir, he says: "Early in the year an effort was made to compromise and settle the controversy by a reference of all the matters in dispute to arbitration. The proposition reached the height of favorable introduction into the Common Council, but it failed from a determination on my part not to assent to the arrangement unless the representative of the Attorney General, or that officer himself, would co-operate and submit to the tribunal of arbitration the facts and arguments upon which the suit of the people of the State charging fraud in the making and execution of the contract had been instituted and still remained to be tried. The Attorney General declined to so co-operate. I did not think any more money should be paid while grave accusations, having the sanction of high authority, and fatal, if true, to any claim, remained to be tried and decided."

Speaking of the Department of Parks the Mayor says: "The Department of Parks has never been organized under the Charter. A State Commission still holds control of the public parks and boulevards. The Charter makes it imperative on the Mayor, in 1877, to nominate and, with the consent of the Common Council, to appoint a President and two Commissioners of Parks. I intend to do what the law requires toward bringing this department under the control of the City Government.

On the appointing power the following is explicit: "Another serious fault exists in our charter in delaying the exercise of the Mayor's appointing power for more than one year after his advent to office. If the Chief Magistrate is to exercise such a power at all, it should be when he comes into office, and not when he is going out. Such was the original design of the charter of 1873, but as the law now stands the Mayor remains in office nearly two-thirds of his term before he can have any voice in the incumbency of the most important departments. Under this system all the departments may be filled in a manner objectionable to both the Mayor and Common Council during the greater part of the period for which the people have intrusted them with power. Brooklyn can never enjoy the full advantages of local self-government while the free action of its elected Chief Magistrate and Board of Aldermen is restricted and nullified by such inconsistent legislation."

After the reading of the message, which was received with applause, Alderman Fisher moved that 1,000 copies be printed, 500 of which should be in the German language. Carried. A communication was next read from the Mayor recommending William C. De Witt to the office of Corporation Counsel. Alderman Murtha, (Dem.,) moved that Mr. De Witt be confirmed. Alderman Burnett, (Rep.,) seconded the motion, and paid a high compliment to Mr. De Witt and his assistants, Messrs. Johnson and Kunkel. Mr. De Witt was unanimously confirmed. After the transaction of a large amount of routine business, the resignation of John Delmar as Justice of the First District was sent in. Mr. Delmar, whose term as Justice does not expire until May next, was elected to the office of County Clerk last November. On motion of Alderman Kane, of the Sixth Ward, Daniel Ferry, elected to succeed Delmar, was appointed to fill the office until the date when he assumes it by right of election. By unanimous vote, the salary of Police Officer Patrick McKeon for the month of December was ordered to be paid to his widow. McKeon died in the gallery of the Old Brooklyn Theatre in the performance of his duty on the night of the terrible calamity.

RENEWING THE VOTING FOR PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD.

Alderman Fisher then moved that the board go into the election of officers. A vote was taken on President, and resulted as did the other votes. Alderman Easton moved that a vote by ballot be taken. The motion was lost, Alderman Donovan (Dem.) voting with the Republicans. Alderman Burnett nominated David S. Arnott (Rep.) for President. At this point it began to dawn on the Aldermen that the deadlock could not be broken, and accordingly each one cast a complimentary vote for some fellow-member whom he wished to honor. A motion to take a recess was lost. Alderman Sterling, (Dem.) moved to adjourn and that motion was also lost. The motion was renewed again and again, and each time was defeated. At length a motion to take a recess for 20 minutes was carried.

When the board reassembled Alderman Burnett moved that a viva voce vote for President be taken. The vote stood 11 for Ray, 11 for Black, and 1 for Donovan, Alderman Donovan voting for himself. Alderman Burnett then moved that the board adjourn until next Monday at 2 o'clock, there being no hope that a President would be elected in the then temper of the Aldermen. The motion prevailed.

A MYSTERIOUS DEATH.

An unknown man, who was arrested at 6 P. M. yesterday, by an officer of the Twenty-first Precinct, on the charge of intoxication, died shortly after being locked up at the Station-house. He was about 35 years of age, five feet eight inches in stature, and was attired in brown sack coat and pantaloons, blue under shirt, Cardigan jacket, and army shoes. After his death it was ascertained that he had been smeared a few minutes previous to his arrest in an intoxicated state, at No. 228 Thirty-third street, who has since stated that the man entered his place and insulted his family. In ejecting the intruder, Stner clinched with him in the hall-way and pushed him off the stoop.

BOARD OF APPORTIONMENT.

THE REMOVAL OF SNOW FROM THE STREETS—NO ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION TO BE GRANTED TO THE POLICE DEPARTMENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

For the first time in the history of the Board of Apportionment, an application was made to its members yesterday, while they were in session in the Mayor's office, to transfer a large amount of unexpended balances in the beginning of the year, to pay for cleaning the streets almost immediately after the annual appropriation for the purpose, amounting to $725,000, had been made in the tax levy for 1877. Soon after the board had been called to order by its Chairman, Mayor Ely, a communication was received from the Police Commissioners in the different boards by which the City is governed expire next May. These commissions are filled by appointment of the Mayor and confirmation of the Board of Aldermen. The Mayor is Republican, and hence the struggle for control of the Common Council. By colonization (the elections for Aldermen being held only in the odd wards) the regular Democrats succeeded in electing five Aldermen. OBSTRUCTING THE UNITED STATES MAILS.

SYRACUSE, Jan. 8.—A conflict took place here to-day between the city authorities and the New-York Central Railroad Company. The Superintendent of Streets ordered his men to shovel snow in Railroad street upon the tracks of the New-York Central Railroad. The railroad company ran engines through the snow, clearing the tracks several times. As fast as they were cleared the Superintendent of Streets ordered his men to shovel the snow back; they did so and pounded it on the track. Two engines were thrown off the track by the obstruction and travel was suspended five hours. An express train carrying the United States mails was delayed four hours. Five engines were finally hitched together and cleared the tracks of the obstructions. There is great indignation among the citizens over the action of the city authorities.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION....Jan. 8.

SENATE.

A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury was laid before the Senate, calling the attention of Congress to the present condition of the appropriation for the payment of temporary clerks in that department, and asking an additional appropriation of $30,000 for the payment of such clerks during the remainder of the present fiscal year, in order that the business of the department may not be embarrassed or delayed. Referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE ELECTORAL VOTES.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, the special committee of seven Senators recently appointed to devise means for an amicable settlement of the Presidential contest was authorized to sit during sessions of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, said: I am requested to present the petition of a number of citizens of Cincinnati upon the importance of a peaceful and legal count of the recent Presidential election. I notice among the names attached to this petition many of the leading business men of Cincinnati; persons in high social and official positions in the State of Ohio, who are well known throughout the country, and of both political parties. Their opinions are entitled to great respect and consideration. Perhaps no number of names from that portion of the United States would be entitled to more consideration and respect, from their weight, character, and influence, than these gentlemen. The general tone of the petition, also, I think, will meet the almost universal sense of the Senate. There may be a difference of opinion as to the particular mode of accomplishing the object they pray for, but the object they seek—the peaceful, quiet, orderly count of the Electoral vote—is one that every member of the Senate will heartily concur in. There will be differences of opinion as to the mode that may be devised hereafter for counting the vote, but the importance of the subject and the character of the petitions entitle this petition to be read in full and to be referred to the select committee having charge of this subject.

Mr. THURMAN, of Ohio, said he entirely concurred in what his colleague (Mr. Sherman) said as to the character of the men who signed the petition. The petition was most respectful in language, as the Senate would see when it was read. As to questions which may arise he had nothing to say now, but he commended the petition to the Senate.

The petition was read by the Chief Clerk. It expresses the hope that some mode of reaching a decision of the pending question will be had which will satisfy the country, and express their confidence that Senators and Representatives in Congress will bring to the discussion of the matter a spirit of fairness and impartiality.

It was referred to the special committee of seven Senators appointed to consider the count of the Electoral vote.

OBTAINING WITNESSES IN THE OREGON CASE.

Mr. MORTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a report showing the questions propounded to Enos Runyon, of the firm of Martin & Runyon, bankers and brokers, of Wall street, New-York, in regard to who ordered a check to be drawn by his bank in favor of Ladd & Bush, of Salem, Oregon, and which he refused to answer. He also presented a resolution directing the President of the Senate to issue his warrant to the Sergeant at Arms, for the arrest of said Runyon, and his production at the bar of the Senate to show cause why he shall not be punished for contempt. Ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON gave notice that he would call it up for action to-morrow.

On motion of Mr. MORTON it was ordered that the testimony taken by the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of unfinished business, which was the resolution reported several days ago by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, declaring that William Turner, the manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company's office at Jacksonville, Oregon, is in duty bound to answer questions propounded to him as to messages which passed through his office in regard to the appointments of Grover and Presidential elector, and the check for $8,000 on Ladd & Bush, of Salem, Oregon, and that he cannot excuse himself from answering the same by reason of his connection with the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine, said he was willing that the Senate should go to the same extent in ordering the production of telegraphic dispatches that a court of justice would go, but he was opposed to all drag-net proceedings.

Mr. DAWES, of Massachusetts, concurred in the views expressed by the Senator from Maine, and said after he had seen in the newspapers that telegraphic dispatches had been furnished to newspaper dealers, and then distributed to favorite newspapers, he thought any franchise which Congress had conferred upon a company which would thus dispose of its messages should be taken away.

Mr. BOGY, of Missouri, also expressed his disapproval of any drag-net investigation, but favored the Senate taking such action for the production of specified dispatches as a court of law would take.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, said if there was any one subject upon which there was more delusion and humbug than this, he did not know of it. The security and peace of society depended, first, upon good laws, and, second, upon their faithful execution. The idea that something between two men was confidential when there was a necessity that the truth which affected the rights of somebody else must be told, was an absurdity. Nobody had a right to set up his private confidence or his private honor, when it stood in the way of justice. He argued that the Senate had the right to compel the witness to testify; and this sort of talk about privileges was absurd.

The question being on the passage of the resolution, it was agreed to—Yeas 35, nays 3, as follows:

LAW REPORTS.

A DIVORCE SET ASIDE.

THE WEBSTER CASE BEFORE JUDGE SPEIR—A WIFE WITH AN ACCOMMODATING LOT OF COUSINS—HER ATTORNEY DIRECTED TO PAY THE COSTS.

Judge Speir, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday, rendered a decision vacating and setting aside the decree of divorce obtained by the plaintiff in the case of Edna Webster against John Webster. The plaintiff began the action on Aug. 7, 1876, seeking an absolute divorce on the ground of the defendant's adultery. In her complaint she alleged that she was married to the defendant on March 17, 1875, and that during December, 1875, he committed adultery with a woman named Edna Gale. One Louis Bauer made affidavit that he had served the summons and complaint on the defendant. The latter having put in no answer to the action, Judge Sanford, on Sept. 14, 1876, granted an order of reference to Henry Wood, a son of Benjamin Wood, to take the testimony in the case and report thereon, with his opinion, to the court. The Referee reported on Oct. 26 that he had taken the proofs, and that, in his opinion, the material facts charged in the complaint were true and had been sufficiently proved. He had had before him one witness, who swore to seeing the defendant in a house of ill-fame in West Eighteenth street. A decree of divorce was duly granted to the plaintiff on the referee's report. Mr. Webster, the defendant, made an affidavit to Judge Speir, in the Special Term of the Superior Court, yesterday, which gave an entirely new phase to the matter. In this affidavit, Mr. Webster stated that he had never been served with the summons and complaint, or with any other paper in the action. He was unaware of the existence of any such suit until he accidentally saw a few days ago in a morning paper that a divorce had been granted in the case. He thereupon caused the judgment roll in the action to be examined by George F. Martens, his counsel. He swears that the affidavit of service purporting to have been made by Louis Bauer, as also the latter's testimony before the Referee, is false. The allegation of adultery he also pronounces as willfully false and untrue. He says he knows no such person as Edna Gale, and never committed adultery since his marriage to the plaintiff. He never visited the premises in Eighteenth street until after he heard of the divorce, and he then discovered that the house in question is now and has been for three years the residence of a highly respectable family. Mr. Webster then proceeds to aver: "That from the time of the marriage of this deponent with said plaintiff he lived with her as man and wife in the City of New-York until the 27th day of January, 1876, when deponent left the house No. 350 West Forty-second street, in said City, where he and the plaintiff then resided, and deponent has not since said last-mentioned date resided with said plaintiff; that the cause of deponent's refusal to longer live with the said plaintiff was the improper conduct of said plaintiff during the time she did reside with deponent; that contrary to the express wishes and instructions of deponent, said plaintiff persisted in receiving frequent visits from a number of men who were unknown to this deponent, several of whom she represented to deponent as her cousins; which statements and representations were false and untrue. That at said time deponent and said plaintiff resided, as aforesaid, at No. 350 West Forty-second street, in said City; but that the plaintiff quit said premises, and has since taken up and maintained her residence at No. 515 West Thirty-second street, in said City, a house of bad repute, where she has since lived, and still continues to live, in open adultery with one Samuel Myers." Charles A. Grant makes an affidavit to a similar purport. Judge Speir vacated the decree of divorce, and ordered N. S. Levy, the attorney for the plaintiff, to pay $10—the costs of the motion—personally. Mr. Levy, in conversation with a TIMES reporter yesterday, claimed that if any deception had been practised in the case, the deception had been practised on him. He had not even been paid his fees; neither had the Referee been paid for his services. The witnesses who had given testimony before the Referee, Mr. Levy claimed, had been sent to him by the plaintiff or one Rath, and he knew nothing as to the truth of the stories told by them.

ON TRIAL FOR PERJURY.

Evan P. Thomas, an importer of millinery goods, was placed on trial for perjury before Judge Gildersleeve, yesterday, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, and the case will occupy several days in hearing. The prosecution is conducted by Assistant District Attorney Rollins, and A. Oakey Hall, assisted by Sherburne B. Eaton, defends the accused. The circumstances of the case as stated by Mr. Rollins, are as follows: On the evening of Sunday, Nov. 15, 1874, George H. Sillery, a private watchman, heard an explosion which appeared to proceed from the cellar of the store occupied by Thomas, at No. 326 Canal street. Smoke and flame immediately burst through the windows, and the watchman raised an alarm, which brought the police and firemen to the scene in a moment. The firemen broke in the doors and succeeded in completely extinguishing the fire within seven minutes. On examining the premises it was found that the doors had been barricaded from within with empty boxes, and the firemen and insurance patrol discovered certain circumstances which convinced them that the fire was of incendiary origin. Thomas claimed that at the time of the fire his store contained a stock worth $30,000, and suffered by the seven-minute fire a loss of $23,000. His stock was insured for its full value, and he made a claim on the insurance company for the amount of loss stated. He made the same statement of his stock and loss by fire on his sworn examination before the officials of the Fire Department on Dec. 12, following. At the trial for the prosecution, on the evidence of the appraisers, and after an examination of the books of the defendant, that at the time of the fire Thomas' stock did not exceed $15,000; that he had deliberately falsified his books and supported his claims by false testimony, in order to defraud the insurance company. The discovery of the fire, the appearance of the stock after it had been extinguished, and the sworn statement of Thomas in relation to his stock and loss was proved by several members of the Fire Department and Insurance Patrol. The witnesses were cross-examined by Mr. Hall. The case will be continued to-day.

A BRUTAL CIRCUS RIDER.

Charles Roberts, the English circus rider, who so brutally assaulted his wife Agnes a few weeks ago, was placed on trial before Judge Sutherland yesterday, on an indictment charging him with felonious assault with intent to kill. Mrs. Roberts, who still bears the marks of her injuries, limped to the witness stand and swore that she had not lived with Roberts for two months past, and was about to procure a divorce from him at the time of the assault. She was earning her living and supporting her two children by working on costumes. On the morning of Dec. 18 she had just reached her place of business when she was attacked by Roberts, who struck her on the head, face, back, and various other parts of the body with a heavy claw-hammer, and then threw her down the basement steps. He further pursued her into the basement and threw the hammer at her, yelling, "I have come to kill you, and I'll finish you right here." The unfortunate woman was saved from further violence by Mrs. Whittaker and others, who called a police officer and had Roberts arrested. The prisoner offered no defense, and the jury found him guilty of assault with intent to do bodily harm. Judge Sutherland said he regretted that the jury had not convicted the scoundrel of the more serious crime for which he had been indicted, and sentenced Roberts to five years in the State Prison at hard labor.

A COMPLAINT DISMISSED.

The case of Margaret Cavanagh, as administrator of her husband, John Cavanagh, deceased, against the Adams Express Company, was brought to trial before Judge Van Brunt and a jury, in Part II. of the Supreme Court, yesterday. It appears that John Cavanagh, while on his way to his home, between 8 P. M. and 9 P. M., on Dec. 11, 1875, was run over by one of the company's wagons, and so severely injured that he died on the following day. His widow sued to recover the statutory damages of $5,000. On the trial yesterday it was shown that the driver of the company's wagon had finished his own work, and was driving the wagon merely to oblige a friend, also in the employ of the company. Judge Van Brunt dismissed the complaint, because the injury was not occasioned by the defendant's servant while acting within the scope of his employment.

THE EMMA MINE SUIT.

In the Emma Mine suit yesterday, on trial in the United States Court, the deposition of Arthur H. Lewis, of the firm of Lewis & Son, brokers, of London, England, was read. This testimony was principally in regard to the sale of stock of the company, which James E. Lyon had been called to the stand. He was a claimant of the mine property in Utah at one time, and brought suit in the courts there to gain possession. He afterward entered into a contract, through William M. Stewart, with Mr. Park for the sale of the property, he to receive a stated percentage. Letters were then offered in evidence from Mr. Stewart to Mr. Lyon, to which the defense objected, and the question of their admissibility will be argued this morning.

A REMINISCENCE OF THE REBELLION.

The suit of the Bank of Louisiana against James S. Brander, Jr., Samuel L. Chambliss, and Edward Matthews, was brought to trial before Judge Van Vorst and a jury in Part I. of the Supreme Court yesterday. It appears that the defendants, before the war of the Rebellion, were partners doing business in New-Orleans. Matthews lived in this City. In 1861, after the firing on Fort Sumter, but before the State of Louisiana seceded, the defendants negotiated a note with the Bank for $4,000. This note was afterward renewed for $4,500, down to May 15, 1862, or after the secession of the State of Louisiana. Matthews is the only defendant who makes answer to the suit. He claims that the renewals of the note were inter hostes—that is, between enemies—and he is not responsible, the declaration of war having destroyed the partnership. The bank, however, claims that Matthews is liable on the original note, which was given, as already mentioned, before Louisiana seceded. The case is still on.

SINGULAR CROSS ACTIONS.

A WIFE LIVING AMICABLY WITH HER HUSBAND ON ONE FLOOR DISPOSSESSES HIM FROM THE FLOOR BELOW—AN INTERESTING DECISION BY JUDGE VAN HOESEN.

Judge Van Hoesen, in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, rendered a decision yesterday in the cross suits of Michael Moore and James Vincent. The parties were partners carrying on the business of manufacturing Weiss beer and mineral waters. They did not get along well together, and in October last Moore began an action for the dissolution of the partnership, the sale of the partnership property, the appointment of a Receiver, and for an injunction to restrain Vincent from interfering with the firm property. He obtained a temporary injunction against Vincent. The latter, in his answer, denied the plaintiff's allegations, and asked for a dismissal of the complaint. The business, it appears, was carried on at No. 225 East Twenty-first street. The premises were originally owned by Moore, but at the time of making the partnership he conveyed the building to his wife, Susan, both, however, residing in the upper floors. Mrs. Moore leased the premises to the firm of Moore & Vincent. Moore, after tying up Vincent's hands by the injunction, according to Vincent's story, sold out the latter's interest in the firm, and then, by conspiring with his wife, Susan, the owner of the premises, induced her to bring proceedings before Justice Callahan to dispossess the firm of Moore & Vincent for non-payment of rent. These proceedings were stayed temporarily by injunction. Vincent set forth these facts, and asked for a Receiver, injunction, accounting, &c. Judge Van Hoesen, in his decision, says: "In both actions a Receiver is applied for, and each complaint presents good grounds for the appointment of a Receiver. Assuming that a Receiver must be appointed, there remains the question of paramount importance to all the parties, shall the injunction restraining Justice Callahan from deciding, and issuing a warrant in, the summary proceedings pending before him be continued? To authorize the continuing of the injunction, it must appear that, through fraud or surprise, the tenant is prevented from setting up his defense in the summary proceedings, or that the tenant has rights which, though they cannot be made to appear in those proceedings, are nevertheless enforceable in a court of equity, and entitle the tenant to remain undisturbed in his possession of the demised premises. In this case there is no allegation of surprise. The defendant Susan is, however, the wife of the defendant Michael, and it is charged that a conspiracy exists between those defendants to cheat and defraud the plaintiff out of his interest as a lessee, by means of the summary proceedings. Every man's suspicions are aroused when a wife brings legal proceedings to turn her husband out of the lower part of the house in which they are both living, in congenial intimacy, on the floor above. It is obvious that the proceeding are only a friendly suit. Knowing the ascendency which the husband ordinarily exercises over the wife, the inference is not unnatural that the husband, for the reason of his own, has suggested or initiated the proceedings against himself. That inference is, in this case, the foundation of the charge of conspiracy. I have no doubt that the defendant, Michael Moore, satisfied his wife that he would not be offended if he were dispossessed, and that Vincent would also be ejected. It is probable that he advised the institution of the proceedings. Unquestionably he believes it to be to his advantage to get rid of Vincent, and expects to have actual, if not the ostensible control of the premises after the warrant of dispossession has issued against Vincent and himself. Notwithstanding all this, the fact remains that Susan Moore is the landlord, entitled to her rent; that Michael Moore and James Vincent are by their own voluntary act her tenants, and that the rent is unpaid and due. The law gives her the right, under these circumstances, to take summary proceedings to remove her delinquent tenants, whether for ves, wether good or bad, cannot affect the validity of her proceedings." Judge Van Hoesen, therefore, denies the injunction restraining the continuance of the dispossessing proceedings, but allows an injunction restraining Mr. and Mrs. Moore from disposing of the firm property purchased by them at the forced sale. He also directs the appointment of a Receiver.

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Donohue.

Granted.—Zeis vs. The German Press Society, and Journey vs. Schamale.

Matter of Barnett.—I wish to see counsel.

Sperber. vs Sperber.—Motion denied without costs. Memorandum.

By Judge Lawrence.

Orders as Settled.—Bailey vs. Dodge and Foley vs. Rathbone.

Orders resettled.—Foley vs. Rathbone, and Same vs. Same.

Matter of Wilkie.—This should go to Chambers.

De Wolf vs. Offinger.—The pleadings in this case are voluminous, and the questions involved most intricate and complex. The counsel for the plaintiff on the argument submitted a brief, but I find neither brief nor points on the part of the defendant. The defendant's counsel will oblige me by furnishing a brief, stating his views and the cases on which he relies. The plaintiff's counsel should have a copy of the defendant's brief so that he can reply, if he deem it advisable so to do. The original brief of the plaintiff's counsel is with the papers returned to the clerk, and may be inspected by the defendant's counsel, if he so desire.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART II.

By Judge Lawrence.

Cortelyon vs. Mulock.—See memorandum.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART III.

By Judge Larremore.

Sage et al. vs. Holden.—Amendments allowed unless affidavits are presented upon the facts in dispute.

By Judge Barrett.

The Excelsior Petroleum Company vs. Fowler, &c.—Considering that this was merely a dismissal of the complaint without a trial, I thought $500 would be reasonable. In granting this allowance, however, I do not wish to be understood as intimating that it should be imposed as a condition of opening the default. The Justice at Chambers will be entirely free to do what is just on that head.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge Barrett.

Opinions.—Wheaton vs. Voorhis, Jr., et al.; Maxwell vs. Gould et al.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge Sedgwick.

The Sixth Avenue Railroad Company vs. The Gilbert Elevated Railway Company.—The plaintiff's attorney will engross the findings, as before requested, and hand them in.

Harris vs. Dillon et al.—Case settled.

Henriquez et al. vs. Clews et al.—The modifications and additional findings proposed by plaintiff will be considered upon settlement of the case.

Lehmaier vs. Griswold.—Case settled; no exhibits are to be printed as part of the case unless marked as exhibits by the stenographer; if any have not been so marked, special application must be made before printing.

By Chief Justice Curtis.

By Judge Speir.

Webster vs. Webster.—Motion to set aside the judgment entered herein for a divorce. It appears the service of the summons and complaint was served on the defendant by having a person point out to the party making the service the defendant, who was not in fact known to the party making the service. The defendant was not in fact served, although the court making the order of reference required the Referee to take testimony as to the actual service of summons and complaint; all proceedings must be set aside, with costs to be paid by the plaintiff's attorney personally.

Real Estate Trust Company vs. Balch.—Order settled.

Hesse vs. Hunter.—Motion granted; no costs.

Mills vs. Swanson.—Motion denied; no costs.

COURT NOTES.

The suit of Runyon W. Martin against Jay Gould and others, which grew out of the "Black Friday" transactions, was discontinued, by consent, in the Superior Court yesterday.

Owing to the priority of another case in the United States District Court, in Admiralty, the further trial of the suit of the owners of the ship Harvest Queen against the steam-ship Adriatic has been continued until later in the term.

An examination was held yesterday before United States Commissioner Shields in the cases of Otto Jessen and others, charged with having an illicit whisky still in connection with their vinegar manufactory in Eleventh avenue. Decision in the case was reserved.

Judge Barrett, in Part III. of the Supreme Court, yesterday tried the case of the Louisiana Bank against Schuchardt & Co. The action was to recover $30,000, the amount of two drafts, one for $10,000 and the other for $20,000. The main point involved was, whether in the acceptance of the defendants the statute on the subject was complied with. Judgment was given for the plaintiffs for the amount of the $20,000 draft.

John Traynor, a bar-tender, who jumped into the handsome sleigh of Mr. Hugo Fritsch, the German Consul, at Judge Smith's hotel on the Harlem road, and rode off to Newark, N. J., where he attempted to sell the horse and sleigh, was called before Judge Sutherland yesterday, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, and pleaded guilty. Traynor, who pleaded drunkenness in extenuation of his offense, was sent to State Prison for three years.

Judge Speir, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday restored to the calendar the suit of the Mayor, &c., against Joseph W. Duryee. This case was on the calendar of Part I. of the court on Jan. 2, and when called nobody put in an appearance for the plaintiffs. It was shown to Judge Speir yesterday that the counsel, whose duty it was to attend to the matter, had been out of town, and was detained on his way to the City by the train becoming snow-bound.

The old case of Austin Black against the Continental National Bank was brought up before Judge Donohue in Supreme Court Chambers yesterday, on a motion by the defendants to amend their answer, so as to make it correspond with the proofs offered on the recent trial of the suit in which the jury disagreed. Judge Donahue reserved his decision. The action is brought to recover $63,000 on a check purporting to have been drawn by one John Ross, and to have been certified to by the defendant's cashier. The bank claims the certification is a forged one.

Judge Barrett, in the Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday rendered a decision in the case of George L. Maxwell, assignee of George C. Jones, against Jay Gould and others. The action is one of those known as "Black Friday" suits, and was brought to recover $6,875 resulting from the alleged failure of the defendants to fulfill their contract for the purchase of $50,000 gold. The case was argued on a demurrer interposed by the defendants, and Judge Barrett, while ruling in the main in favor of plaintiff, says there are some clerical errors in the complaint which necessitate the sustaining of the defendants' demurrer. He gives the plaintiff leave to amend his complaint, without paying costs.

The case of Henry Dudley, against the Mayor, &c., was brought to trial before Judge Van Brunt in Part II. of the Supreme Court yesterday. The action was to recover for surveys made by the plaintiff for the Department of Buildings. The City admitted the truth of the allegations in the complaint, but claimed that only $50 had been collected for the purpose, and that for this amount the plaintiff might take judgment. Judge Van Brunt held that the plaintiff has no claim against the City, but that the Department of Buildings can compel the Controller to obtain the requisite funds. The City, however, is not responsible to the Surveyor until the Controller has such funds in his possession.

On appeal, before the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday, were argued the cases of Ella Kaufmann, and Sophia and Minnie Kaltenheizer against the People, &c. The three women were tried recently before Recorder Hackett, in the General Sessions, on a charge of forcibly abducting, for immoral purposes, a 14-year old girl named Selma Bethman, and compelling her to submit to fiendish outrages on her person. Two of the women were sent to State Prison for 20 years each, and the third was sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment. John O. Mott argued the case before the General Term, yesterday, on behalf of the prisoners, claiming the evidence was insufficient to establish their guilt. District Attorney Phelps argued in opposition, and the Court reserved its decision.

In the Court of General Sessions, Part II., before Judge Sutherland, yesterday, Jacob Van Valkenberg and John West were placed at the bar, charged with conspiracy to defraud the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in whose employ they had been for some time, the former as ticket collector and the latter as ferry-master at Jersey City. Mr. Charles W. Brooke and Mr. Leon Abbett appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. J. O. Mott for the defense. It is alleged that tickets were withheld from the deposit-box and resold, the proceeds being divided, thus cheating the company to the amount of $60,000 or $70,000 a year for several years. After impaneling a jury, the opening of the case was adjourned to this morning.

A TILDENITE LAWYER WANTS A REVOLVER.

Superintendent Walling yesterday received a letter through the mail, of which the following is a verbatim copy:

Yours Truly J. R. CUNNINGHAM, Mound City, Illinois.

THE INDICTED MILK DEALERS.

In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Mr. William P. Prentice, counsel for the Board of Health, moved that an immediate day be named for the trial of the 29 milk dealers indicted for selling adulterated milk. Mr. Lawrence, representing the Milk Dealers' Association, opposed the motion, and asked that these cases go over until the case of Hannah Sobrumpf, which had been appealed, and was now awaiting the decision of the Supreme Court, had been passed upon. Judge Sutherland said he would consider the matter and render a decision on Thursday.

It cannot be truly said that "the question of the hour" relates either to the counting of the Electoral votes or the attitude of parties in Louisiana. A considerable majority of newspaper readers are chiefly interested this morning in hearing whether two hot-headed and rather coarse-minded young men have exchanged shots at each other, and which of the two has been killed or wounded. Our news columns furnish all the accessible details on that momentous question, and these will doubtless be read with a good deal more avidity than the importance of the subject demands. Perhaps some thoughtful people may be tempted to inquire whether the world advances very much, after all, when two men can find no better way of settling a dispute than by making a pistol target of each other. The "code of honor" means now, as it has done, say, for the last thousand years, a set of rules which are framed with equal disregard of the laws of GOD and those of man, and which have always been accepted as superior to both by a more or less brutal and arrogant caste desiring to be known as "gentlemen." The modern swaggerers and fire-eaters who shape their conduct by the "code" are naturally enough several degrees lower in point of character than the men who who fought when the ordeal of mortal combat was either sanctioned or tolerated by the law of the land. For, our modern duelists form part of a society which has enough moral sense to condemn this species of murder, besides being able to appreciate the grotesque absurdity of settling private quarrels by the bullet. Yesterday's reported encounter was decidedly more brutal and demoralizing than a prize-fight, and should entail on all who participated in it, whether as principals or seconds, prompt and exemplary punishment.

The complications in Louisiana are rapidly approaching a point at which Federal interference in some form will be essential to the maintenance of peace. Two Governors have been inaugurated—PACKARD, legally elected according to the decision of the Returning Board, and having the prestige inherent in the position transferred by the outgoing Governor. NICHOLLS, the candidate of the minority, with no right save that which the support of his own party confers, but with pretensions so arrogant and so clearly based on an appeal to force that their maintenance must entail serious conflict. Each of the Governors, the genuine and the bogus, proclaims a determination to maintain his authority unimpaired. PACKARD has, of course, the benefit of the organization administered by Gov. KELLOGG. NICHOLLS, on the contrary, is organizing a police force of his own, and is collecting tribute from New-Orleans merchants, who choose to call it taxation. The minority Legislature begins its labors by passing a measure creating a Canvassing Board that shall serve the purposes of the Democracy in the counting of votes. Thus, two rival powers are at work, and the question cannot be long delayed, Shall the lawful or the usurping authority stand? It is not a new question, unfortunately, in Louisiana, and the final answer must sooner or later emanate from Washington.

We trust that the Senate Committee will not fail to summon before them the mysterious Mr. PATRICK, who told the wavering CRONIN that if TILDEN were elected he would give him (CRONIN) anything he wanted, in return for the trifling favor of personating an Elector. We believe that the full designation of this person is J. H. N. PATRICK, that he is an agent of the Flagstaff Silver Mine, Utah, and was not very remotely connected with the Tacoma "salting" swindle, by which the confiding British public was, some years ago, fleeced out of about a million of dollars. Mr. PATRICK also assumes the position of "extreme Western agent" of Mr. TILDEN, and would make quite an interesting, if not a very communicative, witness.

The Judiciary Committee of the House is singularly backward in reporting a constitutional amendment prohibiting the payment by the United States of any claim arising from the use or destruction of property by the Federal troops during the rebellion, and the Democrats in the House are equally backward in requiring the committee to fulfill the duty imposed on it. Considering the amount of political capital made by Mr. TILDEN from his letter promising that all bills providing for the payment of such claims as those above described would be vetoed by him, in case of his elevation to the Presidency, the Democratic shuffling with this matter is eminently characteristic. Mr. TILDEN'S Southern followers do not propose to surrender without a struggle their chance of reimbursing themselves for some of the cost of rebellion, and a sufficient number of Northern Democrats are in sympathy with the ex-rebels on that point to render the great army of Southern claimants anything but a visionary danger to the National Treasury.

We believe that Mayor ELY desires to obtain some public credit for his administration. In any case, the duty is imposed on him by law of keeping himself informed of the doings of the several departments, and of being vigilant and active in causing the ordinances of the City to be executed and enforced. The Mayor is probably aware that $725,000 a year is paid by the tax-payers for the cleaning of the streets. He might gain some credit for himself, in addition to performing his obvious duty, were he to give some attention to the manner in which the Police Commissioners contrive to dispose of $2,000 a day, while leaving the streets in a condition which would disgrace a city in which the dogs are the only scavengers. If Mr. ELY believes that the Police Commissioners are grossly incapable, or that they deliberately waste the funds intrusted to them for a specific purpose, he should promptly take such action in the premises as the law requires. If he considers the present disgusting condition of the streets compatible with honest and able administration, he certainly differs from everybody outside of the Street-cleaning Bureau and is as obviously an undesirable public servant as are Mr. NICHOLLS and his colleagues.

If there is to be any disappointment over the final publication of the late Mr. VANDERBILT'S will, it need not be a popular disappointment. Whatever may be the emotions of those persons who had expectations of their own as possible legatees, the public had no reason to look for large bequests to institutions of learning, beneficence, or artistic culture. Mr. VANDERBILT gave little in those directions during his lifetime. It was not likely that, making his will as he did in the full strength of his years, he should break up his vast estate, or divert any considerable portion of it to the endowment of any charity or association for special purposes. He had a natural pride in the fortune of which he had been the sole architect. He desired that it should be kept together unimpaired. So, after making liberal provision for his immediate family, and a few personal friends, the bulk of his great property is given to his son and intimate partner, WILLIAM H. VANDERBILT. In this instance, a great fortune takes the same line of descent as that of the Astor estate—from father to son. As a curious reflex of the rich man's mind, his last will and testament has a certain interest. It is business-like, exact, and arbitrary in tone. It was meant to be impregnable in its terms. The old man exercised his undoubted right to dispose of his own wealth in his own way. The world has ceased to expect post-mortem beneficence from very rich men.

A NEW ELECTION.

It has been for some days apparent that exponents of Democratic opinion, in and out of Congress, are losing the confidence they have professed to feel in Mr. TILDEN'S Presidential chances, and are looking out for some new device to secure the result which was not attained at the polls. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD'S proposition indicates the conclusion which some of them have reached. It is that a new election shall be held in South Carolina, Louisiana, and Florida, under the supervision of the joint committees to whom has been referred the question of the Electoral count. Of course, the proposition is made on the supposition that the labors of the committees will not end satisfactorily to both the chambers, and that the Democratic Party cannot afford to identify itself with the revolutionary schemes of Mr. CLARKSON N. POTTER and others for inaugurating Mr. TILDEN as an opposition President. Mr. WOOD'S utterances in the caucus held immediately after the opening of the session certainly did not render him conspicuous as a peacemaker. We must infer from his present plan that he has no faith in the methods propounded by the extremists of his party for the settlement of anticipated difficulties, and none in the efficacy of the Grover trick for frustrating the will of Oregon. If it serve no other purpose, the effort to utilize the idea of a new election in the States which have been contested at least possesses significance as a confession of the weakness and impracticability of the suggestions emanating from persons maintaining close relations with Mr. TILDEN.

The proposition itself, however, is wholly inadmissible. The abnormal excitement of the October election in Ohio and Indiana is bad enough, but it is trifling compared with that which would attend a fresh election of Presidential Electors in South Carolina and the two other Southern States in which the Democrats refuse to consider themselves defeated. We saw all the worst elements of partisan warfare concentrated in Indiana, in order that the unsettled opinion of the country might be influenced by the verdict in the State contest. But to reopen the national contest in the three States to determine who shall be the next President would be to make them the scene of a struggle of the most extraordinary character, and one that would intensify the excitement which moderate men now deplore. All the arts and influences known in political life would be brought to bear upon these States, and the defeated party, whichever it might be, would be dissatisfied with the result. Besides, all the sources of the existing complications would still remain open. Gov. CHAMBERLAIN, for example, finding his authority once more menaced, and the force at his command insufficient for the maintenance of order, would naturally renew his request to the President for military support. The circumstances which warranted the application last Autumn would justify its renewal, and the President would be in duty bound to respond as before. Mr. WOOD, indeed, would have the new election "supervised and in a measure directed" by the joint Congressional committees. But their intervention would add to the difficulties. There would be no likelihood of their agreement on this question of Federal interference. One side would affirm, the other side would deny, the operation of causes inimical to the freedom of election and the safety of colored voters. By one, the Governors' application for Federal help would probably be sustained; by the other, it would assuredly be denounced. The obligation on the part of the President to furnish troops to preserve the peace, and to give the requisite support to the duly constituted authority of the State, would remain unchanged. Act as he might, his action would be used as a pretext for partisan misrepresentation. The functions and powers of the Returning Boards would involve a recurrence of the troubles now alleged as a reason for the proceeding recommended by Mr. WOOD. The election in each of the three States, we are told, is to be held under the State laws. The authority of the Returning Boards will therefore be unimpaired. The joint committees may "supervise" the doings of the Louisiana Board, but only in the sense in which they were previously supervised by the informal committee selected by the President and the self-appointed committees which were on the spot in the interest of one or the other of the parties. They would have no right to say that the board should count this return or reject that, for under the State law the board is authorized to judge for itself in these matters, and its decision is final.

While, then, the three States would be plunged into unexampled turmoil, the country would be no nearer an amicable adjustment of the dispute than at this moment. The States themselves, on a full and fair vote, would unquestionably be Republican. The experience in all of them, last November, would lead to a demand for an exercise of Federal power in Louisiana and Florida, at least equal to that which held WADE HAMPTON and his rifle clubs in check in South Carolina. If that power were withheld, the Republicans would declare, with perfect justice, that their defeat was attributable to violence, intimidation, and fraud. Only these agencies could give the Democrats the victory in South Carolina, Louisiana or Florida. On the other hand, if the President used his authority to insure order and freedom at the polls, the Democrats would insist that their defeat should be ascribed to his action, and Mr. FERNANDO WOOD would be likely to cry aloud for his impeachment. We should, therefore, have a great deal of strife and excitement, without accomplishing a single useful result.

The only satisfactory method of dealing with pending questions is to accept the simple facts and to allow the recognized process of counting the votes go on without hindrance. The real trouble with Mr. WOOD, as with others of his party, is that he is unwilling to accept any count which does not give effect to his partisan preference. He knows as well as we do that by adhering to the interpretation of the Constitution which usage has established, the counting of the votes will end in the declaration of Mr. HAYES' election. All the plans that have been formed by Democratic leaders have for their object, not the settlement of doubts or the prevention of injustice, but the introduction into the system of some new feature that shall furnish Mr. TILDEN another chance of success. The obvious objection to these plans, Mr. WOOD'S included, is that they open a question pregnant with difficulties and dangers, with no likelihood of bringing the country nearer unanimity as to the result. What the joint committee suggest, a little time will probably tell. If they fail to agree, the only sensible and patriotic course is that which leads to the acceptance of the votes as they are, and of the practice as it is. This implies the inauguration of Mr. HAYES, but only because the people have given him a valid title to the Presidency.

THE SILVER PRODUCT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The annual statement by Messrs. WELLS, FARGO & Co. of precious metals produced in the States and Territories west of the Missouri River is dated San Francisco, Dec. 30, and contains some information of extreme interest at this moment, when the advocates of silver legal tender have just won another advantage in the House. The statement referred to covers British Columbia and the west coast of Mexico, and shows an aggregate yield of $90,875,173. In 1875 the yield was $80,889,057, and that was the greatest ever known in the history of the country. It will be seen that the increase is $9,986,136, or 12½ per cent. Of this increase $7,462,762 was in silver, while $2,583,454 only was in gold. In this connection we invite attention to the following table prepared by Messrs. WELLS, FARGO & Co., showing the total product of the region covered by their reports, and its distribution between the various metals for the past six years:

Year.	Total.	Lead, &c.	Silver.	Gold.
1871.....	$58,284,000	$2,100,000	$20,286,000	$35,898,000
1872.....	62,236,959	2,250,000	20,527,500	39,459,459
1873.....	72,258,693	3,450,000	28,352,100	40,456,593
1874.....	74,401,045	3,800,000	30,498,000	40,103,045

It will be noticed that while the yield of gold has advanced in six years only about 25 per cent., the yield of silver has advanced in five years fully one hundred per cent., and that the greater part of this increase took place in the year 1873 and in 1876. From 1872 to 1873 there is an advance of fully 33¼ per cent., and last year there was another of 22 per cent. The advance in gold has, on the contrary, been comparatively steady and moderate, the greatest increase since 1872 being found last year. In this connection it is to be noted that Messrs. WELLS, FARGO & Co. estimate, after careful analysis, that of the $37,000,000 produced from the Comstock lode last year, quite 46 per cent., or $17,125,000, was in gold. Of the whole product of Nevada, 35 per cent. was gold, and of the product of the silver mines 31 per cent. was gold. This fact has a distinct bearing on the value of the Comstock lode, and on the part which its owners are playing in the legislation of the country. Of the entire product of the year, Nevada is allotted $49,280,764, and California $16,615,807.

The facts which we have summarized above throw abundant light on the scheme which has already been forced through the House, and which its promoters are now seeking to push through the Senate, for restoring silver legal-tender in this country. The remarkable fluctuations during the past year in the value of silver are well known. The author of Messrs. WELLS, FARGO & Co.'s circular is of the opinion that "a comparison of the actual and probable demand with the actual and probable production does not appear to be a sufficient explanation for the extraordinary depreciation of silver during 1876." And this is true. In 1876, the production increased ten per cent., but the export rose from $18,570,000 to $47,500,000, and still the price ranged from 46½d. to 58½d. Yet in the face of the actual rapid changes in the price of silver and the acknowledged impossibility of tracing them to their causes, or of anticipating what they will be in the future, we are asked to adopt silver as a legal tender at a fixed ratio to gold. That is, practically, we are asked to adopt silver, with almost a certainty that it will become our sole legal tender, at a moment when the experts of the financial world are absolutely unable to fix its approximate value for thirty days in advance, and a very prominent authority from the silver-producing region frankly confesses that it does not appear to be governed by supply and demand.

In this connection we hope that our readers will not fail to look at the letter of Mr. S. B. RUGGLES in another column, in which, in behalf of the Chamber of Commerce of this City, he sets forth the reasons why it would be not merely a folly, but a crime, to pursue the policy of the bill recently passed by the House, or to adopt silver as a legal tender at all, except with the co-operation of the other great commercial nations. This ground, as we have heretofore pointed out, is maintained by the most intelligent and radical advocates of silver legal tender in Europe.

MORE BUREAU CAMPAIGNING.

It is evident that Mr. TILDEN is managing his supplementary canvass precisely as he has that which preceded it. When he was hunting for the nomination, he set up his public opinion mill and sent out his emissaries. His agents, and correspondents—and their name was legion—were instructed to manufacture public opinion for him. So, when he was finally nominated at St. Louis, the spontaneity of that act was like the "impromptu" speech which a speaker has committed to memory in advance of its delivery. Once nominated, the laboratory of sophistical argument and false statement was enlarged and set up in Liberty street. Mr. TILDEN did not propose that the Democratic newspapers and speakers should have any opinions of their own. The Liberty Street Bureau sent out its sheets filled with "editorials" written according to orders from head-quarters. The direction of the campaign was handed over to TILDEN. The direction of the party press was seized by the same cunning hand. If a point was to be made, it was made in all the newspapers of the Democratic faith simultaneously. When the fight was over, the bureau kept right on, and up to this hour it has furnished opinions and arguments to the Democratic papers of the country.

The same astute mind which has thus made use of an easy-going and not particularly enterprising party press, next conceived the notion of managing the Governors. The wires were laid from Gramercy Park to the various State capitals where Democratic Governors were to be inaugurated. We are not sure whether the stuff crammed into the various Messages was sent out from the Liberty Street Bureau in manifold sheets, or in the usual printed broadsides. It does not matter; the strings were pulled in New-York, and the Governors danced in Connecticut, North Carolina, Missouri, and elsewhere. Gov. ROBINSON, of this State, led off in a reckless tirade of political claptrap which did not belong in his Message, and which could not have been written by the same hand which penned the rest of that document. It was part of TILDEN'S little game. It was part of the scheme for making public opinion. And when Gov. ROBINSON argued the case of South Carolina, Louisiana, Florida, and Oregon, it was TILDEN'S rôle to sit still and pretend that this was all voluntary on the part of the new Governor. Then VANCE lifted up his voice in North Carolina and added his weighty opinion. He, too, was sure that TILDEN had been fairly elected, and "as the mouth-piece of more than a million people"—as if that were a portentous thing—he would see fair play. To be sure, he admitted that the "Tar-heels" had been "purged of rashness by the late civil war, but he [VANCE] was ready to sustain TILDEN as President elect.

This, too, was the burden of the song with which HARDIN went out of the Gubernatorial office in Missouri. HARDIN felt the pull of the wires from Liberty street, and he jerked his arms and legs to suit orders. He had his little say about military interference in elections, "fraud and usurpation," and so on, as per order. Poor HARDIN added his feeble mite to the general fund of public opinion which the Governors were expected to provide on this interesting occasion. There is a wide-spread feeling in the Democratic ranks that the Connecticut Governor [HUBBARD] outran his errand. Perhaps he used the whole of the Liberty street sheet, when it was only intended that he should make extracts. One may well fancy the mental botheration of the average Connecticut legislator, when he found Gov. HUBBARD roaring away about "an Electoral campaign with Federal agents," "full quivers of warrants to arrest and surround the ballot-boxes," "midnight possession of the halls of legislation," and such like fustian. The peaceful farmer from Weathersfield waited in vain for a word concerning the cultivation of the fragrant onion; there was no statesmanlike suggestion for the comfort of the Guilford long clam, or the quahaug of Hammonasset. The new Governor had his instructions from Democratic head-quarters. Local interests were nothing. The much-abused wooden nutmeg and the exotic tobacco-plant must give way to TILDEN and his new campaign for the Presidency. The average Connecticut man went away sorrowful. But Mr. TILDEN had another arrow in his quiver of public opinion. The Bureau of Nincompoops had bagged another Governor.

A more extended programme was called for, and the Democracy were ordered to assemble in mass conventions, bluster, and cry out for the inauguration of TILDEN. Yesterday was designated as the time for this impromptu demonstration. Acting under orders from Col. PELTON, TILDEN'S confidential agent, and manager of the Liberty Street Bureau, the Democrats assembled in several States and proceeded to "demonstrate." The outpouring does not seem to have been either spontaneous or enthusiastic. As a general thing, the reports indicate a great lack of harmony and numbers. There was apparently no cohesiveness in the rank and file, though the managers did their best to carry out their orders. It was a failure as far as "spontaneity" was concerned. And it is notorious that Mr. TILDEN especially spoke for spontaneity. He wanted something grand, impressive, rather in the "mighty uprising of the people line of business," as a theatrical person would say. But the people did not uprise to any great extent. The bureau may run the Democratic newspapers, or even the Democratic Governors, but the attempt to stir up the party is not successful. It is like building a bonfire on a snow-bank. The party does not fire up any more under TILDEN'S management.

A SUCCESSFUL DREAMER.

There have been many skillful and accomplished dreamers since the days when Joseph dreamed about his brothers to that extent that they felt that Egypt was the only place where he could do full justice to his extraordinary powers. There was the respectable Californian who dreamed of a party of emigrants starving in the snow, and who immediately harnessed up his horses and went and rescued them. There, too, was the Connecticut young man who lately dreamed that he had a father locked up in the refrigerator, and who, on subsequently unlocking the refrigerator, with a view to pork-chops, found a partially congealed parent whom he nobly proceeded to thaw out. As a successful practical dreamer, however, no one has surpassed Mr. FREEMAN GOVE, of the sloop Ida May, who owes his life to the prompt and intelligent manner in which he dreamed not many days ago.

In the latter part of December the Ida May was made fast to a wharf near the mouth of the Kennebunk river—which, by the bye, is not to be confounded with the Kennebec. The officers, with the exception of Mr. GOVE, went ashore to pass the night, and the crew, who was young and thoughtless, went to visit a local wife. Thus Mr. GOVE was left in the sole charge of the vessel, and in course of time, he went below and "turned in."

Mr. GOVE'S berth was both short and narrow, and by no means the sort of place which would be selected by an experienced dreamer for the comfortable practice of his art. Nevertheless, after remonstrating gently but firmly with the rats, and expressing the hope that they would have the decency to avoid meddling with his nose, he inserted himself into the berth and fell asleep. So far, there was nothing extraordinary in his conduct; but after an hour or two he began to dream—not in an idle and frivolous way, but with an earnest attention to his own interests and those of the owners of the Ida May which challenges our warmest admiration.

Mr. GOVE dreamed that some unknown person touched him on the shoulder and said, "You will be drowned." The touch instantly awoke him, but though the remark of his visitor still sounded in his ears, there was no one visible. His first impulse was one of indignation against the rats, and he expressed at some length his estimate of the character of a rat who would deliberately wake a man up in the middle of the night by whispering discouraging remarks in his ear. In a few moments, however, Mr. GOVE remembered that he had never before been spoken to by a rat, and he hence rapidly came to the conclusion that the person who had so mysteriously prophesied his death by drowning could not be one of the sloop's regular complement of rats. As he was quite certain that there was no human being but himself on board the vessel, he felt that the only true explanation of the affair was that he had dreamed a prophetic dream, and was really about to be drowned. Having arrived at this conclusion, he decided that if he was going to be drowned, he might as well get up and go on deck, where he could witness the spectacle; so he hurriedly drew on his boots, put on his hat, and sought the deck.

As soon as Mr. GOVE reached the deck he saw that one side of the sloop had been caught under the projecting edge of the wharf, and that the rising tide would soon cant her over so that she would fill and sink. He instantly seized a handspike and pried the vessel loose, thus extricating her from a danger that must have proved fatal had he not discovered it in time. Had he remained in his birth, it is morally certain that he would have been drowned, and it is equally sure that he would have remained there had he not dreamed in the prudent and able manner above set forth.

Of course, there are those who will ridicule Mr. GOVE'S skill as a dreamer, and will insist that his dream and the accident which it was apparently the means of averting merely constituted a coincidence. Undoubtedly things do happen occasionally which seem to stand in the relation of cause and effect, and which, nevertheless, properly come under the head of coincidences. Thus, Mr. TALMAGE has been the editor of a weekly paper, and has also preached a sermon showing what a wretched set of men journalists usually are. This is an example of a coincidence, whereas when Mr. TALMAGE says that after eating mince-pie, he sees Presbyterian ministers turning somersaults on the foot of his bed, we have a fine example of cause and effect. Now, Mr. GOVE'S dream was clearly the cause of the rescue of the sloop from a dangerous situation, and if we are to class the affair among coincidences, we might as well concede that no event has any relation to any other event, and that there is no such thing as cause and effect. Enlightened and unprejudiced people will promptly recognize the true meaning of Mr. GOVE'S adventure, and will not fail to respect his remarkable ability as a dreamer. He should abandon a seafaring life and devote himself exclusively to the profession of dreaming, or, if he dislikes to live on shore, he should take a situation on board a French steam-ship, where he would find constant employment in dreaming of accidents in the near future, and by showing the officers how to avoid them. The French steamers are sadly in want of sailors; but if they could command the services of a combined sailor and dreamer, they would gradually form the habit of coming into port, and their passengers would be saved the trouble and expense of transshipment in mid-ocean, or of landing on wintry beaches in uncomfortable life-cars.

THE NEW-JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

THE OPENING SESSION TO TAKE PLACE TO-DAY — CAUCUS OF REPUBLICANS— THE SPEAKERSHIP — A CONFERENCE COMMITTEE APPOINTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TRENTON, Jan. 8.—The excitement in this city over the opening of the session of the Legislature to-morrow is intense. All the hotels are crowded beyond their accommodation, and members of both political parties, from all parts of the State, have congregated here. The Republicans of the House held a caucus in the Assembly chamber beginning at 8:30 this evening. The discussion continued till after 11 o'clock. Some members were in favor of compromising with the Democrats, giving them the Speakership and retaining for the Republicans most of the other offices. Others demanded that the Speaker be a Republican. A full ticket was finally nominated with Allen C. Scovel, of Camden, as Speaker; John Y. Foster, Clerk; Herbert Patts, Reader, and John D. Fell, Sergeant at Arms. A committee, consisting of Messrs. Drake, the President of the caucus, Griggs and Stevens, was appointed to confer with the Democrats. The Democrats caucussed with Bergen of Somerset, in the chair. They made no nomination though. As to the Speakership, it was conceded that Rudolph Rahe, of Hudson, would be their candidate. They are holding back to await the action of the Republican caucus, in the hope of effecting a compromise. They are determined to resist any proposition to compromise which does not concede them the Speakership. The Democratic members of the Senate will not caucus till to-morrow. Dayton, of Bergen, has withdrawn from the contest for the Presidency, and Leon Abbott, of Hudson, will doubtless be the unanimous choice of the caucus. The House Conference Committees are in session now. The compromise proposed is Rahe for Speaker and Foster for Clerk.

ANNUAL RAILROAD MEETINGS.

OPENING OF CORPORATION WEEK IN PHILADELPHIA—MEETINGS OF THE READING NORTH PENNSYLVANIA, AND OTHER RAILROAD COMPANIES—A DREARY OUTLOOK FOR READING.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 8, 1877.

To-day marked the beginning of what has become by custom termed corporation week. The railroad companies having their termini here held their annual meetings, with the exception of the Pennsylvania Company. The greatest interest was centred in the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, because of the tribulations through which that corporation has passed during the year just closed. The meeting of the stockholders was the largest ever held, a number of New-York shareholders being present. Mr. Franklin B. Gower presented and read his annual report, which is not at all cheering to the unfortunate persons holding stock, and gives no hope for an improvement of affairs in the future. The President takes occasion to vent his wrath upon the parties who are members of the coal combination, and who he holds are responsible in a large measure for the condition of affairs into which his company has been plunged. The receipts were $13,919,993 55, and the expenses $6,129,757 72. The net profits for the year show a decrease of $850,607 from 1875. After deducting from the receipts the various other expenses of the year, such as drawbacks, damages, losses, insurance, taxes, &c., there is a debit balance against the road of $1,355,758 58. The Reading Coal and Iron Company, which is one of the main arteries of the railroad, operated last year at a loss of $203,642 59, and this deficit is shown after charging off $931,705 45 for depreciation of stock of coal on hand at the time of the dissolution of the monopoly. Again this loss is increased $653,359 03 by bad debts charged off, and the depreciation of property and the stock of iron. The entire amount due the public by the Coal and Iron Company is $17,728,041 68. The total amount of floating debt of both companies, after providing for all obligations maturing prior to April 1, 1877, is $8,272,359 33. President Gowen denied in positive terms the statements made in a New-York paper to the effect that money belonging to the company had been used to sustain the market value of the stock. Mr. William Whitney offered a resolution requiring the company to have the stock-books open for the inspection of the stockholders at least once in two months, so that it might be seen who holds stock in the company. It was agreed that the list of stockholders should be made out semi-annually for public inspection. The sales of Reading Railroad stock at the board to-day numbered 12,969 shares, being the bulk of the business done. The prices opened at 19⅛ and closed at the same figures.

The North Pennsylvania Railroad, which is an important outlet for the Lehigh Valley Railroad and the New-York and Philadelphia New Line here, held a meeting, the annual report of Mr. S. I. Comly showing the total receipts to have been $1,675,865 91, and the expenses $889,346 78. During the year two dividends of 3 per cent. each have been declared.

The report of the President of the Pennsylvania and New-York Canal and Railroad Company, R. H. Sayre, was read at the annual meeting of that corporation, and showed the gross receipts to have been for the past year, $1,678,254 34. This shows an increase in the earnings over 1875 of $197,213 47. There has been paid off during the year $20,000 for interest on bonds, leaving $398,109 08 applicable for taxes, dividends, &c.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 8.—A Portland press dispatch says: "A large railroad meeting was held here to-day. Resolutions were adopted asking members of Congress to use their endeavors to secure an extension of the time for 6 years for the completion of the Northern Pacific Railway from Duluth to Puget Sound; that the road be located and built on the south side of the Columbia River, as far East as Umatilla before crossing the river and thence to such connecting point as the best interests of the company may demand; that at least 40 miles of road be built each year, commencing at Portland and extending East until the whole of the road has been constructed; that as an earnest of good faith, work be commenced on the 1st of July, 1877; that the amount of land to be dropped from the northern branch be transferred to such railway company as may be organized by authority of Congress, to extend from Sioux City, Iowa, through the Black Hills to Portland. A resolution was also adopted authorizing the appointment of a committee to correspond with the officers of the Northern Pacific or other railway companies or capitalists, and ascertain what will be required of the people of Oregon to induce companies to commence the construction of a road connecting the State with the East."

PENNSYLVANIA AND NEW-YORK CANAL.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 8.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Pennsylvania and New-York Canal and Railroad Company took place to-day. The report of the President shows an increase in the net earnings for the past year of $69,235 47. The following officers were elected: President, R. H. Sayre; Directors, Asa Packer, W. W. Longstreet, Charles Hartsborne, J. J. Taylor, G. B. Linderman, Robert Lockhart, V. E. Piollet, R. A. Packer, J. H. Swover, J. W. Hollenback, W. H. Sayre, and E. P. Wilbur.

ALBANY.

WAITING FOR THE COMMITTEE LIST.

ALL QUIET AT THE STATE CAPITAL—THE BANKING REPORT—THE GOVERNOR'S POSITION ON THE QUESTION OF PUBLIC EDUCATION — LATEST RUMORS ABOUT THE COMMITTEES.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Monday, Jan. 8, 1877.

The session of the Legislature to-morrow afternoon will be mainly to hear the announcement of the committees by Speaker Sloan. He has been in Albany since the adjournment, but not in his rooms in the Delevan. He appears to have speedily found that he could only remain there at the risk of being driven insane by the crowds of importunate applicants for good places. To avoid these dangers he fled to a secluded place in another part of the city, leaving strict orders that his place of abode was to be kept a profound secret. Here, in consultation with Clerk Johnson, and his Private Secretary, he has been engaged during the day in grouping the 128 members of the Legislature into committees, and at nights has stolen out to take the air in secluded streets and backways, remote from observation. Some few members are to be seen about the Delavan and the capitol. Their anxiety in the matter of committees has brought them here. Among them is the ancient Spinola, who will probably figure conspicuously in the rear of the Committees on Salt, Grievances, Roads and Bridges, Indian Affairs, and other equally important bodies.

So far as news is concerned, there is little to report. The State departments are quiet, most of them having already sent in their annual reports. Mr. Ellis, Banking Superintendent, says that his report is now in the hands of the printer, and will probably be ready on Thursday or Friday. The amendments to the Savings Banking law, which the Governor suggests in his message, will probably be made by the Legislature without delay. It was never the wish of the bankers that securities should be rated at their market value, as the law now requires them to be. Savings banks buy bonds and other securities to hold until they mature, when, of course, only their face value is received. The market value of to-day is sufficient for the operations of the day, but affords no basis for permanent valuation. The present provision of the law was inserted in the bill when in conference committee, and solely at the instance of one Senator, who had a crochet on the subject, and refused to sign the report unless this concession were made. No harm could happen by allowing it to stand for a year in which no assets would be divided, and this session the provision will be amended, in accordance with the Governor's suggestion. The further suggestion that savings banks should not be permitted as they now are to leave 10 per cent. of the aggregate deposits, and also the current cash daily balances, with an ordinary bank or trust company, will probably give rise to much discussion. If the 10 per cent. deposits were kept in the vaults of the savings banks, as suggested, the effect would be, among other things, to withdraw from circulation in this State, about 25 or 30 millions of dollars; and it is doubtful whether small savings banks in the country could afford to build the expensive vaults and safes which would be required for the safe-keeping of so much ready cash. By the law of last year, a savings bank deposit is made a first debt with a discount bank, and if the bank which held it became insolvent, it is scarcely probable that its assets would be so small as not to be sufficient for such a sum as a savings bank would be likely to have on deposit with it. The managers of discount banks are complaining of the savings banks, which they say, by the higher interest paid by them withdraw money from other banks.

The report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction will, it is said, discuss the position taken by the Governor on the subject of the public schools. The chief point of objection seems to be the proposition to appropriate a specific sum every year for school purposes, instead of fixing a rate on the taxable property of the State, as is now done. Prior to 1867, the State appropriated annually for school purposes a specified sum, which was paid proportionately to the school districts of the State. The deficiency which might exist in each at the end of the school year was paid from a special tax levied upon the parents of the children who attended the schools. In 1867 the "Rate bill" was abolished, and the entire expense of the schools made a general charge upon the State, the rate of the general tax being raised 1¼ mills. A rate was selected in preference to a fixed sum, because the number of children in the schools increases annually, and growing wealth should be taxed for growing population. The Governor's assertion that it is a clear violation of personal rights to levy taxes to support free academies, colleges, and high schools, seems to be assented to by many who dissent from his other positions; but it is very certain that if any move is made in the Legislature tending to the withdrawal of State support from these institutions, there will be a howl in all parts of the State, and such a rush of the "friends of education" to Albany as will probably prevent any serious attempt to carry out the Governor's suggestion. It is remarkable what an army of "friends of education," are seen to swarm in the lobbies of the Capitol and committee rooms whenever anything affecting these free academies and colleges is before the Legislature. The State Engineer's department is busy with the reports of railroad companies. These have lost some of their interest since the more important railroads have adopted the plan of publishing their annual report the same day that they transmit it to the department. The Erie and Central Roads made their reports public some time ago. Nearly all the street railroads of New-York have sent in their reports, but no general results of the year's business, which is really the important thing to the general public, can be arrived at until all are in and tabulated by the department, which will not be for some weeks.

It is generally understood to-night that Mr. Sloan will not announce the committees until Wednesday. It would seem that the list of regular committees is nearly if not quite completed, but the Reappointment Committee has to be appointed, and there are a number of small offices in the Speaker's gift which Mr. Sloan has not yet decided how to fill. It is his intention to announce the whole list at one time, and thereby get a very troublesome and fatiguing business off his hands.

The number of members here received numerous accessions by the late evening trains, many of the New-York delegation being among the arrivals. There is naturally much gossip about the forthcoming list, but it is of a very mild character. Everybody seems convinced that Mr. Sloan, and Mr. Sloan only, has it in his possession, and the opinion is quite unanimous that he is the sort of man who will keep it there. We are spared the calamity this year of having "prominent politicians" from New-York walking about the Delavan with committee lists in their pockets, and showing them in private rooms and corners to a select circle of friends and associates. This is a great and healthy change from the old style. All predictions up to this time

WASHINGTON.

DEMOCRATS FORCED TO PLACE THEMSELVES ON RECORD.

YESTERDAY'S SESSION IN THE HOUSE—A RESOLUTION INTRODUCED BY A MEMBER FROM TEXAS—THE QUESTION OF STATE RIGHTS RENEWED—LAWLESS INVASION DENOUNCED—HOW THE DEMOCRACY TRIED TO ESCAPE A VOTE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—The session of the House to-day was distinguished for the frequency with which the yeas and nays were called to suspend the rules for the purpose of adopting certain resolutions. Usually, after two or three roll calls, on Monday, the House becomes weary of the struggle to crowd through bills or resolutions under a suspension of the rules, and adjournment follows; but to-day the roll was called six times on as many propositions involving suspensions of the rules. The proposition which excited most interest was one introduced by Mr. Mills, of Texas, declaring that the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the rights of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to the balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depends, and denouncing the lawless invasion by armed force of the soil of any State or Territory, no matter under what pretext, as among the gravest of crimes. It will be observed that the first declaration of this resolution enunciates the broadest State rights doctrine, and under its cover, were it not for a constitutional prohibition, involuntary slavery might be re-established by the States. The latter portion of the resolution, denouncing lawless invasion by armed force, was carefully drawn to deceive the unwary into voting for the entire proposition, a net being spread for this purpose by introducing the word "lawless." A second reading of the resolution revealed its precise character, and the more conservative Democrats, in order to defeat a yea and nay vote, made an effort to adjourn; but this was defeated, the Republicans voting against adjournment in order to force the Democrats to record themselves on the declaration of the resolution. The denunciation of lawless invasion was unobjectionable, and could a division of the question have been had, that portion of the resolution might have received a unanimous vote. Mr. Holman tried hard to secure an adjournment, demanding tellers when the result of a rising vote was announced as against him, but the vote by tellers was even more decidedly against adjournment than the rising vote. This was accomplished by the Republicans voting solidly with the State rights Democrats, these two extremes uniting to secure a common object, but from very different motives. Adjournment being thus defeated, the yeas and nays were secured on the resolution, resulting—yeas 107, nays, 82, the yeas being all Democrats. A number of Democrats declined to vote. There were of these at least 25 or 30, as shown by the other votes of the day.

THE CAPITAL POLICE BOARD.

A BILL PASSED IN THE HOUSE FOR ITS ABOLISHMENT—THIS ACTION APPROVED OF BY THE PRESIDENT—WHY THE BILL DID NOT PASS THE SENATE—AN INVESTIGATION TO BE MADE—GAMBLING AND LIQUOR HOUSES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—The nomination of Police Commissioners was not made to-day, probably because the President had been consulted about a bill which was passed in the House unanimously, abolishing the Police Board and imposing its duties upon the District Commissioners. The President expressed his approval of this action. The bill went to the Senate, where it was expected to be passed without objection, but the Senate was just on the point of adjourning, and many Senators were gone away. Mr. Randolph objected to the third reading to-day because of the want of a quorum. There was no appearance of objection to the purpose of the bill, and it will probably be passed to-morrow. The report about town that the President would retain Mr. Murtagh, of the Republican, on the new board was the direct cause of the passage of the bill. There is no authority for the statement of Murtagh's retention, and the fact that the President approves the abolition of the board, or at least is not opposed to it, would lead to an inference opposite from the report. The board has been a useless and ornamental appendage of the District Government, and as irresponsible as useless. Under the District Commissioners there will be less investigation of the reasons why crime has been permitted to exist in the past, and more active measures to suppress it in the future. The investigating will be done by a special committee of the House appointed to-day on motion of Mr. Le Moyne, of Illinois. There can be very little doubt that at intervals for many years the proprietors of gambling houses have paid to somebody large sums of money for immunity from prosecution. It would be interesting and useful information to know how it was divided, and it will also be an interesting inquiry how 2,000 licenses to sell liquors have been procured in Washington.

THE REBEL WAR CLAIMS.

THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE DISOBEYING THE ORDERS OF THE HOUSE—HOW A RESOLUTION OF INSTRUCTION WAS DEFEATED—NORTHERN DEMOCRATS PLACED ON THE RECORD—MR. HEWITT'S REFUSAL TO VOTE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—Mr. Hunter, of Indiana, to-day directed the attention of the House to the fact that the Committee on the Judiciary had failed to report within the time prescribed by the House on the resolutions instructing that committee to report a constitutional amendment prohibiting the payment by the United States of any claim arising from the use or destruction of property by the Federal forces during the rebellion, and offered a resolution requiring the committee to report the amendment to the House within two days, which was defeated for lack of the necessary two-thirds vote. The Northern Democrats voting against the resolution were, Ainsworth of Iowa, Caulfield of Illinois, Humphries of Indiana, Landers of Connecticut, Wiggington of California, and Wood of New-York. Had these six votes been cast in the affirmative, the resolution would have been adopted. Mr. Hewitt of New-York, was in his seat when his name was called, but declined to vote.

A MASS OF DEMOCRATIC AFFIDAVITS.

THE LOUISIANA TESTIMONY NOW PRINTING—AFFIDAVITS ALIKE IN SIZE AND WORDING—SEVERAL THOUSAND OF THESE DOCUMENTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—A glance at the Democratic Louisiana testimony now printing, upon which the Democrats relied to disprove the existence of fraud and violence in Louisiana during and prior to the late election, gives some curious information. There is little or no attempt at specific denial of the charges made by the Republicans. Their case consists of an immense mass of what they call affidavits, made upon a printed form about six inches in length by four in width, simply containing the declaration of the affiant that there was no violence or intimidation at the poll where he voted. The so-called affidavits are alike in size and wording for each printing, and, in fact, vary very little throughout the whole State. Where the affiant is colored it is so printed, and those for the white affidavit makers are a little stronger than for the colored. There are many thousands of these documents which will make perhaps 600 printed pages, or two-thirds of the Democratic case. In each parish one man usually attests all these papers, and they look very much as though one man in each parish had filled them up. Looking them over is enough to demonstrate to any one why the Democratic Committee sent to New-Orleans, refused to give the Republicans a copy of them, and why they have held them back so long before presenting them for publication. It is extremely doubtful, also, whether the Returning Board ever saw or heard of one-tenth of the stuff the Democracy propose to give the country to show that Tilden was elected in Louisiana.

THE LATE TREASURY ROBBERY.

ARREST OF A CLERK NAMED F. S. WINSLOW—THE AMOUNT STOLEN—THE OFFICIALS RETICENT IN THE MATTER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—F. S. Winslow, who was arrested to-day for the theft of the funds belonging to the Illinois National Bank, has been employed in the cash-room of the Treasury, comparatively only a short time. He appeared at his desk as usual this morning, and remarking that he was glad the detectives had sifted the matter of the robbery, began his work without delay. He was noticed to be very reticent during the day, but gave no indications of any agitation whatever until about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when he was arrested by Messrs. Brooks and Benson, of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury. Winslow was searched, and two new $100 bills were found upon him. He merely said that he came by them honestly and made no further remark, as he was informed that whatever admission he should make might be used as evidence against him. Winslow was not in the employ of the Treasury at the time of the Halleck robbery of $47,000, having been appointed since that occurrence. The amount lately stolen was $11,990, nearly all of which was in $100 bills, and of this amount $11,200 has been returned. The authorities are still disinclined to give any information concerning the party who returned the money, contenting themselves with saying that the guilty person shall be brought to the bar of public justice and the outrage upon the service fully vindicated. Winslow is a man who was very highly respected in the office, his department always having been of a quiet and gentlemanly order. He had no confederate in the crime. The old clerks in the case-room, and particularly those who have been on one or two previous occasions had the misfortune to be under a cloud during investigations of thefts that have occurred, are being much elated that the general suspicion has been removed, and that they are no longer the subjects of detective shadowings and constant espionage.

AMUSEMENTS.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

Mr. Boucicault's comedy called "Forbidden Fruit" was reproduced at Wallack's Theatre, last evening, with the same distribution of characters referred to when the piece was first performed. Under the circumstances, neither the play nor its representation exact a long review. The fact that "Forbidden Fruit" is rather a farce than a comedy need not be too loudly deplored, for the days we live in are not so cheerful that opportunities to be merry ought always to be discarded, and the severest critic does not always care to visit the theatre for his enlightenment. The équivoque of some of the scenes in the work, and the broadness of some portions of the dialogue, suggest more serious reproach than the lightness of the piece, but, in extenuation of this defect, it may be said that the indelicate parts of "Forbidden Fruit" bear a very small proportion indeed to its droll incidents, which are so numerous that the laughter of the audience is almost incessant. The actors, as we have already implied, retain the rôles they originally filled. Mr. Beckett, as Buster, supplies one of his most amusing personations, and Miss Germon portrays with surprising comic vim the airy and independent Zulu. To Mr. Montague, Mr. Arnott, Miss Dyas, and Mme. Ponisi are allotted, respectively, Mr. Dove, Sergeant Derringer. Mrs. Dove, and Mrs. Buster, and thus the cast brings before the public most of the best-liked artists in Mr. Wallack's company. "Forbidden Fruit" is to be given until Jan. 22, only.

MR. BOOTH'S REPRESENTATIONS.

"King Lear" was performed at the Lyceum Theatre last evening, with Mr. Booth in the titular rôle. King Lear is one of the characters in which Mr. Booth impresses us least profoundly, and it appeared to us, yesterday, that his performance was, if anything, a trifle harder and more conventional than it is wont to be. Mr. Booth lacked neither dignity nor vigor, and occasionally—in the scene on the heath, for example—there was something of pathos in his tone and manner, but, as a whole, the personation was deficient in the majesty of ruin, a majesty of which the expression has not been attained to—except, perhaps, by Signor Salvini, in "Saul"—since Edwin Forrest trod the stage. The general performance at the Lyceum is of the usual character. Mr. Booth will only appear thrice more in "King Lear" during his present engagement.

PARK THEATRE.

The programme at the Park Theatre was changed last evening, and another drama from the fertile pen of Mr. Frederick Marsden was produced. "Zip; or, Point Lynde Light," is constructed upon Mr. Marsden's familiar principles. It is supplied with a main story, into the intricacies of which the clearest mind would scarce dare peer, and woven into the woof of the drama are a series of bright and comical incidents in which a girlish heroine, whom Miss Lotta portrays, is invariably distinguished for readiness of wit, eccentricity, and pluck. There is a confusion of parents in this particular piece, and its early scenes disclose a plot to wreck a ship bearing homeward Zip's mother, by keeping the lantern of a light-house in darkness, and kindling a false beacon on the rockiest part of the coast. The villains who are concerned in this matter murder the keeper of the light-house and cut away the bridge connecting it with the shore, but Zip, after whiling away the larger portion of the act with songs, dances, and kittenish pranks, suddenly rises to the emergency, swings across three feet of ocean by means of a rope, and fires a calcium-light skilfully arranged to dazzle the audience and spare the eyes of the mariner at sea. It will be inferred from this prelude to the business of the play that nothing would be gained by rehearsing the events it illustrates. From a literary standpoint, "Zip" is downright rubbish, but it serves its purpose in keeping Miss Lotta and her ever-potent methods of pleasing on the stage, and the dramatist undoubtedly had no other purpose in view when he addressed himself to his task.

SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS.

A new setting of one of Offenbach's operettas was made known by the San Francisco Minstrels, yesterday evening, under the title of "The Happy Moke." Both Mr. Birch and Mr. Backus appear in "The Happy Moke," which is full of music and uproarious fun. The usual "parlor entertainment" and a series of "acts" preface the operetta, and, in the dialogue which progresses while the colored warblers are silent, Messrs. Backus and Birch carry on their wonted amusing conversations upon topics of the day.

FATAL ACCIDENT.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 8.—The roof of the Boston and Albany Railroad freight house was crushed in by snow this afternoon. John Lovett, an employe, was killed, and five others injured.

GENERAL POLITICAL NEWS.

AFFAIRS IN LOUISIANA.

INAUGURATION OF GOV. PACKARD—ADDRESSES BY GOV. KELLOGG AND THE NEW GOVERNOR—THE PERFORMANCES AT ST. PATRICK'S HALL—MR. NICHOLLS SWORN TO SUCCEED M'ENERY AS A PRETENDER—MARKED CONTRAST BETWEEN THE CONDUCT OF THE REPUBLICANS AND THE DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 8.—The anniversary of the battle of New-Orleans under Gen. Jackson has been an eventful one here to-day, adding more "Governors" to the already long list. Gov. Packard was peacefully inaugurated at the State-house, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, and as many spectators as could be admitted into the Capitol. The oath of office was administered to him by Chief Justice Ludeling, of the Supreme Court. Gov. Packard then read a very temperate and sensible Message to the Legislature. During the ceremonies within a large and noisy crowd assembled in the streets near the State-house. It was more mischievous than riotous. Though composed of an element liable to create disturbance, the only harm done was in cutting up and spoiling the private carriage belonging to Gov. Kellogg.

More dramatic ceremonies attended the swearing in of Mr. Nicholls. He took the oath usually administered to Governors—on the balcony of St. Patrick's Hall, fronting Lafayette square—before a large assemblage, and delivered a short address to the people.

The city is quiet to-night, but a complete Democratic Police force has been organized, and a collision of opposing forces must come sooner or later.

REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 8.—There was little excitement in the vicinity of the State-house to-day attending the inauguration of Gov. Packard. There was a heavy force of Police on duty, who admitted those who had passes. Not more than 200 persons were in the streets. At 1 o'clock Gov. Packard entered the House of Representatives, which was festooned with flags, many ladies being in attendance, and the band playing "Hail to the Chief." After the Legislature was called to order, Gov. Kellogg, introducing Gov. Packard, said: "Circumstances recall in many respects the condition of affairs prevailing four years ago when I entered upon the duties of chief magistrate. Then, as now, a claimant to the same position went through the form of inauguration at the same time in another place; then as now the minority of members legally declared elected to the General Assembly organized into a semblance of a Legislature; then as now it was declared that the Government which represented the will of the majority would never be recognized by the minority; then as now the business community were dragooned by a tyrannical junta into pronunciamentoes of tax resistance. Here comparison ceases. Four years ago the incoming Administration received no aid from the Government it superseded; every department of the State Government is now in accord with the legally-recognized and unquestioned Governor of the State, acknowledged even by that body which is elsewhere setting up a pretense of Government. I introduce to you the next Governor of Louisiana, and tender to him, in behalf of the outgoing Government, the prompt recognition of the justice of his claims, and every aid and encouragement it may be in our power to bestow. An original Republican, an intimate friend and co-laborer of the lamented late Lieut. Gov. Dunn, always faithful to his party, of tried ability and integrity, in your name and my own, I bid him God speed."

He said the pleasure with which he received his credentials of the representatives of the people was clouded with the recollection that many colaborers in the cause of Republican freedom had fallen in death, and that thousands had been constrained through fear to avoid the ballot box, or to vote against their will. Why this recourse to violence? Majorities had no occasion to use force. Misorities alone resorted to force. He had received a majority of the votes freely, fairly, and lawfully cast; he had been declared elected Governor in the manner required by the Constitution and laws of the State, he would invoke all the powers conferred upon him to enforce obedience to the laws, and to command an enduring peace for Louisiana. The amendments to the criminal laws recently adopted provided that prosecution in capital cases might be either by information or indictment, and authorizes the Attorney General to change venue in any case when, in his judgment, a fair trial could not be had in the parish in which the crime had been committed. These and other enactments would enable the law officers in cases of conspiracy, such as had characterized the last election, to remove the accused from beyond the influence and power of the conspirators. The Constitution of the United States afforded adequate remedies where combinations existed beyond the power of the State authorities to deal with. The nation has in the executive chair a President to whom he never faltered in his obligation to guard the national honor. Having entered the union of the States, it is no less his duty than it is his pleasure under the Constitution, to maintain the rights of the humblest citizen in every portion of the national domain. The constitutionality of the laws under which the State Government claimed title, had never been successfully questioned. The party denying its valid title because the votes polled by violent and unlawful practices had not been counted, were especially estopped by their own action under the same law in 1872, when the Returning Board, constituted by and to accord with that party, threw out statements of votes actually cast in several parishes, and on that canvass based the pretended title of the McEnery Government. He enumerated a number of national measures necessary for the welfare of the State; such as the protection of the sugar and rice industries; national aid for levees, and the construction of railroads through Texas and New-Mexico to the Pacific coast, with connections at New-Orleans; the establishment of commercial intercourse with South America by postal connection; expressing satisfaction that Gov. Hayes, President-elect, stood ready to maintain the policy of the Republican Party in this regard, in contradistinction to the traditional policy of the Democracy; and said: "It will be my object to keep in view the obligation to execute the laws and maintain the public peace; to convince my constituents that every act is intended to promote their welfare; to secure to the State a just proportion of national favor; to develop those physical and moral resources upon which the prosperity and progress of every State must depend, and to appease, by a just and liberal policy, the discontent which has so long repressed the energies and darkened the future of the most favored land in the American Union."

About 2 o'clock this afternoon, when Lieut. Gov. Antoine had finished making some remarks at the inauguration of Gov. Packard, a crowd of about 600 persons collected on Royal street, in front of the State-house, and after hooting and jeering at the Police at the door began pelting them with bricks, shells and other missles, and yelling: "Let's put them out." The doors were closed, and some parties then proceeded to deface Gov. Kellogg's carriage, which was standing near. Boyland Nicholls, "Chief of Police," appeared and dispersed the crowd.

A large crowd assembled in front of the Masonic Hall, to-night, where Nicholls' Police are being enrolled. As an attack on the station-houses is apprehended, they have been barricaded and reinforced to prevent the Democrats from taking them by force. The Democrats are much elated over reports from Washington that President Grant will not recognize either Governor for the present. The city is quiet.

By noon a large crowd had assembled at St. Patrick's Hall, entirely filling the building, and by 1 o'clock some 5,000 people had assembled in the streets, Lafayette square, and on adjacent buildings. At 1 o'clock Mr. Nicholls left the City Hotel for the hall, and appeared on the balcony of St. Patrick's Hall at 1:10, where, after prayer by Rev. Dr. Palmer, the oath of office was administered to Mr. Nicholls and Wiltz by Judge Tessen, after which Nicholls made an address of the usual character and without any expressions of special significance.

The balcony of St. Patrick's Hall was draped with the flags of all nations, surmounted by the American flag. As the accumulation of Nicholls' address a benediction was pronounced by Rev. Father Allen. Nicholls and Wiltz were then escorted by a Legislative committee to Odd-fellows Hall, where they received the congratulations of their friends. The assemblage in and about St. Patrick's Hall, estimated at from ten to fifteen thousand, including a large number of ladies, quietly dispersed. Nicholls has appointed Col. Thomas Boyland "Chief of the Metropolitan Police," and Boyland has established his head-quarters at Masonic Hall, where a force is being organized.

The bogus Legislature to-day passed a bill amending the Election law, and repealing sections 23 and 26 providing for the manner of and returns of elections. The bill provides that the Governor, Speaker of the House, and three Senators representing different parties shall constitute a Board of Canvassers who are authorized to canvass and make returns of the votes cast at the recent election, and to authorize contests for office in certain cases.

THE INVESTIGATIONS—FURTHER EVIDENCE OF THE TERRORISM USED TO REPRESS REPUBLICAN VOTERS—THREATS, VIOLENCE, AND MURDER.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 8.—The Senate Committee resumed the examination of the election in East Feliciana to-day. John W. Harrel, planter, testified that colored people were intimidated and afraid to vote the Republican ticket, and that his hands were threatened that if they voted the Republican ticket they could not live in the parish, and that he would have been afraid of his life had he voted the Republican ticket.

James Law (colored) testified that he had been a leader of the Republican Party in the parish, and had been elected to the Legislature twice; that through fear he had left the parish before the last election, having been threatened and his store set on fire; also that the colored people believed it unsafe to vote the Republican ticket; he narrated the killing of John Gair and other acts of violence testified to by other witnesses.

The Senate Sub-Committee continued the examination of affairs in East Baton Rouge. S. Kullen testified that he was surprised at the peace and order attending the election; the only intimidation practiced was by colored Republicans; that the Returning Board had returned him as elected to an office, but had declined to accept it as he was not elected.

Tony Foster (colored) testified that the election was quiet and peaceable and that he had voted the Democratic ticket.

H. P. Billupe (colored) testified that he saw 50 colored men marched to the polls by a guard of white men and voted the Democratic ticket, being required to show their tickets before voting.

Jackson Chaney, colored, swore he voted the Democratic ticket because the whites said he would have to or be driven out of the country.

Eliza Beechum, colored, testified that last August masked men came to her house, tied a rope around the neck of her husband, Monroe Beechum, and carried him off; has never seen him since; he had attended a Republican meeting a few days before.

Cato Haines, colored, stated that he knew of the hanging of Henry Martin, Levin Foster, Bill Lewis, and W. Rhodes; the latter two were taken with him; they ordered him to dig a grave for the first two; they then put ropes around their necks and told witness to go home; he afterward saw them hanging to a tree; they were all cold men and not in the Mount Pleasant fight.

David Jones, colored, testified that he was a Deputy United States Marshal at the Port Hudson polls last election; H. C. Young made him stop distributing Republican tickets, and the colored people told him they were afraid to vote the Republican ticket. Nothing of importance before the House Committee.

THE FLORIDA INVESTIGATIONS.

RETURN TO WASHINGTON OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE—A FALSE REPORT CONTRADICTED—THE EVIDENCE TO BE PRINTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—The Florida Investigation Committee has returned, but nothing definite can be stated as to what their conclusions will be. Reports have been telegraphed from here to-day alleging that the members of the committee agree that Florida was carried for Tilden and Drew, the last named being the Democratic candidate for Governor. This report is not true. Evidence was taken by the committee acting as two sub-committees, and neither sub-committee is familiar with the evidence taken by the other. The entire committee formally agreed that no conclusion should be attempted or given out until all the evidence shall be printed, and full opportunity is offered each member to examine it. The evidence will not be printed for a couple of weeks, and until then no fair conclusions can be reached. There is, least of all, any reason to suppose that any Republican member of the committee has made up his mind that Tilden is elected. The Senate Committee will return in a few days, and it is learned that they have taken a mass of the most convincing testimony in support of the Republican position.

THE OREGON CASE.

TESTIMONY OF CONSIDERABLE IMPORTANCE HEARD—TILDEN'S MONEY TRACED TO OREGON—HOW CRONIN'S CONSCIENCE WAS RELIEVED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—The point of the testimony in the Oregon inquiry to-day is of considerable importance, because the fact has been privately denied—and the denial has been supposed to be the basis of the defense—that any money was transmitted to Oregon. Now, Charles Dimon, of No. 115 Liberty street, New-York, testified that he really did transmit the money represented in the Martin and Runyon check, and that he has an acknowledgment of its receipt. The money was sent by telegraph. The case is thus far made out, that Pelton, Gov. Tilden's confidential secretary, had $3,000 of somebody's money sent to Oregon on the day of the meeting of the Electors, and that he has since tried to keep the fact from the committee. It is further shown that Cronin, having been the Democratic Elector receiving the highest number of votes, was the only person who could carry out the Democratic programme; that he took advantage of this position, in which he found himself, to be conscience-stricken till he secured $3,000 to pay expenses of $500 dollars at the most. The Cronin college cost money, and money went from New-York just about the proper time that it would have been needed.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections continued their investigation of the Oregon Electoral matter this morning, by the examination of Charles Dimond, of No. 115 Liberty street, New-York. Mr. Dimond testified that he is a banker, doing business for A. E. & C. E. Tilton, of New-York, for Ladd & Bush, of Oregon, and others; witness met the firm of Martin & Runyon on the 6th of December last for the first time, having had no business transactions with them previous to that date; on the 6th Runyon came to witness' office and left word that he [Runyon] wanted to see witness; during the day witness went to Runyon's office and Mr. Runyon gave him a check for $8,000, payable to Ladd & Bush, of Oregon; Runyon wanted the money transferred to Oregon; witness could not handle the check, as it was made payable to Ladd & Bush, of Oregon, and so informed Runyon. Mr. Runyon then drew a check for $8,000 payable to witness or order, and witness deposited it in the St. Nicholas Bank. Witness gave Runyon a telegraphic dispatch which read: "To Messrs. Ladd & Bush, Salem, Oregon. Martin and Runyon have deposited $8,000 to your account." The dispatch was in cipher, and witness declined to explain the cipher, as it would destroy its future use, and it is used by him and those he does business with. He was not requested to put the dispatch in cipher, and he was not requested to keep the transaction secret. Ladd & Bush telegraphed witness Dec. 11 that his message had been received, and authorized him to receive the $8,000 to Martin & Runyon. Witness could not say whether he had paid a draft from Oregon on him on Dec. 8, or not. He could tell nothing about the drafts paid by him without referring to his books. He has had no money deposited with him for the use of Ladd & Bush since Dec. 6. He does not know who ordered Runyon to draw the check for $8,000, and does not know what the money was for; he has no recollection of seeing a draft bearing the name of Bellinger, of Portland, Oregon; witness keeps a letter-book of all his correspondence with Ladd & Bush, of Oregon; the $8,000 was not deposited with Ladd & Bush except by telegraph, as stated; witness does not know why the $8,000 was returned unused; witness went to the office of Martin & Runyon last Saturday, but held no conversation with either of them, except as to the necessity of his [witness] coming to Washington to testify; Runyon never told witness at whose instance the $8,000 was transferred to Oregon; witness does not know Burton Harrison; he never saw W. T. Pelton but once, and has never had any business transactions with Mr. Pelton. In reply to Senator Morton, witness stated that he had told the committee all he knew about this $8,000 transaction, and that he would produce, without subpœna, his letter-book containing the correspondence with Ladd & Bush, and Ladd & Tilton, of Oregon, and his bank-book showing just what business transactions he has had with parties in Oregon since November last. In reply to Mr. Mitchell the witness stated that he did not know of any moneys having been sent to Oregon by express since November last. Mr. Dimon will appear before the committee, with the letter and bank-books called for, next Thursday.

THE VICE PRESIDENT ELECT.

MR. WHEELER SAID TO BE ON HIS WAY TO OHIO—INVITED TO A CONFERENCE WITH GOV. HAYES.

RONDOUT, Jan. 8.—The Daily Freeman in its issue this afternoon announces that Hon. William A. Wheeler left New-York this morning for Fremont, Ohio, where he will be joined by Gov. Hayes to-morrow. That journal further states that Gov. Hayes invited the conference, and up to the present time he has not committed himself in any way with reference to the personnel or policy of his administration beyond the utterances of his letter of acceptance. Mr. Wheeler will not proceed to Washington at present. The source of this information is not given, but it is stated, apparently, on good authority.

LATEST NEWS BY CABLE.

TURKEY AND RUSSIA.

GREEKS PRAYING TO BE LET TAKE ARMS AGAINST THE COMMON ENEMY—THE FORCES OF THE TWO NATIONS.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 8.—The inhabitants of Adrianople, both Greeks and Turks, have asked authority of the Government to take up arms against their common enemy. The Sultan has ordered the Grand Vizier to thank them, saying he hoped to be able to preserve the peace, but in case of war he expected the co-operation of all his subjects, without distinction of race or religion. He would lead the Army himself.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—A Berlin dispatch to the News says the German Government has received no intimation that Khalil Cherif has been appointed Turkish Ambassador. The reports in circulation that he had been objected to were therefore premature.

The Times dispatch from Pera states that the Porte has decreed the abolition of the Ministry of Finance, and intends to intrust this branch of administration to two European directors, an Englishman and a Frenchman.

The Daily News special from Vienna says the Hungarian Gen. Klapka has inspected the arsenals and stores of Turkey, and in his report certifies that the Turkish Government has 1,000,000 breech-loaders and accoutrements sufficient for 400,000 men. The Turkish Army in Bulgaria is rapidly increasing. It is stated that 83,000 men from all parts of the Empire have arrived in that provinces within the last eight days.

[The Pera correspondent of the London Times writes:—"The Turkephiles insist that the powers have no right to interfere with the internal organization of Turkey. They are sure that Turkey will never admit that right; that she will dispute it to the last drop of her blood; that she has an Army of 400,000 men, well provided with the best war material; that, with her fortresses on the Danube and the defiles of the Balkan, she is more than a match for Russia; that she will confront Russia single-handed; sure that a first campaign will scarcely have commenced before Germany, Austria, and England find it necessary for their own sakes to join her, and that, in short, not only is there a good deal of life in the 'Sick Man' yet, but that the breath in his body is the vital air on which alone Europe itself can subsist. The Russophobes, on the other hand, are quite sure that, abandoned to herself, Turkey would be overpowered on the first encounter. Turkey, they say, could only bring 180,000 men into the field next January, against 250,000 well-trained Russians, 20,000 Montenegrins, 60,000 Servians, and as many Roumanians, even taking no account of the Greeks of the Hellenic Kingdom. The meeting of the conference, which England proposed, was only a Russian blind intended to gain time for the mobilization of the Army and for the advance of that severe season which is to be Russia's most formidable ally. On the expiration of the present armistice—i. e., on Innocents Day—these alarmists tell us this mock conference will break up. In six weeks after the declaration of war a Russian Army may reach the Bosphorus, and if England should then wish so save Constantinople, history will record against her the fatal words, 'Too late, too late!'"

A Belgrade telegram announces that the Skoptschina has been prorogued until June, because the Prince and his Ministers were not willing to meet it in the present critical circumstances. The Standard's special from Belgrade says Gen. Nikitine is working at plans for transporting a Russian Army Corps through Roumania to Servia.

The Daily News special from Vienna states that Lord Salisbury has demanded that Chefket Pasha, the principal actor in the Bulgarian atrocities, be tried again, Mr. Baring, Secretary of the British Legation, having reported that the trial was a farce.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE CONFERENCE.

A STATEMENT BY THE FRENCH REPRESENTATIVE—A FEW MORE SITTINGS ONLY TO BE HELD.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—At a meeting of the Plenipotentiaries yesterday Count Chaudordy, the French representative, is said to have stated that many of the motives alleged by the Porte for refusing the propositions of the conference appeared to him very legitimate, and the Plenipotentiaries would find difficulty in combating them. He added, "France will never give countenance to an unjust cause."

LONDON, Jan. 8.—Reuter's dispatch from Constantinople states that at to-day's meeting of the Conference, Signor Corti, the Italian ambassador, in the name of the other European plenipotentiaries, controverted the arguments adduced by Safvet Pasha at the latest sitting. The Marquis of Salisbury supported Signor Corti's views. The Turkish representatives nevertheless did not withdraw their refusal to accept the conditions proposed by the powers. They, however, took part in the conversation on the guarantees, especially on that relative to an international commission. The discussion was animated, and at the close of the sitting was adjourned until Wednesday.

It is generally believed in Constantinople that the Conference will only hold a few more sittings. Lord Salisbury will probably prolong his stay beyond the date for which he had engaged a steamer.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times explains that the Turkish stubbornness is partly due to the fact that while the Turks are aware that modifications have been conceded by the European powers, still the proposals as originally presented by the Plenipotentiaries have not as yet been officially withdrawn. The difficulty is, therefore, to save the dignity of the powers by finding a form in which to clothe the compromise they are ready to agree to. Lord Salisbury is making the most strenuous efforts in this direction.

The Pera dispatch of the Daily Telegraph says no ultimatum was presented in the conference yesterday. The endeavor was made to ascertain what concessions the Porte would grant. The Turks strenuously and absolutely refused the form of an international commission proposed by the powers, but would possibly consent that the nomination of Governors be made subject to their approval, and would stipulate that the form of the proposal be considerably modified, so as to conform to the arrangement existing in regard to Lebanon. The conference will probably conclude its sittings this week. The hope of a satisfactory conclusion is very faint.

A dispatch to the Daily Telegraph, sent early yesterday morning from Pera, reports that Midhat Pasha visited Lord Salisbury on Sunday to discuss the possibility of mutual concessions, but no actual decision was reached. It is generally believed that the most important work of the conference during the next few days will be done at private interviews between the members. One or two more formal meetings will shew whether an agreement is possible. If this is found to be the case, it is almost certain that Turkey will demand that the conference, before it disperses, shall take official note of the Porte's solemn declaration that Midhat Pasha's Constitution will be carried out.

A dispatch from Vienna reports that Count Andrassy, in conversation, continues to express his belief in a peaceful result.

FOREIGN BUSINESS AFFAIRS.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—The Mark Lane Express, in its weekly review of the British corn trade, says the sudden variations of temperature have continued, hard frost being reported in Scotland, and mild weather and persistent rain throughout the midland and southern counties of England. Agricultural affairs have necessarily been brought to a standstill, the saturated condition of the land being unfavorable to cereals, the stock of English wheat on offer in London and country markets having been worse than at any time since the harvest, and, owing to the impossibility of threshing, the supply being extremely scanty. Provincial trade, however, has experienced another rise of a shilling per quarter, but some farmers are unwilling to sell even at this advance. Imports into London have been slight, chiefly of East Indian descriptions, and trade ruled very firm at last week's prices. During the past three months the value of wheat has been steadily tending upward, and has now reached a point where a pause may be expected, as millers as a rule are stocked. The publication of the stocks at our ports shows considerable diminution compared with the same period last year. As imports will apparently be very moderate for the next month or more, the depletion of granary stocks will probably continue. Business in feeding-corn has been restricted, although as a rule, values are quotably unchanged. With very limited arrivals at ports of call until the end of the week, floating cargoes have steadily maintained the late prices, except maize, which has given way slightly.

THE COINAGE OF SILVER DOLLARS.

A BILL MAKING THEM A LEGAL TENDER INTRODUCED IN THE HOUSE—SCHEMES FOR UTILIZING THE PRODUCTS OF MINES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—Mr. Bright, of Tennessee, introduced in the House to-day a bill providing for the coinage of silver dollars, and making them a legal tender in unlimited amounts for all debts. Ordinarily this bill would have been referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures, but knowing a majority of that committee is opposed to measures of this kind, Mr. Bright moved to refer his bill to the Committee on Mines and Mining, which committee favors all schemes for "utilizing the products of our mines," and converting them into legal tender. The bill was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining on a yea and nay vote by a very decided majority. The Senate Committee on Finance is announced to meet to-morrow for the purpose of considering the Bland Silver bill passed by the House. It will soon be discovered whether the purpose of the silver men to secure speedy action and the passage of the bill has sufficient strength for success.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.

RENEGADE REPUBLICANS REJECTED BY THE INDEPENDENTS—THE DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS ON THE ANXIOUS SEAT—GEN. LOGAN'S CHANCES GOOD FOR RE-ELECTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 8.—The Independents have rejected the names of Lyman Trumbull, ex-Gov. John M. Palmer, and Gen. John Farnsworth, submitted to them by the Democrats. Gen. Farnsworth was the favorite of the three, but they would not take even him. The Democrats are now pondering over six names submitted to them by the Independents, with a probability that they will reject them all. None of them are prominent, and if they unite at all it is likely to be on some comparatively unknown man, who has not yet been mentioned. Judge Crawford, of Washington County, is spoken of as such a man. Gen. Logan is, so far, a long way ahead, and he affirms his ability to win if the Republicans stick to him solid. The four who stayed out of the caucus will vote for him if their votes will secure his election.

Gov. Cullom and the new State officers were inaugurated to-day. There was a fine display by the State Militia.

INAUGURATION OF GOV. WILLIAMS, OF INDIANA.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 8.—At the last moment it was decided, on account of the crowd, to have the inauguration ceremonies of Gov. Williams at the Academy of Music, causing considerable delay and confusion in seating the audience. At 11:30 Governor elect J. D. Williams appeared on the stage, and was received with great enthusiasm. The retiring Lieutenant Governor as presiding officer of the joint session, opened the exercises. Gov. Williams being sworn into office by Hon. Judge Niblack and introduced by the retiring Governor, Hendricks, addressed the Legislature, after which Lieut. Gov. Gray, being sworn in and having addressed the joint session, an adjournment was had.

Gov. Williams, in his inaugural Message, says the regular Message enjoined by the Constitution having been already submitted to the Legislature by his predecessor, he considers it inappropriate to submit any recommendations at this time. He urges economy, favors cheap transportation by the railroads, and careful management of the common school fund, but makes no reference to national questions.

PROPOSALS

FOR

$2,800,000 7 8/10 p. c. Bonds

OF THE

CITY OF CINCINNATI.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK BY THE UNDERSIGNED, AS AGENTS FOR THE PROPER AUTHORITIES OF SAME UNTIL

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 10, 1877,

AT 2 O'CLOCK P. M., for the whole or any part of the sum of $2,800,000, MUNICIPAL BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI, as authorized by an act of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, entitled "an act relating to cities of the first class having a population exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants," passed May 4, 1869, and "an act supplementary thereto," passed Feb. 24, 1876, a vote of the people of the CITY OF CINCINNATI, and a resolution of the City Council as prescribed by the said act.

SAID BONDS WILL BEAR INTEREST AT THE RATE OF 7 3-10 PER CENT. PER ANNUM, PAYABLE ON THE 1ST DAY OF MAY AND NOVEMBER IN EACH YEAR, AND THE PRINCIPAL WILL BECOME DUE IN 1906, BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST BEING PAYABLE AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK IN NEW-YORK.

Each proposal should be sealed and indorsed:

"PROPOSALS FOR 7 3-10 PER CENT. BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI," AND INCLOSED IN A SECOND ENVELOPE ADDRESSED TO THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK.

The right is reserved on the part of the undersigned to reject any or all of the bids, if, in their judgment, the interests of the city require it.

AWARDS WILL BE MADE ON JAN. 11.

FOR FULL INFORMATION APPLY TO THE UNDERSIGNED AGENTS.

MR. VANDERBILT'S WILL.

THE INSTRUMENT FILED IN THE SURROGATE'S COURT.

NEARLY ALL OF THE VAST ESTATE BEQUEATHED TO WILLIAM H. VANDERBILT —THE COMMODORE'S WIDOW, SISTERS, CHILDREN, AND GRANDCHILDREN HANDSOMELY PROVIDED FOR—HIS PASTOR AND PHYSICIAN ALSO REMEMBERED—NO CHARITABLE BEQUESTS.

The will of Commodore Vanderbilt was offered for probate yesterday afternoon in the Surrogate's Court, and a citation was issued to the next of kin, returnable on Feb. 27. The will was opened and read yesterday noon at the residence of Mrs. Emily S. Thorn, one of the Commodore's daughters, in West Sixteenth street, in the presence of all the sons and daughters of the testator, except Mrs. Horace F. Clark, who is now traveling in Europe, and Mrs. Catharine Lafitte, who resides at Bordeaux, France. After the will had been read, Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, accompanied by Henry L. Clinton, counsel for the Executors, and by Mr. Augustus Schell, went to the Surrogate's office, where Mr. Vanderbilt filed the following petition for the admission of the will to probate:

W. H. VANDERBILT'S PETITION.

COUNTY OF NEW-YORK. SURROGATE'S COURT.

To the Surrogate of the County of New-York:

The petition of William H. Vanderbilt, of the City of New-York, respectfully showeth that your petitioner is an executor named in the last will and testament of Cornelius Vanderbilt, late of the County of New-York, deceased; that the said deceased was, at or immediately previous to his death, an inhabitant of the County of New-York, and departed this life, in said county, on the 4th day of January, 1877, and that said last will and testament relates to both real and personal estate. Your petitioner further shows that the widow, only heirs, and next of kin of said deceased are Frank S. Vanderbilt, his widow, and William H. Vanderbilt, your petitioner, Phebe Jane Cross, Ethelinda Allen, Eliz. Osgood, Emily S. Thorn, Sophie J. Torrance, Maria Louise Clark, Mary Alice La Bau, Catharine Lafitte, Cornelius Jeremiah Vanderbilt, children of deceased, severally residing in the City of New-York, except Marie Louise Clark, who is temporarily in Europe, and when last heard of was at Lisbon, Portugal, and Catharine Lafitte, who resides at Bordeaux, France; that the deceased left no other child or descendant of any deceased child him surviving, and that the above-named persons are of full age; that the estate and effects for or in respect of which the probate of said will is applied for do not exceed in value the sum of —— dollars.

Your petitioner therefore prays that the said last will and testament may be proved, and letters testamentary granted thereon according to law.

W. H. VANDERBILT.

City and County of New-York, ss.:—I, William H. Vanderbilt, the petitioner named in the foregoing petition, being duly sworn, do depose and say, that I have read the foregoing petition, to which I have subscribed my name, and knew the contents thereof, and that the matters of fact therein stated are true, and that the matters therein stated of my information and belief, I believe to be true.

W. H. VANDERBILT.

Sworn this 8th day of January, A. D. 1877, before me, D. C. CALVIN, Surrogate.

Surrogate Calvin issued a citation to the widow and next of kin, (the sons and daughters of the testator,) returnable at 11 o'clock A. M. on Feb. 27, in the Surrogate's Court. It had been intended to have a shorter citation issued, but as the two daughters who are abroad could not be communicated with and heard from with certainty at an earlier date, the time was fixed as given. Mr. Clinton said yesterday that the witnesses named in the will would all be present to prove it on the return day; that he had heard of no objections to the will, and had no reason to suppose that it would be contested. The estate of Commodore Vanderbilt, previous to the several conveyances of real estate and stocks and bonds to his son William H., has been estimated on the authority of those placed in a position to know as much as could be known of his affairs, to be of the value of nearly $100,000,000, but he conducted his business in such a manner that it is doubtful whether any one except his son William H., knows the exact sum of his wealth. Mr. Clinton came into the will proceedings simply as counsel for the Executors, in relation to the formal proceedings necessary to secure the admission of the will to probate, and was not present at the reading of the will, and has no accurate knowledge of the total value of the estate, either before or since the conveyances made to Mr. William H. Vanderbilt. Mr. A. T. Stewart's will was probated on the evening of the day of his funeral, but in his case it was sworn that there was no next of kin to be notified by citation, and a vast and complicated mercantile business pressingly required definite steps to be taken forthwith, as Mr. Stewart had died after quite a short illness. In Commodore Vanderbilt's case the next of kin are numerous, he has had a very prolonged illness, has made ample arrangements to cover the contingency of his death, and leaves a business interest, which, vast as it is, has been running for a long time past in the hands of the man chosen by the Commodore to continue it. So there is no pressing necessity for an immediate probate. Following is the will:

COMMODORE VANDERBILT'S WILL.

I, Cornelius Vanderbilt, of the City of New-York, do make and publish my last will and testament as follows:

First—I direct my Executors, immediately after my decease, to pay to my beloved wife, Frank A. Vanderbilt, the sum of $500,000 in bonds of the United States of America of the 5 per cent. loan, under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1864, commonly known as 10-40 bonds, at par, in performance of the antenuptial contract made by and between me and the said Frank A., bearing date the 20th day of August, 1869, whereby I agreed that, if she should survive me as my widow, my Executors or Administrators should, immediately after my death, pay to her $500,000 in the first mortgage bonds of the New-York and Harlem Railroad Company at par; and she agreed to waive and release all dower in my real estate, and all right, title, and interest in and to my personal estate, except such sum of $500,000 of bonds. This direction or bequest is on condition that my said wife do accept the same as performance of my part of said ante-nuptial contract, and in lieu of dower in any and all real estate of which I may have been seized at any time during my marriage with her, and of all claim and demand to the personal estate of which I may die possessed, except as hereinafter expressly bequeathed to her. I also give, devise, and bequeath to my said wife, Frank A., the house and lot No. 10 Washington place, in the City of New-York, with the appurtenances, and also the statuary therein contained, for and during her natural life. I also give and bequeath to her, absolutely, all the furniture, pictures, and other household articles which may be in or appurtenant to said house at the time of my decease, including books, musical instruments, plate, and all other chattels of that kind, but excepting the portraits of my mother and my deceased wife, which two portraits I give to my grandson, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., son of my son William H., and upon the decease of my said wife I give, devise, and bequeath the said statuary to my said grandson Cornelius, and the said house and lot to my said son William H., in fee. I also give and bequeath to my said wife two carriages and one pair of carriage horses, and the harness appurtenant thereto, to be selected by her from those I may own at the time of my decease.

Second—I give and bequeath unto my five daughters—Phebe Jane, wife of James M. Cross; Emily, wife of William K. Thorn; Maria Louise, widow of Horace F. Clark, deceased; Sophia, wife of Daniel Torrance; and Mary Alicia, widow of N. Bergasse La Bau, deceased—for their own use, $1,250 000 of the registered bonds of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad Company, of $5,000 each, dated Dec. 1, 1873, payable Dec. 1, 1903, being part of an issue of not exceeding $25,000,000, secured by a mortgage on the railroad of said company to the Union Trust Company of New-York, dated Oct. 15, 1873; also, $1,250,000 of the consolidated mortgage bonds of the New-York and Harlem Railroad Company, payable the 1st of May in the year 1900, with interest semi-annually at 7 per cent. per annum, and secured by a mortgage on the railroad of said company to the Union Trust Company of New-York, dated the 1st of May in the year 1872, making together $2,500,000 of bonds, which I direct to be divided by my Executors among my five daughters before named, in equal shares, as soon as can conveniently be done after my decease.

Third—I give and bequeath unto the Trustees hereinafter appointed, $1,400,000 of the ten-forty bonds of the United States of America of the 5 per cent. loan, described in the first clause of this will, in trust for the uses and purposes hereinafter set forth, viz.: In trust to set apart and hold $400,000 of said bonds, and receive the interest thereon as it accrues, and pay the same over to my daughter Mrs. Ethelinda Allen, wife of Daniel B. Allen, for and during her natural life, for her separate use, and upon her separate receipt, it being my will that she shall not have power to anticipate such income, nor to transfer or dispose of her right to receive the same, or any part thereof. And upon the decease of my said daughter Ethelinda, I give and bequeath the last-mentioned $400,000 of bonds unto her children who may survive her, and the lawful issue of any of her children who may have died before her, such issue to take the share or shares which their parent or parents would have taken if living, and in default of her leaving any lawful issue her surviving, I give and bequeath the last-mentioned bonds, after her decease, to my residuary legatee, hereinafter named. The said Trustees are hereby directed to set apart, out of the bonds in this clause bequeathed to them, the further sum of $500,000 of such bonds, and to hold the same in trust to receive the interest thereon, and pay the same over as it accrues and is received by them unto my daughter, Mrs. Catherine Lafitte, wife of Gustave Lafitte, for and during her natural life, upon her separate receipt and for her separate use. It being my will that she shall not have power to anticipate such income, nor to transfer or dispose of her right to receive the same or any part thereof. Upon the decease of my said daughter, Catharine, if she shall leave children her surviving, I direct that the last mentioned $500,000 of bonds be divided by the said Trustees into as many shares as there shall be of such surviving children, and that the said Trustees set apart one of said shares for the benefit of each of said children, and hold each share in trust to receive the interest thereon and to apply the same to the use of such child during his or her natural life, paying over such income to such child after his or her having attained the age of 21 years; and, if any child shall die, of each of said children, the principal of the share held in trust for him or her shall go in absolute ownership as he or she may by will direct, and in default of such will, to his or her next of kin. But in case the said Catharine shall leave her surviving children, and also lawful issue of any deceased child or children, such issue shall be included in the division as representing their deceased parents, and the share which would have been set apart in trust for the benefit of the parent, if living, shall be paid to such issue. And should the said Catharine leave no children her surviving, the last-mentioned $500,000 of bonds shall be paid over to the issue of her deceased children, should there be any, they to share per stirpes, and should there be no such issue, said bonds shall go to her next of kin as if she had died intestate owning said bonds. The said Trustees are hereby directed to set apart the remaining $200,000 of the bonds in this clause bequeathed to them, and to hold the same in trust, to receive the interest thereof and apply the same to the maintenance and support of my son, Cornelius J. Vanderbilt, during his natural life, at such times and in such manner as they shall deem best for his interest. And I authorize said Trustees, in their discretion, instead of themselves making the application of said interest money to his support, to pay over from time to time to my said son for his support such portions as they may deem advisable, or the whole of the interest of said bonds. But no part of such interest is to be paid to any assignee of my said son, or to any creditor who may seek by legal proceedings to obtain the same; and in case my said son should make any transfer or assignment of his beneficial interest in said bonds or the interest thereof, or encumber the same, or attempt so to do, the said interest of said bonds shall thereupon cease to be applicable to his use, and shall thenceforth during the residue of his natural life belong to my residuary legatee. Upon the decease of my said son, Cornelius J., I give and bequeath the last-mentioned $200,000 of bonds to my residuary legatee.

Fourth—I give and bequeath unto my sister, Phebe Vanderbilt, $1,200 per annum during her natural life; to my niece Phebe Ann Blake, $300 per annum during her natural life; and Rebecca Little and her daughter Cornelia, during their joint lives, and to the survivor of them, during her natural life, the sum of $200 per annum. And I direct that the annuities in this fourth clause provided for do commence from the time of my decease, and the first payment thereof be made in six months thereafter, and that said annuities be paid half-yearly thereafter.

Fifth—I give and bequeath unto my brother, Jacob H. Vanderbilt, $50,000 of the first mortgage bonds of the Staten Island Railway Company, dated the 1st day of April, 1873 and payable the 1st of April, 1893, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually; to my niece Annie Knox, daughter of my sister Ellen, $20,000 of like bonds of the Staten Island Railway Company; to my nephew, Cornelius V. Deforest, two registered bonds of $5,000 each of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway Company, of the issue described in the second clause of this will; to my niece, Phebe Ann Dustan, $5,000 of the consolidated 7 per cent. mortgage bonds of the New-York and Harlem Railroad Company, of the issue described in the second clause of this will; to Mrs. Sophia White, daughter of Andrew Ainslie, $5,000 of like bonds; to Charlotte Haskell, daughter of my sister Charlotte, $5,000 of such bonds; to each of the three daughters of my niece, Mrs. Phebe Ann Dustan, $5,000 of such bonds; to Charles Simonson, son of my neohew Charles M. Simenson, deceased, $10,000 of like bonds; to my family physician, Doctor Jared Linsley, $10,000 of like bonds; to Capt. James Braisted, formerly in my employ, $4,000 of such bonds; to Lambert Wardell, an old and faithful clerk, $20,000 of such bonds, provided he is in my service at the time of my decease. I further give and bequeath unto my grandson, William K. Thorn, Jr., son of my daughter Emily, $25,000 of registered bonds of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway Company, of $5,000 each of the issue mentioned before mentioned; to Samuel Patten Hand, son of Obadiah Hand, a brother of my mother, one of such registered bonds of said company of $5,000; to Dr. Charles F. Deems, Pastor of the Church of the Strangers in the City of New-York, $20,000 of such registered bonds of said company of $5,000 each; to Mrs. Maria Lockey, wife of Gen. Gordon Granger, $10,000 of such registered bonds of said company of $5,000 each; and to the wife of my nephew, Samuel Barton, $25,000 of first mortgage bonds of the Staten Island Railway Company of the issue in this clause of my will before described.

Sixth—In case I should part with any of the bonds hereinbefore bequeathed, either to legatees or Trustees, or take, for any reason, I should not have on hand at the time of my decease a sufficient amount of each description of bonds to fulfill all of the bequests in this will contained, I direct my executors to supply the deficiency by purchasing, with the general funds of my estate, the necessary amount of the kind of bonds which may be lacking, and to apply the bonds so purchased to the fulfillment of such bequests. And if any of the bonds which I have bequeathed in trust should be paid off before the termination of the trust upon which they may be held, I direct that the Trustees reinvest the proceeds thereof in other bonds of the United States of America, and hold the same upon the same trusts upon which they held the bonds paid off, and that the same limitations of remainders do apply to such substituted bonds. The interests upon all the bonds in this will bequeathed, either to legatees or in trust, shall be apportioned up to the date of my decease, and no more thereof as shall have accrued up to that date, though not then due or payable, shall, when collected, belong to my residuary legatee.

Seventh—All legacy and succession taxes which may be payable in respect of the bequests and devises in this will contained I direct to be paid out of my residuary estate; but should any taxes be imposed upon the income of the bonds bequeathed in trust, or upon such bonds or the proceeds thereof while held in trust, they are to be borne by the respective trust estates to which such bonds may belong, and to be deducted from the income payable to the several beneficiaries.

Eighth.—All the rest, residue and remainder of the property and estate, real and personal, of every description, and wheresoever situated, of which I may be seized or possessed, and to which I may be entitled at the time of my decease, I give, devise and bequeath unto my son, William H. Vanderbilt, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, to his and their own use forever.

Ninth.—I constitute and appoint my son, William H. Vanderbilt, and my grandson, Cornelius, son of the said William H., and also, when he shall become of age, my grandson William, another son of the said William H., and also my before-named nephew, Samuel Barton, Executors of this my will, and Trustees of the several trust estates hereinbefore created. And should any of the said Trustees refuse or be unable to act as such, or resign their Trusteeship, the said trusts, together with the estates and powers hereinbefore granted to the Trustees, shall vest in those of said Trustees who shall act. And should any of the said Trustees die, the said trust estates, trusts, and powers shall vest in the survivors and the survivor of them. But it is my will that no commissions or compensation shall be charged to my estate, or to any of the said trust estates, or to any of the persons for whose benefit the said trusts are created, by said Executors or Trustees for their services as such Executors or Trustees; it being my intention that they shall serve as such Executors and Trustees without any compensation whatever, and they are severally appointed on that condition. And should either of them refuse to qualify and act, or to continue to serve as such Executor and Trustee without compensation, his appointment herein contained shall be void and of no effect. And should my nephew, Samuel Barton, refuse to act as such Executor and Trustee without compensation, the bequest to his wife hereinbefore contained shall become void, and the bonds bequeathed to her shall revert to my residuary estate.

Tenth.—It is my will that in case any direction or provision of this my will should be held illegal or void, or fail to take effect for any reason, no other part of this my will shall be thereby invalidated, impaired, or affected, but this my will shall be construed and take effect in the same manner as if the invalid direction or permission had not been contained therein. And should any of the legacies herein lapse, the same shall go to my residuary legatee before named.

Lastly.—I hereby revoke all wills and codicils by me at any time heretofore made.

In witness whereof I have set my hand and seal to this my last will, written on 24 pages of paper, in the City of New-York, the 9th day of January, in the year 1875.

CODICIL.

I, Cornelius Vanderbilt, do make a codicil to my last will and testament, which bears date the 9th day of January, 1875, and is hereto annexed, as follows, viz.:

First—I give and bequeath unto my grandson, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., son of William H. Vanderbilt, all the shares of capital stock of the New-York and Harlem Railroad Company which now stand in the name of my said grandson on the books of said company, and of which I hold the certificates in my possession, being 23,396 shares; also, all the shares of the capital stock of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company now standing in the name of my said grandson on the books of the last-named company, and of which I hold the certificates in my possession, being 31,650 shares.

Second.—I give and bequeath unto my grandson, William K. Vanderbilt, all the shares of the capital stock of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company which now stand in the name of my last-named grandson upon the books of said company, and of which I hold the certificates in my possession, being 50,000 shares.

Third.—I give and bequeath unto my grandson, Frederick W. Vanderbilt, another son of the said William H. Vanderbilt, 20,000 shares of capital stock of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, to be delivered to him when he shall attain the age of 21 years; but should he die before attaining that age, the last mentioned 20,000 shares are to be equally divided between his brothers, William K. and George Vanderbilt.

Fourth.—I give and bequeath unto my grandson, the said George Vanderbilt, another son of said William H., 20,000 shares of capital stock of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, to be delivered to him when he shall attain the age of 21 years; but should he die before attaining that age, the last mentioned 20,000 shares are to be equally divided between his brothers, William K. and Frederick W. Vanderbilt.

Fifth.—I give and bequeath unto my beloved wife, Frank A. Vanderbilt, 2,000 shares of the capital stock of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, in addition to the bequests to her in my said will contained.

Sixth.—With the foregoing modifications, I confirm and republish my said will.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, at the City of New-York, the 30th day of June, 1875. [Seal.] C. VANDERBILT.

Signed, sealed, published and declared by Cornelius Vanderbilt, the testator, as and for a Codicil to his last will and Testament, in the presence of us, who, at his request, and in his presence, and in the presence of each other, have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses.

FUNERAL OF MRS. EGBERT.

SERVICES IN THE REFORMED DUTCH CHURCH, BRIGHTON HEIGHTS—THE REMAINS TAKEN TO THE MORAVIAN CEMETERY AT NEW-DORP.

The funeral of Mrs. Charlotte Deforest Egbert, sister of the late Commodore Vanderbilt, took place yesterday afternoon from the Reformed Church, on Brighton Heights, Staten Island. The funeral ceremonies were of a very simple character, and consisted only of the brief, but impressive, services provided by the ritual of the Reformed Church. They were conducted by Rev. W. T. Enyard, Pastor of the Reformed Church on Brighton Heights, assisted by Rev. Dr. Kipp, of the Church of the Huguenots, and Rev. Mr. Vogel, of the Moravian Church. The musical portion of the services was performed by the congregation, led by Mr. Enyard, with the exception of one tenor solo, "Thy will be done," which was very effectively rendered by Mr. Charles L. Gunn, tenor soloist of Rev. Dr. Hepworth's church, in this City. There was no attempt at display whatever, and the floral offerings consisted of three pieces only—a cross, a crown, and an anchor—composed of white and yellow roses, camellias, pinks, &c. The cross was the gift of the Vanderbilt family, and the anchor was contributed by the immediate family of the deceased—the Deforests. The remains were encased in a rosewood casket, covered with black cloth, with silver handles and silver bands. On the outside of the coffin-lid was a silver plate, bearing the inscription:

Charlotte Deforest Egbert,
Died Jan. 5, 1877,
Aged 65 years, 3 months, 7 days.

Among those present, of the immediate friends of the deceased, were her two sons, Cornelius and Charles Deforest, and Mrs. Haskell—a married daughter—her brother, Capt. Jacob Vanderbilt, and Miss Phoebe Vanderbilt, her sister, and many other relatives. The services at the church were to have begun at 1 o'clock P. M., but it was 1:45 before the funeral cortége arrived. The services at the house before starting for the church were very brief, consisting only of a prayer by Rev. Mr. Enyard. Arriving at the church the casket was borne up the main aisle, preceded by the clergymen, who recited the ordinary services of the Reformed Church, and followed by the friends. The casket was placed in front of the altar, the official clergymen ascended the pulpit, and the services were continued. First the hymn, "Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep," was sung by the congregation, with organ accompaniment, and this was followed by a prayer by Rev. Mr. Vogel. Mr. Charles L. Gunn then sang the solo "Thy will be done," and the hymn "Jesus my all to heaven has gone" was sung by the congregation. The fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians was then read by Rev. Mr. Enyard, who also recited a few Scriptural paragraphs contained in the burial service, and the closing prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Kipp, and Rev. Mr. Vogel pronounced the benediction. The remains were then taken out of the church, placed in a hearse drawn by two black horses, and conveyed to the Moravian Cemetery at New-Dorp, and then placed in the cemetery receiving vault with brief ceremonies, where they will remain until Spring opens, when they will be interred in the family plot owned by the deceased lady, by the side of her first husband, Col. John Deforest. The following gentlemen acted as pall-bearers: John Hitchcock, John G. Wood, Henry Mendell, William Collins, John H. Wood, H. C. Greenough. The receiving vault in which the remains were placed was built by the late Commodore Vanderbilt at a cost of $5,000, and presented as a free gift to the Moravian Cemetery.

AN ADROIT BURGLARY.

A CATHARINE STREET PAWNSHOP ROBBED ON SUNDAY AFTERNOON—DIAMOND JEWELRY VALUED AT $4,000 CARRIED OFF.

On Sunday afternoon the pawnshop of Moss Brothers, at No. 61 Catharine street, was visited by burglars, and diamond jewelry valued at $4,000 carried off. The premises are guarded by three young men, who sleep in a room on the second floor, immediately over the pawnshop. The place is closed on Sunday, although the young men spend most of the hours of the morning there. At noon on Sunday these young men, as was their custom, went out to dinner, intending to return at 6 o'clock in the evening, and to remain in the building for the rest of the night. An aged Irishman keeps an apple-stand immediately in front of the pawn-shop. He had obtained permission from Moss Brothers to place his stand on Sunday close to the front door of the shop, so as to afford him some shelter from the weather, and to this circumstance the prompt discovery of the burglary is due. This fruit vender saw the young men employed in the place leave at noon, and at about 1:30 o'clock, while standing with his back to the door, his attention was attracted by an unusual noise. He listened attentively and heard distinctly the dull sound of hammering and wrenching, and the footsteps of persons moving about inside. He at once suspected that a robbery was being perpetrated. While considering what course to adopt he noticed two of the clerks referred to passing along Monroe street on their way up town. He whistled and they at once obeyed his summons. He imparted to them his suspicions and one of the clerks immediately took out his keys and endeavored to open the front door. The key turned in the lock, but the door remained fast, being evidently bolted on the inside. The attempt to open the door alarmed the burglars, and the clerks outside could hear the sound of scampering feet as the thieves made their way out of the place. One of the clerks remained on guard at the front door while his associate went for a policeman. Patrolmen Quinn and English, of the Seventh Precinct, were quickly on hand. Another attempt was made to open the front door, but proved unnecessful. Information was sent to the Madison Street Police-station, and Capt. McElwain, with a section of Police, proceeded to the spot. The block was surrounded with a cordon of Police, and every precaution was taken to prevent the escape of the burglars, but without effect, the burglars having, doubtless, left the neighborhood before the Police arrived. After spending considerable time in devising means to enter the building, a ladder was procured and raised to the second-floor window. One of the clerks mounted this ladder, and, as he opened the window, he saw a hole in the wall opposite him, just above the landing at the head of the first flight of stairs. The clerks accompanied by policemen then entered the building through the window and went down stairs to the pawn shop. A small safe which had contained exclusively diamond jewelry had been forced open and emptied of its contents. The bar across the safe had been wrenched off with a "jimmy" and holes had been drilled in the door near the lock, and the lock itself wrenched off. It was an easy matter then to force open the door, which had been torn to pieces. The drawers in the safe had been taken exclusively diamonds they contained removed, and the drawers scattered about the floor. After securing the contents of the smaller safe the burglars had commenced operations on the large safe, which contained money and jewelry to the amount of $30,000. They had torn off portions of the huge door, and five minutes more would have given them possession of its contents. On being alarmed, the burglars fled, leaving a large combination "jimmy" sticking in the door of the safe. The movements of the burglars were traced until it was found that the hole through which they had entered the pawnbroker's establishment opened into a room on the second floor of the tenement-house No. 63 Catharine street. On attempting to enter their room the door was found secure, and as the key could be seen in the lock on the inside it was hoped that the burglars were still there. When the Police entered, however, no human being was found in the apartments, but scattered around were the evidences of the burglars' work. The apartments which constituted the workshop of the burglars consist of a rear room with two windows looking out on the yard and two dark bedrooms, one leading out of the other, with small windows on the hallway. The middle room was the one in which the aperture through the wall had been cut. A hole about two and a half feet thick was cut through the two walls, which together were 20 inches thick, and the débris was carefully stowed away and disposed of without attracting attention. In the débris were found several William H. Vanderbilt bonds, which had been used to remove the bricks from the wall, and in the pawnshop in front of the safes was found a large assortment of burglars' tools of the latest and most approved patterns.

The proprietors of the pawnshop were apprised of what had been discovered, and on arriving at their establishment made an examination to see what property was missing. The contents of the large safe were found intact, the burglars not having succeeded in forcing it open, but it was completely wrecked. The smaller safe was empty, and the contents, consisting of diamond jewelry valued at $10,000, had disappeared. On looking through the room occupied by the burglars, a casket was found which contained diamonds valued at $6,000, the property chiefly of Mrs. Moss and relatives, who had placed them in the shop for safe keeping. The burglars had dropped this casket in their hurried flight. The loss of the Messrs. Moss will therefore not exceed $4,000. The diamonds consist chiefly of solitaires, set in rings, pins, and studs. The Police have a valuable clue to the burglars, and Detective Dorcay, of the Central Office, has been specially detailed on the case by Superintendent Walling.

REJECTING MR. BEECHER.

A NEW ASSOCIATION OF CONGREGATIONAL MINISTERS—NEARLY ALL THE PROMINENT MEN OF THE DENOMINATION IN NEW-YORK AND BROOKLYN INCLUDED IN THE MEMBERSHIP.

Rev. Dr. William M. Taylor, Pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle of this City, has been chosen Moderator of a new Congregational association just organized in this City. It will be remembered that at the meeting of the New-York and Brooklyn Association held directly after the adjournment of the great Plymouth Church council it was voted, against the protest of the most distinguished members, not to proceed to investigate the charges made against the character of one of its members, but to appoint a committee to solicit testimony against Mr. Beecher which should be offered before the commission provided for by his council. Immediately on the votes having been taken, four of the leading members of the association, Rev. Dr. Richard S. Storrs, Rev. Dr. William I. Budington, Rev. Dr. William M. Taylor, and the Secretary, Rev. H. H. McFarland, of the American Seamen's Friend Society, publicly withdrew, and Prof. B. N. Martin, D. D., of the New-York University, and Rev. Dr. William Hayes Ward, of the Independent, also signed a protest against this action, but without their withdrawing. These gentlemen, with about 10 others, have now united to form a new Congregational Association, which shall not be responsible for Mr. Beecher or for the lax views of church government and of clerical irresponsibility which he represents. Besides those mentioned above, the following join the new body: Rev. Dr. George H. Hepworth, Pastor of the Church of the Disciples, in this City; Rev. Dr. Henry M. Scudder, Pastor of the Central Church, Brooklyn; Rev. Bishop Falkner, Pastor of the Church of the Mediator, Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. J. H. Lockwood, Pastor of the New-England Church, Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. Ray Palmer, Secretary of the American Congregational Union; Rev. Dr. D. B. Coe and Rev. Dr. A. H. Clapp, Secretaries of the American Home Missionary Society; Rev. Dr. E. W. Gilman, Secretary of the American Bible Society; and Rev. M. H. Wilder, of Brooklyn. These men include pretty nearly all the Congregational clergymen of prominence in this vicinity, and they form a very strong body. The few prominences left are Henry Ward Beecher himself, his brother Edward, his editor, Lyman Abbott, and his counselor and defender, Rev. Dr. H. M. Storrs. The following preamble and constitution signed by the members expresses in guarded but distinct language their idea of the principles of ministers and of their relations to each other's character, "that the ministry be not blamed," and their adherence to the rights of a council to withdraw fellowship from, as well as to extend it to, a church or minister.

PREAMBLE.

We, whose names are undersigned, being Pastors and ministers in connection with Congregational churches, associate ourselves together for mutual Christian culture and to maintain in all ways open to such associations of ministers the essential principles of the Congregational polity.

We hold to the proper independence of the churches in all matters of local concern, and no less to that fellowship of those churches which is implied in the communion of doctrine and order, and which is recognized by a council of neighboring churches and ministers, when suitable investigation has ascertained the existence of such community of faith and of government.

We also believe that the fellowship thus extended by a council to a church, or to its Pastor, may in like manner be withdrawn by a council when occasion requires.

As an association of ministers, we hold it to be our duty to watch over one another in the Lord, "that the ministry be not blamed," and to aid each other toward higher attainments in knowledge, character, and Christian usefulness; at the same time that we labor individually, and as an association, to secure the prevalence of those principles heretofore practiced among us by which alike the rights of the churches and the solemn obligations of the mutual public fellowship are maintained.

Believing that the independence of each local church, in matters which concern itself, is perfectly consistent with such fellowship of churches in all matters of common interest, and that upon the maintenance of this fellowship depends the co-operation of the churches in all general evangelical work, as well as the preservation of their purity and good name, with those of their ministers, we hereby agree in adopting the following Constitution and by-laws:

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I. Name. This body of Congregational ministers shall be called the Manhattan Congregational Association.

ART. II.—Object.—The object of this association shall be to conserve the rights and maintain the obligations involved in the fellowship of Congregational ministers, to promote the qualification of its members for the ministry of the Gospel, and to perform such other offices for the welfare of the churches and the advancement of religion as do not involve authority and jurisdiction over the churches—such as the collection of the statistics of the churches, and the examination of candidates for the Christian ministry, and recommending them, if found worthy, to the churches.

ART. III.—Membership—This association shall be composed of pastors and other ordained ministers in the exercise of the Christian ministry, or in the administration of Christian benevolence, or the work of education. Such persons, approving the objects of this association, and holding for substance of doctrine to the confessions of faith of the early synods of New-England, having been nominated for membership at a previous meeting, and being present, may become members by vote of two-thirds of the members present at any regular meeting, upon signing this Constitution. Brethren who have been members of other ministerial bodies will be required to present letters of dismission from them upon their admission to this body; and brethren going from our vicinity into the bands of other ministerial bodies will be required to take letters of dismission from this body within two years from the time of such removal.

Articles IV. and V. relate to the officers and meetings of the association, and Article VI. prescribes the conditions under which the Constitution may be altered.

A POLICEMAN SHOT.

At about 3 o'clock yesterday morning, as Officer McDonnell of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, was patrolling on Seventh avenue, he noticed that the door leading into Bernarde Courtney's saloon, No. 315 Seventh avenue, was open. The officer entered the hallway, suspecting that a burglary had been committed, and on approaching the rear door of the saloon, a man jumped upon him and threatened to shoot him if he did not keep quiet. The officer told him who he was, and the burglar thereupon drew a pistol and fired, the ball entering behind the officer's left ear. Two other burglars, who were in the store, alarmed by the pistol-shot, ran into the hallway and saw the injured officer struggling with their mate. They at once ran off. Capt. Williams and Detective Schmidtberger, having heard the shot, ran to McDonnell's assistance, and captured the burglar. He gave his name as James Farrell, residing at No. 449 West Forty-first street. He was arraigned at the Washington Place Police Court yesterday, and confessed that he shot the officer. He was remanded to the custody of Capt. Williams. McDonnell's injuries are serious.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Miss Clara Woolhouse, aged 20, residing in Astoria, Long Island, fell overboard yesterday afternoon while attempting to board the ferry-boat George Law, at the foot of Grand street. She was rescued by Daniel Sullivan, a deck hand, and taken home by her brother.

On Friday evening, while the family of Mr. S. Browning were at dinner in the basement of their residence, No. 355 West Fifty-seventh street, an adroit house-thief climbed up the pillars of the front portico, and, opening one of the windows, crawled into Mrs. Browning's bed-room. He forced open a bureau drawer, and stole therefrom a gold watch and a quantity of jewelry, valued at $163.

On Sunday a car-shed adjoining the Third Avenue Railroad Depot at Harlem was crushed in by the accumulation of snow on the roof. The shed was demolished, and six cars which were in the shed were so badly damaged as to be almost worthless. The loss is estimated at $6,000. The pavilion at Terrace Garden, Fifty-eighth street, near Third avenue, was also crushed in by the weight of accumulated snow, causing a loss of $300.

The statement in a morning paper that there are apprehensions for the safety of the Fall River steamer Newport, now in New-Haven harbor, is controverted by the agents and officers of that line. Col. Borden, the agent in this City, says the Newport is laying so easy on the flats there that not even a door of a stateroom is out of place, all opening and closing easily. The Newport will, he says, undoubtedly resume her trips on the route in a few days.

Mr. Samuel D. Babcock, President of the Chamber of Commerce, has been requested by a number of prominent business men of the City to call a meeting of that body on Thursday next at 1 o'clock, to take into consideration the subject of excessive and discriminating taxation levied by the Municipal and State authorities upon the banks and bankers of this City, and by the Federal Government upon all national banks, bankers, and banking institutions throughout the United States.

The annual election for officers of the Maritime Association of the Port of New-York took place yesterday afternoon. The following ticket was chosen: President, John H. Boynton; Vice President, C. Frederick Elwell; Secretary, Elijah A. Houghton; Treasurer, Albert H. Brown. Directors—Thomas P. Ball, James Henry, David B. Dearborn, John Zittiosen, Zacchens Bergen, Marcus Hunter, John L. Merrill, John Galway, William H. Van Brunt, Simon F. Maskie, George R. Hayne, Henry Bowring, Amadee Vatable, William H. T. Hughes, Alexander Munn, Edward N. Norton, Mark W. Maclay, William E. Barnes, Robert Dillon, James S Chew, Livingston Roe. Auditing Committee—Stephen C. Talbot, Henry P. Booth, William D. W. Miller.

BROOKLYN.

It cost $5,733 80 to remove the snow which fell during the recent snow-storm from the principal streets.

Rev. C. H. Ercrest, Pastor of the Church of the Puritans, corner of Marcy and Lafayette avenues, has been called to the pastorate of Plymouth Church, Chicago.

The Police sold for the benefit given for the sufferers by the Brooklyn Theatre calamity at the Academy of Music, 6,000 tickets at 50 cents each. Officer Reardon, of the Fifth Precinct, received the silver shield given to the man selling the greatest number of tickets in the Eastern District. Officer Simonson, of the First Precinct, won the Western District shield.

In the case of Hugh McCulloch & Co., bankers, of London, England, against George Hoffman, a wealthy New-York merchant to recover $3,500 paid to Haffman's son on a letter of credit, Judge Pratt yesterday denied the application of the defendant for a new trial, on the ground that the newly-discovered evidence could have been produced if reasonable diligence had been used on the first trial, which was decided in favor of the bankers.

NEW-JERSEY.

Collector Love reports the receipt of $68,527 30 in taxes and assessments in Jersey City last week.

John Connelly, aged 12 years, was run over by a sleigh in Schureman street, New-Brunswick, yesterday, and seriously injured.

Mrs. Anna Matthews, a resident of Brooklyn, was badly burned last night by the explosion of a kerosene lamp, at the house of Mrs. Hillier, on Bull's Ferry road, Union Hill, where she was visiting.

In response to a call from Mayor Buckley, the leading tax-payers of Paterson will hold a meeting this evening to discuss the subject of taxes, and consider plans for the reduction of municipal expenses.

John Bates was caught in the act of committing a burglary yesterday morning in a saloon on Springfield avenue, near Howard street, Newark. He was taken to Police Head-quarters, and subsequently committed for trial.

County Physician Converse was notified yesterday of the sudden death of a child of John Schwartz, residing on Bull's Ferry avenue, Guttenberg. He found on examination that the WHITE LEAGUE RULE IN NEW-ORLEANS.

THE COURTS AND POLICE STATIONS SEIZED—THE LAWFUL POLICE DISPLACED BY AN ARMED MOB — NO BLOODSHED—NICHOLLS SUSTAINED BY THE WHITE LEAGUE UNDER THE NAME OF MILITIA — GOV. PACKARD VIRTUALLY A PRISONER IN THE STATE-HOUSE — UNITED STATES TROOPS LOOKING ON IN READINESS TO PRESERVE PEACE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 9.—To-day the history of New-Orleans has been marked by the Nicholls revolution. So far it has been bloodless, though prosecuted with an armed force on the part of the citizens of New-Orleans. At an early hour this morning the streets were filled with armed men in citizen's dress. They are called the "State Militia" and the "new Police;" they are commanded by Gen. Frank N. Ogden, who commanded the White League organization of 1874. Their appearing so soon after Mr. Nicholls assumed the "Governorship" of the State shows that the organization must have been previously made and officered. Under recognized law, the officers of the Metropolitan Police force could scarceiy be removed, except for cause. They have been put ont, and questions of law are to be determined hereafter.

The first work of the citizen soldiers was to take possession of the various police stations and the city telegraph. A handful of policemen in a place could not be expected to stand against an armed organization of 5,000 men, and the stations were surrendered. The Third Precinct Station is connected with the Court Buildings and Sheriff's office. Early this morning the Sheriff refused to open court for the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and Chief Justice Ludeling appointed another man to do that duty, and the court opened and adjourned soon after out of respect to the memory of Judge Saucier, late of one of the district courts. About this time Gen. Ogden's men had obtained possession of the Police Station and the building, and the persons appointed by Mr. Nicholls as a Supreme Court appeared and took possession of the Supreme Court-room. The appointees of Nicholls are T. C. Manning, Chief Justice, and R. H. Marr, Alcibiades De Blanc, Judge Eagen, and Congressman W. B. Spencer as Associate Justices. They went through the forms of opening a court, and adjourned about noon.

It was expected that an attack would be made on the State-house, but that was not accomplished to-day, and no demand was made for its evacuation. Gov. Packard is in his office, and all avenues leading to the State-house are guarded by Ogden men, so that the Governor and such members of the Legislature as remain in the building are virtually prisoners. All day the streets about the State-house have been crowded with people, and a stray shot at any time from the Police within might have created a riot. Under such circumstances the House and Senate met without a quorum. This, too, was the day on which United States Senators should have been elected.

During all of the revolutionary proceedings of to-day the United States soldiers have stood resting on their arms, quiet spectators, Gen. Augur declaring that he had no authority to interfere under his old and standing instructions, except in case of actual rioting, and then only so far as to interpose in the interests of peace. Signal officers from the gun-boats of the Navy took position on the cupola of the State-house and signaled back to the boat from the besieged building. Gov. Packard is without a militia to sustain his position, and to have a few hundred people in the streets killed by the Police stationed in the State-house building, would have been assuming a great responsibility.

There must be some lawful way out of this muddle, or it must appear there can be no State Government in Louisiana. Everything is comparatively quiet this evening. Armed men are patrolling the streets. There is danger that, in subverting the regular Police authorities, men have been employed who cannot be controlled. One of the Democratic papers says in warning: "The irresponsible violence of an intemperate crowd of people, having no organization, might jeopardize the very cause with which they sympathize." The upholders of Nicholls have declared that they would rule or that they would bring martial law. They are proceeding on that plan. What may be done to-morrow cannot be foretold now.

DETAILED REPORT OF THE DAY'S INCIDENTS.

At 9 o'clock this morning the members of the White League, which have been mustered in by Nicholls as Militia, began to assemble with arms at Lafayette square, with the avowed purpose of maintaining the Superior Court, abolished by the State Government. By 9:30 A. M. the streets were filled with armed men hurrying to Lafayette square, where orderlies were dashing about on horseback, presenting all the appearances of preparation for battle. Armed men reported to the Sheriff, whose purpose was to take possession of the Supreme Court-room, then in charge of the Metropolitan Police, and install Nicholls' newly-appointed Judges of the Supreme Court. An advertisement appeared this morning ordering members of the Washington Artillery to assemble at the armory at 10 o'clock. It was expected that the movement on the Supreme Court would be made at 11 o'clock. Chief Justice Ludeling was there on the bench, and Capt. Gray, of the Metropolitan Police, with a strong force was in possession of the building, under an order from the Chief Justice. Gov. Packard was at the State-house, cool and calm. He had telegraphed President Grant for assistance. Nicholls was at St. Patrick's Hall.

At 11 A. M. the armed men began moving in different directions from Lafayette square. About 500 passed down St. Charles street, apparently toward the Supreme Court, and others marched south and west. At 11:45 a demand was made for the Third Precinct Station-house, in the Supreme Court building, and refused. About 10,000 persons were assembled around Jackson square, a large portion of whom were on the levee side of the square and armed. Gov. Packard discovered that the Metropolitan Telegraph wires had been cut, and he established communication with United States Marshal Pitkin, at the Custom-house, by means of the United States Signal Corps. The Metropolitan Police at the State-house were armed with Springfield rifles. The United States troops were stationed at the Orleans Hotel, two blocks distant, watching the crowd at the square, but were not under arms.

At 11:50 A. M. the Nicholls White League militia took possession of the Supreme Court building and installed the so-called Judges, and soon afterward all the Police stations were taken possession of. Not a gun was fired.

A Picayune extra issued at noon, says of the assembling of armed bodies this morning that few were aware that the legal State Militia had been organized and armed for the execution of the orders of Nicholls, and that these men on the street were there in obedience to their call as the State Militia. Gen. Ogden was in command, and he was assisted by Gens. Borgar and Vandry, Col. D. B. Penn was in control of the Adjutant General's department. In various parts of the city the militia were assembled, the artillery being organized at St. Mary's Market. They had two field pieces, and at 11 o'clock prepared to move down to Lafayette square. The purpose of this movement was to see that the Nicholls Supreme Court should be permitted to take its seat. It was a notorious fact, revealed by the military commander on the Republican side, that the court would not be allowed to sit, and the militia was called out to see that no body or power should interfere with it. It is the intention of the militia to hand the court over to the justices, and on this issue is made. At 12 o'clock was announced by the militia as the time to march down to Jackson Square. This place is defended by two or three hundred policemen, and a battery of seven or eight guns. The State-house is defended, or is thought to be, by about 1,200 men, mostly negroes. The new Police force being thoroughly organized, it is very probable that the militia will this evening hand over to them the regular stations.

A reporter of the Picayune this morning visited Gen. Augur, and ascertained that all the officers and men were under strict orders, and prepared to take the streets at a moment's notice. To the inquiry as to what was the character or part he meant to take in the political drama now enacting, Gen. Augur replied that his instructions and intentions were to keep the peace. The reporter suggested that Nicholls was prepared and determined to do this without the aid of United States troops, to which Gen. Augur replied, "I hope he will." He said that in the event of a conflict on the streets of any serious character, he would intervene.

At 1:20 P. M. the Nicholls government were in possession of everything except the State-house. Up to that time no effort had been made to take possession of that building, around which thousands of unarmed citizens were congregated, blocking up the streets for squares and rendering it impossible to reach it. About 3,000 of Nicholls' Militia were under arms on the levee at the foot of Decatur street, and it was reported that the demand for the surrender of the State-house would be made in the afternoon. The force under Gov. Packard there did not exceed 300. The Commander of the United States sloop-of-war Ossipee, established a signal station on the Custom-house in order to communicate with the officials there. The Ossipee and monitor Canonicus are lying off the foot of Poydras street. United States Marshal Pitkin was in constant communication with Washington, giving every phase of the situation.

Chief Justice Ludeling this morning issued an order removing Civil Sheriff Handy, and appointed Alfred Bourges to that position. Handy was acting under orders from Nicholls; hence this action.

Up to 2:15 P. M. there was no important change in the situation. Ogden's militia were massed within a square of the State-house, which was reinforced by a company of colored militia numbering 100. Gov. Packard said he would resist any attack made upon the State-house. The Democratic leaders now assert that they have no intention of attacking the State-house.

To the People of Louisiana:

I should be most profoundly surprised and disappointed should any citizen of Louisiana at this moment so far forget himself as to be guilty of any excess whatever. There is danger in collecting in large bodies. I urge you, therefore, to return at once peacefully to your homes. The greater the wrongs to which you have been subjected, the greater to your credit should you recognize and recollect your own simple and plain duty as citizens. Let no one be injured, however obnoxious he may be, and let the people of the whole country see that we are law-abiding, just, and moderate.

Nicholls' Judges of the Supreme Court, after spreading their commissions on record, and appointing Alfred Roman clerk, adjourned the court till Wednesday.

About 2:30 o'clock some one in the crowd on St. Louis street fired two shots with a pistol into the Auditor's Office in the lower portion of the State-house, and three shots were returned from within, which caused great excitement. No one was hurt, however. Soon after Mayor Austin drove up in a carriage, and read Nicholls' proclamation to the crowd. Part of the crowd dispersed, but the larger portion remained, and at 3 o'clock Nicholls and Chief Boyian were endeavoring to disperse them.

About 6 o'clock to-night the Nicholls Militia, about 5,000 strong, had a review on St. Charles street, opposite Lafayette square. As they marched through the street they were cheered by men, and ladies who thronged the galleries waved their handkerchiefs. They were principally armed with Springfield rifles with bayonets and cartridge-boxes, though some were armed with carbines, shot-guns, and old muskets, and marched in a manner that showed they were familiar with the school of the company. After the review companies were detailed for duty and marched off to different points. Some are patrolling the city to-night, but most of them were disbanded for the night. All ages from 16 to 60 are represented in this Militia, and all nations, except Africa, are represented. As they passed the Custom-house this morning on their march to Jackson Square, the windows on Old Levee street were filled with United States soldiers. The Militia brought their guns to a carry arms and gave three cheers, which were responded to by the soldiers.

At 9 o'clock to-night the agent of the Associated Press attempted to enter the State-house to interview Gov. Packard, but was halted by the Nicholls guards, and refused admission. Gov. Packard and the Legislature are in the State-house, but the White Leaguers have refused to allow provisions to be carried inside, and Gov. Packard and the Legislature are in a state of siege. The Legislature had no quorum in either branch to-day, as some of the members were outside, and asserted they were afraid to risk their lives inside. Consequently no action was taken toward the election of a United States Senator.

All kinds of sensational rumors are afloat to-night, notably one that the State-house is to be attacked. On this subject prominent Democrats stated that the plan of the Democrats was to have the Supreme Court enjoin Packard from usurping the functions of Governor, and in the event of his refusing, to have him arrested for contempt.

At 10 o'clock to-night all is quiet. The Nicholls Government have a strong Police force on duty throughout the city.

The Democratic Legislature, with a quorum in both houses, voted for a United States Senator, J. B. Eustice received a majority of the votes cast for Senator, for the term ending in 1879. There was no choice for Senator for the long term.

POSITION OF THE GOVERNMENT.

THE MAINTENANCE OF THE PEACE OF NEW-ORLEANS ALONE TO BE SECURED—GEN. AUGUR AND MR. NICHOLLS—THE LEGISLATIVE APPLICATION FOR AID.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The news received from New-Orleans during the day has been meagre, but has been anxiously watched, and many false rumors have been in circulation. The latest and most authentic news received to-night is that there has been no collision, or at least no bloodshed. The city is, however, practically in possession of armed White Leaguers who have taken the Police station-houses and threaten the Capitol building. This news is confirmed by dispatches from several sources. Gen. Augur reports that he called upon Nicholls this evening and gave him notice that his forces must be dispersed; that violence could not be tolerated or permitted by the United States officers. Pledges of the strongest kind were given to Gen. Augur that the mob should disperse and that peace should be maintained. At present the Federal Government will do nothing more than protect and enforce the peace of the city. It would seem difficult to long maintain an attitude of neutrality if the warlike actions of the Democracy continue. It is understood that the application of the Legislature for Federal troops is on its way to Washington, and will be received here day after to-morrow. It is thought that the question will then be raised in such form that the President will soon have to decide between the rival State Governments, and in that case Packard would undoubtedly be sustained. There is some private talk of an agreement to be brought about in New-Orleans between the contending parties by which the necessity of Federal interference will be averted, but of this there would seem to be just now an extremely remote possibility.

Senator West received to-night the following dispatch from Gov. Packard, dated New-Orleans, 10 P. M.:

Upward of 2,500 armed White Leaguers are still parading the streets. Nicholls, of course, claims his mob to be Militia, and not an unauthorized armed body. They have captured the Central Police Station and the State Arsenal, with all the arms, including two batteries. The State-house is now invested by armed men denying egress and ingress. The peace cannot be maintained without the recognition of the legal Government. S. B. PACKARD.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The Cabinet session to-day continued for nearly three hours. There was much conversation about political affairs generally, but especially with regard to the condition of those in New-Orleans, as various telegrams had been received from that city expressive of fears of violations of the public peace, owing to the existence of two State organizations, and the consequent excitement of the acts of the respective parties. The following dispatch was sent to Gen. Augur immediately after the adjournment of the Cabinet, by the direction of the President, and indicates the purposes of the Government as expressed by the President in recent interviews:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.

To Gen. C. C. Augur, New-Orleans, La.:

A dispatch just received from the United States Marshal at New-Orleans indicates that unauthorized armed bodies of men are organized and assembling in a manner to threaten the peace and safety of the city. If this be so, notify the leaders of such organization that they must desist on pain of coming in conflict with the United States authority, sustained by the military power of the Government. Report at once the situation and your action, keeping in mind the fact that this order has no reference to a recognition of either of the claimants for the Governorship, on either Legislature.

J. D. CAMERON, Secretary of War.

THE INVESTIGATIONS.

Lieut. Holmes, of the Thirteenth Infantry, testified before the Senate Sub-committee to-day to a peaceable election in East Baton Rouge, where he was stationed.

Mayor Jostreuski, of Baton Rouge, who had promised certain information in reference to the Order of 228, submitted a letter from Judge Whitaker setting forth that the order was a secret one, but arrangements had been made by which the members of the committee could be initiated, and assuring them that nothing inconsistent with their ideas of religion or politics would be required. Senators Wadleigh and McMillan respectfully declined the invitation.

A. Brosom, (colored,) of East Feliciana, testified that he was taken out by a band of men and hung up by the neck. John Brooks (colored) testified that he was afraid to vote the Republican ticket in that parish. Aaron McKenzie (colored) swore that he had been taken out by the whites and severely whipped, and made to promise that he would vote the Democratic ticket, and he did so.

Rev. John Reiley and three other colored men testified to numerous acts of violence and a reign of terror among the blacks in East Feliciana. Reiley stated there had been a great deal of cotton stolen there, and there was much dissatisfaction with officials, not only Republicans, but Democrats.

Samuel Robinson and seven other colored men testified that they had voted the Democratic ticket without intimidation; they thought the times were bad, and wanted a change.

THE CONTINENTAL LIFE.

THE INSURANCE COMPANY IN APPEAL BEFORE SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE—THE DECISION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 9.—The matter of the appeal in the case of the Continental Life Insurance Company was argued in General Term of the Supreme Court to-day before Justices Learned, Boardman, and Bockes. It will be remembered that one John O. Hoyt, who owned only 15 shares in the company referred to, brought suit to have the company dissolved and a Receiver appointed, which was done, and one Anderson was so appointed. It was alleged that this proceeding was collusive, and intended to cover irregularities and to conceal grave frauds in the management of the company. The State Superintendent of Insurance caused the Attorney General to take action in the matter, who, thereupon, brought suit to set aside the proceedings on the ground of fraud. The matter was argued before Judge Osborn in Special Term, and he appointed a Referee to take evidence in the matter, alleged by the Attorney General. From this order the Receiver Anderson and the plaintiff Hoyt both appealed, and this appeal was heard to-day. Mr. John L. Hill appeared for Anderson, Mr. G. W. Miller for Hoyt, Mr. William Barnes for the policyholders, and Mr. Henry Smith of Albany for the Attorney General. The argument lasted all the forenoon. The point made by the counsel for Hoyt and the Receiver was that the Continental Insurance Company no longer existed; that a motion to dissolve the company and to appoint a Receiver having been made before a Court of Record, which court had granted it and had appointed such Receiver, that thereby the corporation ceased, and determined that having ceased to exist there was nothing against which the Attorney General could proceed, and, consequently, that the proceedings of that officer and the action of Judge Osborn in appointing a Referee to hear evidence was illegal and void.

Mr. Smith, replying for the State, argued that a chartered corporation derived its power from the people of the State, and only by the action of an officer representing the people could that power be taken away. It would be a monstrous doctrine that a corporation with millions of assets, having Trustees and other legally-constituted officers, all deriving their authority from the State, could be dissolved at the instance of a single stockholder in a friendly suit for the appointment of a Receiver. The relation of the corporation to the State continued, and must continue until it was dissolved by the same power which made it. There would be no limit to the frauds which might be perpetrated, were it possible for any one owning a share in a company to walk into some court with a friend, and, having had that friend duly appointed a Receiver, thereby dissolve the corporation.

The court took this view of the matter. No written opinion was delivered, but the order of the court below was affirmed. The reference will therefore proceed, and the whole transaction of the appointment of Anderson as Receiver will be thoroughly sifted. The Court said it had some doubt whether Judge Osborn's order was appealable, but, as a safer proceeding than dismissing the appeal, it would affirm the order.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10—1 A. M.—During Wednesday, in the Soth Atlantic and Middle States, falling barometer, stationary or slowly rising temperature, north-east to south-east winds and increasing cloudiness will prevail, possibly succeeded by light snows in the northern portions of both.

For New-England, falling barometer, easterly to southerly winds, stationary or rising temperature, partly cloudy weather, and possibly followed by light snows in the northern portion.

THE GOVERNOR OF ARKANSAS.

LITTLE ROCK, Jan 9.—Gov. Garland's message was delivered to the General Assembly in joint convention to-day. It treats entirely of State matters. The current expenses of the Government for the past two years have been $663,775. The State debt is $17,620,362. Of this amount $1,400,000 is outstanding Treasurer's certificates. The Governor recommends, as do the State Board of Finance, that the State continue to borrow money to pay the expenses of the Government till the Treasurer's certificates are absorbed by taxation, and in the meantime that steps be taken toward a compromise of the bonded indebtedness of the State. The Governor also recommends the organization of an Immigration Bureau, the aiding, fostering, and caring for the public schools, and a system of railroad taxation.

THE WISCONSIN LEGISLATURE.

MADISON, Jan. 9.—At a caucus this evening, the Republicans nominated W. H. Hiner for President pro tem. of the Senate, and J. B. Cassaday for Speaker of the Assembly. The Democrats have nominated W. W. Eied for President pro tem. of the Senate, and Joseph Hamilton for Speaker of the Assembly. The Republicans have a majority in both houses.

THE RUSSIAN IRON-CLADS.

CHARLESTON, Jan. 9.—Official advices have just been received by the Russian Minister here that the orders to the Russian fleet have been changed, so that it will proceed direct to Hampton Roads, where it has been directed to Winter. The Russian Minister will leave here by rail to-morrow night for Washington.

A FARCE IN THREE SHOTS.

NOBODY HURT AND EVERYBODY SATISFIED.

THE LATEST PICKWICKIAN DUEL.

THE EYES OF THE UNION ONCE MORE ON DELAWARE—BLOODLESS RESULT OF THE BENNETT-MAY AFFAIR—THREE SHOTS AND A PEACEFUL PARTING—MR. BENNETT CONVINCED THAT "NO ERROR" WAS COMMITTED—DETAILS OF THE REMARKABLE MEETING AT MARYDELL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MARYDELL, Md., Jan. 9.—The long-expected and much-talked-of duel between Messrs. Bennett and May has finally occurred, and its ridiculous termination forms perhaps a fitting climax to the history of the affair. The parties met and exchanged three shots and separated, both more than satisfied with the result, and neither one hurt as to life, limbs, digestion. Whether the duel took place in Delaware or Maryland seems open to a little dispute, but it took place close to the boundary line dividing the two States. The meeting was on the farm of Mr. Murray, a New-York lawyer, at 1 P. M., yesterday. There was a mistake made by the parties to the affair, which changed entirely the locality of the combat. The evident intention of the gentlemen was either to fight in Delaware or across the line separating Maryland and Delaware, but a mistake in the bearings caused the contest to take place in Maryland. It seems that Mr. Bennett, although absenting himself from his house on Fifth avenue, did not leave New-York City, as reported, on the day after the encounter in front of the Union Club-house, but he remained in the City until Sunday evening. Accompanied by S. Howland Robbins, Dr. Charles Phelps, Louis Lorillard, Carroll Livingstone, and a servant, Mr. Bennett took the 9:30 P. M. train from Jersey City to Philadelphia where Messrs. Livingstone and Lorillard took leave of the remainder of the party and went to the Continental Hotel, at which they registered under assumed names. The others proceeded by rail to Wilmington, Del., arriving at that place at about 9 o'clock yesterday morning. Here tickets were purchased for Easton, Penn., but the party left the train at Marydell, and after a few moments of conversation started across the country on foot in the direction, as they supposed, of the Delaware State line. After proceeding a short distance they were joined by Mr. May; his second, Dr. Frederick May, of Baltimore, and a surgeon, also from Baltimore, said to have been named Tilghman. This party had driven up in a sleigh from the direction of Dover. Mr. May and his friends had left Baltimore on Sunday evening, and had gone direct to Dover, arriving there about 8:30 A. M. The party carried blankets, overcoats, two cases of pistols, and surgical instruments. They represented themselves to be railroad officials, May saying he was a director of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, while Bennett gave his name as Daniel Drew, of New-York, and stated that his mission was the purchase of the Maryland and Delaware Railroad. They had with them maps of the Peninsula, and to several parties whom they encountered they said they were hunters bound on a gunning expedition. So great was their caution that these statements were generally believed in the neighborhood. Mr. Bennett's face showed a scar which was much swollen, probably by the cold. They walked down the railroad track due south for about a mile, and then, turning to the left, crossed an open field over a small hill into a glade which separates the Chaptauk River from the road. Here a suitable spot was selected, and the combatants were placed in position, face to face, at 20 paces.

The ground having been measured and the men being in position, the seconds took the pistols from their cases and attended to the loading of the weapons. The arms were taken by the principals, and then, after the usual preliminaries, came the order—"Fire!" There was a single report, and when the slight smoke of the burning powder had disappeared, both men were standing unhurt. Two more shots were exchanged with a similar result. After the third shot was fired the seconds interfered, mutual explanations were made, and the affair amicably, though, of course, rather sheepishly, settled. Both parties left the field evidently in high spirits at the pleasant conclusion of what promised to be a bloody tragedy. Mr. May and his party drove to Slaughter's Station, and thence to Dover, where they secured rooms and spent the night in a rather convivial manner, sundry pitchers of ale, as is said, being called into requisition. They left for Philadelphia this morning and were to start thence immediately for New-York City. A Mr. Tilghman was with Mr. May. They paid liberally for services rendered them, including that of silence. Mr. Bennett proceeded to Clayton, at which place he secured a special train for Wilmington and Philadelphia. On his way to the train Mr. Bennett was heard to inquire frequently of his friends as to whether he had committed any error in making the proposals which he had submitted to the other side, to which they replied that he had not, but that what was done would prove satisfactory to both parties. It is believed that both men are satisfied, and that there will be no further hostile meeting.

THE FIELD AFTER THE FIGHT.

A neighboring farmer, who chanced to witness the arrival of the dueling party, acted as our guide during the day. He happened to be working in a field near the State line, fixing up some fences the recent storm had prostrated. Between himself and the supposed prospecting railroad party was a narrow strip of open wood which acted as a partial cover, and doubtless prevented the beligerents from observing him. He says the gentlemen walked leisurely along until they reached a stone supposed to mark the boundary line between the two States, and then stopped. Two of the gentlemen stepped apart from the remaining company and walked about 15 or 20 paces, when they suddenly halted, and, turning about, one of them returned to the party. These gentlemen were evidently the seconds pacing off the distance for shooting, for in a few seconds two others of the party were seen to lay off their overcoats and take up positions, one where the party remained after walking off with his companion, and the other at the point to which the second gentleman had returned. All save these two now withdrew some 40 or 50 feet, and the seconds proceeded each to load a pistol, standing near one another at the time. They evidently used regular dueling pistols, for powder was forced into the weapons from what appeared to the honest but astonished farmer a powder-flask, or some small article held in the hand. This was succeeded by a short parley between the gentlemen, after which they walked to their principals and handed over the pistols. Again withdrawing, one of them called out, "Are you ready?" in a tone which was distinctly audible to the countryman, who says he had by this time become thoroughly frightened. Whether the two principals responded or not he is unable to state, but he distinctly heard the same man who had propounded the interrogation call out in a sullen tone, "One, two, three," and instantly the report, sharp and quick, rang out. He did not notice any smoke issue from the pistols, but accounts for this by the fact that he was watching to see one or both men fall, and paid no attention to the firearms. In this, however, he was happily disappointed. This was repeated twice. After the third shot neither of the principals moved from their positions for a minute or two, and then there seemed to be a consultation which lasted eight or ten minutes, at the conclusion of which the entire party left the ground. The party of three (Mr. May's) walked back to the sleigh, while Mr. Bennett's party hired a conveyance at Slaughter's, the next station above this, and drove to Clayton. May and his friends drove off in the direction of Dover. Neither of the three appeared to be in the least hurt, for each walked without any assistance from the other. These facts are given as they were narrated to your correspondent by the farmer while we were plodding across the fields toward the ground.

As we ascended a little knoll and drew near the summit the farmer said, pointing a little to the right: "There is the place, just on that little level yonder." The ground indicated was reached in a couple of moments, and on making a close inspection it was found that the footsteps in the snow, which was soft at the time of the duel, but was now frozen hard, were wonderfully distinct. The stone above alluded to as marking the line was about 50 feet off to the right of the firing parties as you look across into Maryland from Delaware. Not a drop of blood could be seen anywhere on the snow, nor was there the slightest evidence that any one had fallen to the ground. The tracks made by the seconds in measuring off the distance were every one perfect, and were 20 in number—10 made by the right and 10 by the left foot. Your correspondent paced it off, and could not get over the ground, without making an extraordinary stride, in less than 21 paces. Both the seconds must have been extremely long-legged men, for such tall walking as they did upon this occasion is rarely seen. We have been over many battle-fields in our time, but this was the most barren of trophies of any we ever witnessed. Not a fragment of shell, a splintered gun-stock, a strip of rent clothing, or even a stray bullet could be found. Tall tracks alone remained to show where a few brief hours before a remarkable struggle had raged, and your correspondent did not feel like bringing off any of these.

We retraced our steps to the road, bade adieu to the countryman, and returned as rapidly as possible to this place, which is the nearest telegraph station. Here we learned that Mr. Bennett's party had gone direct to Clayton on returning from the field, where they telegraphed to Wilmington for a special train, which was promptly sent, and at 7:52 they started for Wilmington, reaching there at 9:08 o'clock. They then took the regular 9:46 train for Philadelphia, and reached that place about 12 o'clock.

May's party was traced to Dover, where they stopped for the night. In the morning Mr. May and one of his friends took the train for Philadelphia, the other member of the trio going direct to Baltimore. All who saw them state they were apparently in good health. Mr. Fred. May is said to have read a paper during the trip to Philadelphia. The conductor of the special train which took Mr. Bennett and his friends from Clayton, stated to your correspondent that the gentlemen were in excellent spirits during the journey, were lavish with their money, and seemed to be bent on having a modest kind of spree. While waiting at Wilmington for the train going north, one of them proposed that they remain there all night, whereupon another said, "No; go on to Philadelphia and have a high old time. Make a night of it." Every one in this neighborhood is convinced that no blood was shed. The Bennett party spoke to no one here, and at Clayton the only person who heard a syllable uttered by any of them was the station agent and the telegraph operator. To neither of these parties, however, did they speak of the object of their visit, and it was not until about 2 o'clock to-day that the modest folk of that sleepy village had any suspicions that a duel had been fought within a few miles of them. The first intimation they had of it was a telegram from Philadelphia, asking for news.

MR. BENNETT IN PHILADELPHIA.

ARRIVAL OF THE PARTY AT THE CONTINENTAL HOTEL—FRIENDS REGISTERED UNDER ASSUMED NAMES—HOW THEY PASSED THE NIGHT—A VOYAGE TO EUROPE IN PROSPECT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 9.—The arrival of James Gordon Bennett and party in this city last night produced great excitement, especially when it was known that he had met Frederick May according to the rules of the code duello. The Continental Hotel has been crowded all day, and the affair has been discussed in all its possible phases.

Mr. Bennett laid his plans in regard to the affair very carefully, and these who were in the secret knew well where to go and what to do. On Monday afternoon two gentlemen arrived at the Continental Hotel and registered as James Hunt and C. Lowery, New-York. The first-named gentleman was assigned to parlor No. 44, and the latter to parlor No. 45. The adjoining room, No. 43, was engaged at the same time, and fire was ordered in each of the apartments. The latter room was for Mr. Bennett. The three rooms communicated, and they were soon comfortably warmed. About midnight a cab drove up to the hotel and three gentlemen alighted and passed into the corridor. They had come from the depot of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company, at Broad street and Washington avenue, and the driver was a man named Quinn, who did not know who his passengers were until he saw the name of J. G. Bennett placed on the register, and then he comprehended the situation. Mr. Bennett's party were at once assigned to parlors Nos. 56 and 57. The night was passed in a most convivial manner, and the scene of the afternoon was soon forgotten, as the case of champagne which found its way to No. 43 disappeared. Indeed, the carousal lasted so long and was so noisy that many of the persons rooming on the same floor were unable to sleep. The duelist and his companions slept long in the morning, leaving orders at the hotel office to be awakened at 9:30 o'clock, at which hour Mr. Bennett arose. It was then learned that the names of the parties who had arrived yesterday afternoon were fictitious—that "James Hunt" was Mr. Louis Lorillard, and that "C. Lowery" was none other than Mr. Carroll Livingstone, thus shewing conclusively that Mr. Bennett's second in the duel was Mr. S. H. Robbins, as the other two who were reported to have been engaged in the affair were in Philadelphia while it was taking place.

Mr. Bennett's servant kept a strict watch at the hotel office for letters and telegrams, and carried all messages to Mr. Bennett's room, not allowing the hotel servants to perform this service. A number of messages were sent away during the day, but to whom they were addressed could not be learned. A gentleman who visited Mr. Bennett this morning reported that he was in good spirits, and was not hurt in the encounter; but in the conversation held he did not refer to the duel. The principal was kept a close prisoner all day, not even the servants being allowed to enter the room, his meals being received at the door by one of his friends who remained in constant attendance upon him. Dr. Phelps, of New-York, seeing that his services were not required longer, left the city on the 11 o'clock train. All efforts to get a word from him in regard to the affair proved fruitless.

Further inquiries by THE TIMES correspondent reveals the fact that on Sunday morning last, about 3 o'clock, two gentlemen answering the description of Mr. Livingstone and Mr. Lorillard arrived at the La Pierre House, and registered as Mr. Harrington and B. Barnes, New-York, the handwriting being the same as that on the register at the Continental Hotel for Messrs. Hunt and Lowery. Mr. Livingstone asked for a room with parlor attached, and desired to impress upon the clerk the fact that breakfast must be served promptly at 6 o'clock, as he and his friend would take the 8:10 train that morning for Wilmington, Del. Both were nervous—Lorillard pacing the floor, while Livingstone ordered a breakfast of toast, tea, and eggs in some shape or other. They retired and left the hotel about 7 o'clock, and did not appear here again until Monday evening, when they engaged rooms at the Continental Hotel. It is not known positively that Mr. May came to this city to-day. If he did he proceeded to the residence of some friend, as the hotel register fails to reveal his whereabouts, either under an assumed name or his correct one. It is believed he proceeded northward.

Midnight.—James Gordon Bennett and his friends left the Continental Hotel shortly after 11 o'clock to-night. They passed out by the ladies' entrance, and took a carriage, the driver being instructed to proceed to the West Philadelphia Depot to meet the midnight train for New-York. They slipped out of the house so quietly that their departure was hardly observed. Clerks in the hotel have become suddenly reticent. It is not believed that the party will go as far as New-York. There are rumors to the effect that Mr. Bennett will sail for Europe to-morrow, and that instructions were telegraphed to New-York to a friend to procure four passage tickets on the steamer sailing.

BENNETT'S SURGEON AND SECOND.

DR. PHELPS DECLINES TO GIVE ANY DETAILS REGARDING THE DUEL—MR. HOWLAND ROBBINS NOT TO BE FOUND.

Dr. Charles Phelps, the medical gentleman who is said to have attended Mr. Bennett as surgeon, was found by a TIMES reporter yesterday at his residence, No. 117 East Nineteenth street. The Doctor had evidently returned from a sudden expedition or tour, judging from the traveling-bags, overcoat, &c., with which his reception-room was encumbered. He received THE TIMES' representative cordially, but on the all-important subject of the combat refused to say anything beyond the fact that whatever he had done he was fully responsible for. He would not even admit that there had been a duel, or that he had been in Philadelphia, although his name and address were registered at the Continental Hotel in that city on Wednesday night. In regard to Mr. Bennett, he said if that gentleman or his friends had registered his name at the hotel in question, it was fair to presume that he had been there in person. As to the details of the fight, who was hurt and to what extent, he refused to vouchsafe any information whatever.

Mr. Howland Robbins, who is understood to have acted as Mr. Bennett's second, and who has been absent from the City for several days, has apparently not yet returned, or, if in town, is keeping sedulously quiet. A rigid inquiry at the Union, the Knickerbocker, the Jockey, and other clubs last evening failed to develop his whereabouts, although the most contradictory stories as to his having been seen in the City during the past 48 hours were told by different persons. At the Jockey Club it was said that he had breakfasted there on Monday morning, and left there on the evening of the same day. None of his associates, however, could be found to admit that they had seen him, and his present whereabouts are still a matter of mystery.

GOSSIP AT THE UNION CLUB.

THE MEMBERS UNWILLING TO IMPART INFORMATION ON THE ABSORBING TOPIC—MORE RUMORS—BELIEF THAT MRS. BENNETT WILL GO TO EUROPE AT ONCE.

The members of the Union Club seemed determined yesterday to give no information regarding the duel, and there was an evident disinclination among them to talk with outsiders. From the mysterious manner that every club man assumed whenever a reporter approached him, it might easily be inferred that, although Mr. Bennett had come out of the duel unscathed, Mr. May had either been killed outright or received a grievous wound. Close observation of members at other times, however, gave rise to the belief that the duel bore a remarkable resemblance to the bloodless encounter of "Tommy Little and the great Mr. Jeffrey." Late last night a number of the club was found who was willing to unbosom himself. He said that a duel had certainly been fought and that Mr. May had been wounded. He refused to state definitely in what part of May's body the bullet had lodged, but pointed, as he spoke, in a suggestive way, to his own right shoulder. Then he said: "But Mr. May's wound is by no means dangerous. It does not even prevent him from using a pen." He also said that the gentleman mentioned in the newspapers—Mr. Howland S. Robbins—did not really act as second to Mr. Bennett. The seconds of the two combatants were non-residents of this State, chosen because they would not be amenable to the laws of New-York. The gentlemen declined to tell how the combatants acted after their encounter, but said that Mr. May had gone to Washington, and that Mr. Bennett had returned to this City. He felt convinced that Mr. May's brother would not endeavor to procure satisfaction from Mr. Bennett. In conclusion, he said he believed that Mr. Bennett would start for Europe either to-day or on Saturday night in order to avoid arrest.

Dr. Frederick W. May and the members of his family refused positively yesterday to talk about the duel. A near relative of the family was found, however, at the Union Club. Upon being interrogated, he declared that he knew nothing definite of the meeting between Messrs. Bennett and May. He was convinced, however, there had been no bloodshed. He had received a dispatch on Monday night from a gentleman with the dueling party, which simply said, "All right." This, he considered, meant that neither of the duelists had been hurt. Yesterday afternoon Dr. May received a dispatch from his son, which simply said "Have written." The letter thus alluded to was expected to reach him last evening. The relative of Dr. May with whom the reporter of THE TIMES conversed, said that if the letter arrived last night, and contained anything that could properly be given to the public, he would communicate it. At a late hour he sent word that he knew nothing new, and from this it is presumed Mr. May's letter has not yet reached his family.

MISTAKEN FOR ONE OF THE "ACTORS."

The public interest in the Bennett-May farce was such yesterday as to rouse even the sedate inhabitants of Jersey City. On the arrival of the 4 o'clock train from Philadelphia a rush was made for the cars, and the pleasure of the multitude was great when a tall, manly form robed in a brown overcoat made its way through the throng, amid exclamations of "That's Bennett!" "That's him," &c. The gentleman, who was non other than Mr. John H. Draper, of the well-known auction firm of Draper & Co., bore his blushinge honors with exceeding good humor, and when the ferry-boat carried his receding form from view four-fifths of the people on the Jersey shore imagined that they had beheld the veritable "hero" just returned from "the field of honor."

THE PENALTY FOR DUELING.

MESSRS. BENNETT AND MAY AND THEIR SECONDS LIABLE TO CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—THE LAWS OF NEW-YORK AND MARYLAND ON THE SUBJECT.

Contrary to general belief, it is not the duty of the District Attorney of any county to investigate any violations of the law which may take place within his jurisdiction. As a rule his duty is to take action on complaints sent to him by a committing magistrate—not to institute proceedings or go out of his way to discover real or imaginary offenders. Pers

NEW-JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

THE GOVERNOR'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

MEETING OF THE STATE LEGISLATURE—THE LOWER HOUSE NOT YET ORGANIZED—A PRESIDENT AND OTHER OFFICERS ELECTED IN THE SENATE—GOV. BEDLE'S MESSAGE PRESENTED—THE FINANCES OF THE STATE—NATIONAL AFFAIRS REFERRED TO.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Tuesday, Jan. 9, 1877.

The excitement occasioned last evening by the anticipated difficulty in the organization of the lower house of the Legislature was augmented by the failure of that body to organize this afternoon. The Republicans hold a meeting in the morning to receive the report of the committee appointed to confer with the Democracy upon the subject of the division of the offices. The committee had been instructed to demand the Speakership for the Republican nominee, Mr. Scovil, of Camden. The Democrats had refused peremptorily to listen to any proposition for compromise which did not concede the Speakership to Mr. Rabe, the nominee of the Democratic caucus. The caucus this morning continued the compromise committee. At 2:30 o'clock this afternoon the Democratic members met in caucus in the Supreme Court Chambers, and nominated R. F. Rabe, of Hudson, for Speaker, and John Y. Foster, Republican, for Clerk. While they were engaged, the hour of 3 having arrived, the House was called to order by Mr. Foster, the Clerk of the last House. The roll-call showed that only the Republican members were in attendance, and as their number lacks one of a quorum, an adjournment was taken till to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The Senate met at 3 o'clock, with Gen. Sewell in the chair. The new members were ceremoniously sworn in, and an organization was effected by the choice of Hon. Leon Abbett, of Hudson, as presiding officer; of Charles K. Jamison, of Somerset, as Secretary; John Simerson, of Warren, as Assistant Secretary; Thomas G. Bunnell, of Sussex, as Engrossing Clerk; Addis Hayes, of Burlington, Sergeant at arms, and Michael C. Nathan, of Hudson, Assistant Sergeant at arms. The Republican nominees were Gen. Sewell, for President; N. W. Voorhies, Secretary; William Cloke, Reader, and F. F. Paterson, Engrosser. The Senate then listened to the annual Message of Gov. Bekle. The following are the principal points made:

"It seems probable that your labors will not be arduous, and that this session can be concluded at an early day. The financial affairs of the State have been carefully managed during the last year. The receipts into the Treasury for the year ending Oct. 31, 1876, were $3,195,403. The balance in bank to the credit of all the funds (except sinking) Oct. 31, 1875, was $308,769 05. These sums added make a total of $3,504,262 05. The disbursements for the year for all purposes (not including those from the sinking fund) were $3,386,186 04, leaving a balance in bank, Oct. 31, 1876, of $118,076 01. Of the amount disbursed, $218,500 was invested for the benefit of the school fund as a permanent increase. That taken from the total disbursements leaves $3,167,686 04 for the expenditures of the year. It is impossible safely and wisely to legislate without a full comprehension of the scope and character of all the purposes for which the public moneys are already being expended. Applications are often made to the Legislature on the ground of charity, benevolence, or other claims of duty, which in themselves appear plausible and meritorious, and which, if considered alone, might induce appropriations; yet, viewed in the light of other obligations, at once are seen to be beyond the ability and any present duty of the State. Economy is as valuable to the State as to individuals, although a narrow policy in legislation does not promote good government or substantial growth, yet there is danger that the State may become too liberal, even for the best of objects, and exceed both its means and existing duties. It is important at a time like this, when most branches of business are depressed, and the people feel the need of retrenchment, that all public expenditures should be kept at their lowest reasonable limits. As stated, the last year's disbursements, less the school fund investments, were $3,167,686 04.

"The outstanding war debt of Oct. 31, 1867, was $2,396,300. The assets then in the sinking fund were $1,339,379 57. The State owns 6,000 shares of the stock of the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company, and of the joint stock of the Delaware and Raritan Canal and Camden and Amboy Railroad Companies amounting to $288,700 at par value; also bonds of the joint companies for $24,000, and a bond of the Jersey City and Bergen Railroad Company of $10,000. They are worth in the market about $400,000. These, or an equivalent amount of securities, should always be retained. The State also owns Centennial stock for which $100,000 were paid, under the act of 1874. The Exhibition has been a success far beyond the expectation of the most sanguine, and great credit is due to the Commissioners and Finance Board, particularly the latter, and especially its President, John Welsh, for most admirable financial management. The United States appropriated $1,500,000 by an act of Congress, Feb. 16, 1876, toward the completion of the "Centennial buildings and other preparations," and a question has arisen under certain provisions of the act, whether the United States is entitled to be reimbursed the amount so appropriated before any payment is made to the stockholders. Without going into particulars, the contention of the stockholders is that they should be first paid, and a bill in interpleader has been filed in the Finance Board in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania to settle the question. The State will be represented in the suit, and a speedy argument and decision are expected. In a communication from the President of the board, an approximate estimate gives the stockholders 85 per cent, the United States the preference, and, if otherwise, 80 per cent.

"The county bonds for the surplus revenue of the United States amount to $764,670 44. The Controller estimates $1,650,000 as the amount of disbursements to be made and provided for during this year. That includes $100,000 for the principal of war bonds maturing Jan. 1, 1878, and $42,959 55 for interest to meet the demands of the sinking fund next year. These sums must be provided for by the taxes. It also includes $238,000 now due from the State fund to the school fund, and $65,000 to grow due for the year 1877. Should the law be changed so as to relieve the pecuniary necessity for the above item, from the payment of this annual sum to the school fund, that last amount (65,000) can be deducted from the estimate of liabilities. The estimate of probable revenue is $1,651,505 43. This is made up of the usual tax of one and a half mills on the dollar according to the ratables of 1876, and will amount to $895,402 06, being $23,694 50 less than last year's tax."

In relation to the State Prison, the Governor says, the number of convicts, Oct. 31, 1876, was 829. It is an imperative necessity that additional room be furnished as early as possible. He recommends that provision be made for the care of insane convicts. The cost of maintaining these, last year, was $10,075 41.

"The use in November last of Federal troops to aid in excluding from the House of Representatives of South Carolina certain persons claiming to have been elected members, and having the judgment of the highest court of the State in their favor, was a clear invasion of the rights of States and a most dangerous perversion of the authority conferred by the National Constitution to protect a State against domestic violence. In effect, a mere question relating to seats in a State Legislature was determined for them in their by the military power of the General Government. The act should have been officially and unmistakably repudiated and condemned, lest it might become a precedent for like or greater abuses. The claim of some, high in office, at this late day in the history of our Republic, that the President of the Senate should count the votes for President and Vice President of the United States, has created a widespread apprehension that the line of precedents which have given a practical construction to the Constitution and confirmed its meaning may be departed from and the will of the people in the recent election not fairly ascertained and obeyed. That, and kindred questions affecting the count, have passed beyond or under the control of partisan politics, and must now be solved on constitutional and legal principles, free from party bias and under a deep sense of justice. Men upon whom the responsibility rests can rise equal to this great duty and by a broad statesmanship assure the country that the result, whatever it may be, is uncontaminated by fraud or undue advantage. My hope and belief is that they will. God grant that wise counsels may prevail—that party success be as nothing in comparison with the noble purpose of doing right, despite the consequences, and our land be saved from bitter and disastrous strifes."

SOME PUNGENT REFLECTIONS ON THE SITUATION.

THE ASPIRANTS FOR SENATORIAL HONORS—PEN AND INK SKETCHES OF PROBABLE CANDIDATES—THE REPUBLICAN OPPORTUNITY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The Legislature of New-Jersey met to-day, with a tie in the Assembly and a Democratic majority of one in the Senate. There is great excitement among small politicians about a possible dead-lock in the organization of the lower house, and much speculation as to which party will surrender. Outside of the hangers-on who hope to be clerks or door-keepers, or Sergeant at arms, this sanfile has very little interest, except as it bears remotely on the serious question of the United States Senatorship. The Republican managers, who threw away the control of the situation last November, are waiting for some providential interference. They have already had one Democratic Assemblyman retired, and another dying of typhoid fever; they have found one seat to contest; they claim two or three members as "Independents," and say that certain others are advertising themselves as "open to conviction." But after all, there stands that refractory majority of "one" on joint ballot, which is not much to boast of, but quite enough to make a Senator. There never was a scarcity of Democratic candidates for anything in New-Jersey, but the public have been made to believe that two alone of all the aspirants will struggle with determination to the end. One of these is Ashbel Green, a fussy and consequential New-York lawyer. He is well connected, has a prosperous practice, grades "fair to middling" in political morals, and if he should reach the Senate nobody would ever find it out but Mr. Green. He has emerged from the huddle of mediocrities into something like prominence because he is supposed to be the choice of the State-house Ring. There is enough truth in this to keep Mr. Green comfortable until voting time, when he will suddenly drop into a hole which Gov. Bedle, who has great talent for burrowing in dirt and darkness, has been industriously excavating underneath him. Then the little Governor will crawl up on top of Mr. Green, shake the soil from his broadcloth, utter some pious sentiment, and take the State-house votes. Hon. Leon Abbett, the exemplary Senator from Hudson, is helping Mr. Green, because Mr. Abbett hopes to be President of the Senate, and if he assists Mr. Green into the hole and Mr. Bedle into Frelinghuysen's seat, Mr. Abbett will be ex officio Governor of New-Jersey, with a luminous pathway to future glory stretching straight away before him.

John R. McPherson, an ambitious butcher, asserts that he already holds a majority of the caucus, and this is dangerously near the truth. Mr. McPherson's wits have been sharpened and his moral sense blunted by contact with many practical political jobbers, until he is a finished statesman. From the late court-house sensation backward, there have been few large operations in Hudson County in which his hand has not been suspected. No adult male in New-Jersey would ever think of Mr. McPherson as a Senator; but Col. Thomas Scott wants a steady voter when his South Pacific scheme comes before the Senate, and Col. Scott knows his man. When in the State Senate, Mr. McPherson was quite as reliable a representative of Pennsylvania interest as Frank Ward was in the lower house. But since Mr. Jay Gould's lobby has coalesced with Col. Scott's, the Colonel feels less nervous, and he may refrain from perpetrating so gross an outrage upon his subjects in New-Jersey as to make this person Senator. Even if he persists in his intention he may force a rebellion, and two or three Democrats might muster sufficient self-respect to bolt from caucus control and fill the air with music. In this event and in many another contingency, there are plenty of Democrats who would like to hold the fort with hope of drawing Republican support. There is Vanatta, a stealthy, Italian sort of gentleman, who always suggests a stiletto to the man whom he slides behind; and Joel Parker, a compound of adipose tissue and Bourbonism; and Ben Williamson, who would have a little of every Senatorial qualification if he had a little conscience; and Bob Gilchrist, who wouldn't make a bad Senator if he was only leveled up well; and Teese, the feather-weight Congressman from Essex in the present House; and Righter, who wanted his place in the next; and Browning, a paleozoic respectability from Camden. On a much higher level of mental endowment and personal character and political sagacity, Staff Little stands biding his time; and Chancellor Runyon, who remembers how Ben Bogart helped him in his simonus ascent, is also in the hands of his friends.

If there should come a genuine January thaw, it is not improbable that some Republican will have a chance in the general break-up. It will hardly be Frelinghuysen, who might have won with a Republican majority. Secretary Robeson has warm friends in the lower house, but seems to them unjust treatment, but Mr. Robeson realizes his position, and if he has suffered from bad company is content to await the tardy justice which time will bring. Sewell has no strength of his own, and there remain to select from: Cortlandt Parker, William Walter Phelps, and George A. Halsey. Mr. Parker is, without doubt, a man of Senatorial stature, and, after having almost grasped a prize of first magnitude so often, his friends are encouraged to hope that his opportunity at last has come. The independent course of Mr. Phelps, which under other circumstances might prove a detriment, is now a strong argument in his favor, and there is no question of his eminent fitness for the position; while the sturdy common sense of Mr. Halsey and his recognized ability as a manager make him a formidable competitor for any post of honor in New-Jersey for which he chooses to contend. Any one of the three would do credit to the State and help it overwhelm the depressing influence of Randolph, whose narrow and bigoted partisanship is most annoying to respectable men of all parties. All things considered, the situation is sufficiently doubtful to restrain political prophecy within moderate limits, and the serious illness of McPherson does not mitigate the prevalent uncertainties.

TRENTON, Tuesday, Jan. 9, 1877.

STREET CLEANING.

HOW MR. DISBECKER DID IT—A RESUME OF THE WORK OF THE STREET-CLEANING BUREAU FOR 1874 AND 1875.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In the controversy raised by the present Board of Police as to the cleaning of the streets of the City I have heretofore taken no part, and would now abstain from doing so were it not for the statements made at the meeting of the Board of Apportionment yesterday. The facts on the subject of the past management of the Department of Police as to the cleaning of the streets, are as follows:

Prior to the year 1874 there was no unexpended balance of the appropriation for street cleaning remaining to the credit of the department at the close of any one year. In 1874, the amount of the appropriation for cleaning streets was $950,000. For the first six months of the year the moneys paid on account of this appropriation were $497,158 57, and in addition to this amount there were liabilities incurred, but not paid, amounting to upward of $80,000. I was appointed Chairman of the Street-cleaning Bureau early in July, 1874, and from that date I had the sole charge of the matter during the latter half of the year 1874. I caused the streets to be thoroughly swept and the garbage and ashes removed, and in the month of December the snow and ice were removed from Broadway from the Battery to Thirty-fourth street. I performed this work, which was paid for out of the appropriation for cleaning the streets—the entire expenditure for the latter half of 1874, including the payment of the $80,000 arrears for the first six months of the year, —being $385,546 23. For the first time in the management or the cleaning of the streets by the Police Department, my management produced a surplus in the Treasury, the amount of the surplus for street-cleaning fund for 1874 being $67,295 15.

At my request the Board of Apportionment in making up the estimate for the year 1875 reduced the appropriation for street cleaning from $950,000, the amount of the appropriation in 1874, to $800,000, the amount of the appropriation for 1875.

During the entire year 1875 I had the charge of the cleaning of the streets as Chairman of the Street-cleaning Bureau. There were no less than 27 snow-storms during this year, and the snow of each storm as it fell was removed from Broadway from the Battery to Thirty-fourth streets, and various other streets, particularly Wall, Cortlandt, Fulton, Nassau, Chambers, and Fifth avenue from Fourteenth to Fiftieth street were kept free from obstruction of ice and snow. I caused all the work to be performed, and had the streets during the year properly swept and the garbage and ashes removed, and when I left the department on the last day of the year there was to the credit of the appropriation $120,932 14. All claims connected with the cleaning of the streets for 1875 had been paid before I left, except the payroll for December, which was made up and signed by me, amounting to $48,848 96, and a few bills, all of which I had approved, and which did not exceed in amount $2,000. Thus, after performing all the work, there remained for the second time, through my management, a surplus in the treasury of the appropriation for cleaning the streets of about $70,000.

When the Board of Estimate and Apportionment were—in December, 1875—making up the final estimate for the year 1876, I advised that the appropriation for street cleaning should be still further reduced from $800,000—the amount appropriated for 1875—to $725,000, which was the amount appropriated for 1876, and this amount, I can say from my knowledge of the work to be executed, was ample to meet the expense for the same, including the expense of keeping the leading thoroughfares free from the obstruction of ice and snow. The system of the Board of Police co-operating with the stage and railroad companies as to the removal of ice and snow, was first introduced by me, and this co-operation continued during my management of the Street-cleaning Bureau. There was not during the years 1874 or 1875 any special appropriation for removing ice and snow.

After my management of the Street-cleaning Bureau ceased, there has been no surplus of the appropriation for cleaning the streets. It was therefore only during my management of the bureau that there remained a surplus, and it is this surplus that the present Police Commissioners desire to have placed at their disposal.

ABRAHAM DISBECKER.

FOUL PLAY SUSPECTED.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 9.—James E. Burbans, the Pine Plains ticket agent for the Poughkeepsie, Hartford, and Boston Railroad Company, has been missing since Saturday night. His accounts are all right, and as he is a man of irreproachable character, it is feared he has met with foul play.

THE KINGDOM OF ITALY.

NOTES FROM THE ANCIENT CITY.

THE ELEMENTS OF WHICH THE PRESENT CHAMBER IS COMPOSED—BALDNESS AND WISDOM—A NUMBER OF MEDICAL MEN—EUGENIE AND HER COW—WINTER WEATHER IN ITALY—THE MANIA FOR MAKING IMPROVEMENTS—THE CHURCHES OF ROME—BRIGANDAGE AND BEGGARY.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ROME, Monday, Dec. 18, 1876.

One who has long been a spectator in the Italian Parliament, looking down from one of the tribunes, will notice a considerable change in the elements of which the present Chamber is composed. That there are fewer bald heads to be seen among the Deputies is not a proof that all the old men have been left at home; for it is a fact of physical temperament, among Italians hardly to be expected, that baldness is common at an early age. Whether it be a national fever of the blood, or excessive care and activity, or laziness of the brain and nervous system, which causes a premature loss of hair, must be left to the physiologists to determine. But if there are fewer bald heads in Parliament, it does not necessarily follow that there is less of political wisdom. Indeed, the progress made the past week in casting up the balance for the year shows that the 250 or more Deputies present are capable of making a display of business energy. The Party of the Left are masters of the situation, and have it nearly wholly after their own fashion. The benches of the Opposition are thinly filled, and hardly a voice has yet been raised by any of that party. One who lounges away an hour or two every day in the convenient places assigned to journalists has time enough to compare notes with his associates, so few incidents are presented to occupy attention in the proceedings of the Chamber. In a few days the members will go to their homes, to pass the two or three weeks of the Christmas, New Year's and Epiphany vacation. It may be deemed a healthy symptom—the fact that the Italian Parliament has a respectable number of men of the medical profession among the members, both of the upper and the lower house. The well-known Dr. Pantaleoni, of Rome, is a conspicuous and useful member of the Senate, and Dr. Baccelli, Dr. Bertani, and Dr. Lanza—who has held the place of Prime Minister—are among the best-instructed and active in the Deputies' Chamber. Luigi Carlo Farini, one of the most honest and capable of the men that Italy has had in public life in our time, was a physician by profession. He died refusing the emoluments which the State offered him for his patriotic services, leaving an example of generous abnegation rare in this epoch of huckstering demagogues and politicians, who peddle their talents for the rewards of place.

The ex-Empress Eugenie, with her son, is here; but their presence produces no sensation. Pity is felt for the good lady, as for one who has tasted the cup of the two extremes of the sweetest and bitterest experiences. As for the young man, her son, he is looked on kindly, left as he is new to carve out, with the talents he has, his future fortunes. The two are lodged in the modest villa of the Cardinal Bonaparte, near the Pia gate. The Prince is active, flitting from one side of the town to the other, making visits and seeing the monuments. On arriving here he went at once to pay his respects to the Pope. The ex-Empress sent a note to the holy father, thanking him for kindnesses of the past, and asking when it would be convenient to give audience for a prolonged conference, Saturday was named, and day before yesterday, just before noon, a modest carriage, closely shut, was seen to stop before the entrance of the Vatican, on the side of St. Peter's, and from it alighted the ex-Empress, her son, and a single attendant. The Pope was not very well that day, and the interview continued for but half an hour. No one knows what was talked about, and it little concerns outsiders to know, as Vatican conferences now have little influence upon the political interests of the world. But we are reminded of the long period of twenty years that Louis Napoleon did constable's duty at the door of the Pope's palace, while Italians were pleading to be allowed to be protestors of all the members of their own political household, and vainly pleaded until there came at last a Providential intervention.

The gloom and drip of the weary Winter months have well set in, and the week of rain which has already afflicted us leaves little hope that we shall fare much better for the rest of the short days. For us it is no disappointment; but to those who come to Rome for the first time a wet blanket is thrown over the warm expectations which much novel-reading may have awakened in fanciful minds. Any part of the year, except Winter, is the best time to enjoy Italy, if such enjoyment depends upon continued fine weather. And yet there are days in Winter, if the season is a favorable one, so mellow, genial, and delightful, that for the moment we are all carried away with admiration of the climate, and the only expressions indulged are those of praise. During such bright intervals real pleasure is found in going out on the Campagna, to get a good drenching of sunshine; which takes more bad humors out of the body, and out of a mind chronically prone to melancholy, than can any mediome, or music and dances and wax-lights of the most brilliant salons. I have traversed the Campagna scores of times, in every direction, mode, and sense; by rail, vettura, go-cart, and on foot, and know well its grassy levels, and ups and downs of ruins and tufa rocks, and, what there are of them, rural dells. If Percy Shelley could come back to this world, he would not find the shrubbery still growing upon the top of the vast fragments of wall left of the Baths of Caracalla. In the preface to "Queen Mab," the poet tells us that he spent whole days sitting among the bushes which made a charming sylvan nest of those heights, and that there the principal part of the poem was composed. Shelley—as a poet naturally must—indulged in a little exaggeration in describing the extent of those hanging gardens which nature—left undisturbed—had formed upon the ruins. But now they hardly exist, and the passages in the walls which lead to them have been closed up. The archæological directors, under their head man, Signor Rosa, have made sad work in some places with their bungling attempts to patch up the ruins. They have even laid down a pavement in some of the great chambers of these thermæ, instead of leaving untouched the grass-grown area, scattered over with fallen fragments, among which former visitors found pleasure in clambering.

Speaking of this mania for making "improvements" reminds me that they have begun a tinkering process in the ancient church of St. John Lateran. The Pope's architects have taken it into their heads that to render harmonious the general design of the building it is necessary to extend considerably the tribune, or head of the cross, and it has been determined to add on 50 or 100 feet. A good deal of interesting old work in marble, mosaic, and fresco has to be removed, and fears have been expressed that the damage done to these cannot easily be restored. For my own part, I only wish they would let these old monuments alone. But the Pope has plenty of money, although he goes begging for it, and his engineers need a job. The work laid out will require several years for its execution, and a large sum of money will be used up. I think of the neglected and suffering condition of the great bulk of the proletaire population of Rome; their wretched habitations, scant food and raiment—and that of the worst quality—and the utter ignorance, both of morality and of letters, in which the children of the very poor are growing up. Christ nowhere has said [illegible] great churches; but in several places is the recorded injunction, "Feed My lambs." Rome has churches enough, the Lord well knows, crusted over with marbles, mosaics, and gilding, and all sorts of vanity of human endeavor. The present is a period of unusual suffering, owing to high prices, scarcity of foreign visitors—upon whom the Romans still too much depend—and the crowding in of new comers competing for places. I do not know when I have met so many cases of those in extremely pinched circumstances as have been encountered so far this present Winter, into which my hands of sedroit entered. One has to keep a bottle of the "milk of human kindness" about his person, from which to sip, so as not to allow the heart to harden against the more pressing demands. The streets swarm with beggars, in spite of the prohibitory law, and special cases of distress are reported in the newspapers. Brigandage and beggary go hand in hand—both companion evils, and evils which it seems the most difficult to extirpate. Sometimes proofs of their union are brought home to the breasts of some of us. A few nights back, Mr. Wood, of the London Times, was waiting for a friend near one of the hotels at the Piazza del Popolo, when he was accosted by a man asking alms. Mr. Wood took out his purse to give the mendicant something, when he was seized by the throat and both purse and watch were snatched and carried off. The act was so sudden and unexpected, and the surprise so stunning, that there was no time to give the alarm, and in a moment the thief was outside the city gates. Mr. Rose, the Englishman who was taken by brigands, near Palermo, and a ransom paid for his life, is now in Rome, and has seen the British Minister about the affair. It is said that the purpose is to ask the Italian Government for an indemnity in an equivalent sum. One does not know whether such a claim will stand law if it is made, or whether, in any case, it will be safe to establish such a precedent. It would be treating this Government as if it were no better than an incompetent negro authority on the African coast.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

TONS OF GUN BARRELS FOR TURKEY—SERVIA SAID TO BE NEGOTIATING FOR PEACE—ROUMANIA'S DECLARATION.

ANTWERP, Jan. 9.—A large firm here has concluded a contract with the Porte for dispatching to Turkey, within three days, 2,500 tons of gun barrels of the kind known as Endean's patent.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—The Pall Mall Gazette's special dispatch from Berlin contains the following: "It is announced that whether there be war or not the Russian Government proposes raising a new loan in the Spring."

The National Zeitung states that Servia is negotiating for peace directly with the Porte on the basis of the status quo and the maintenance of the Treaty of Paris. The Porte is favorable to this scheme. The National Zeitung says the German Ambassador at Constantinople is about to be recalled and no successor will be appointed.

A dispatch from Constantinople says: "Roumania has declared to the Porte that Article seven of the new Constitution violates her rights. She consequently declares herself released from her vassalage, throwing the responsibility of the step upon the Porte."

DISSOLUTION OF THE RUSSIAN DIVISION IN SERVIA.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The Post announces in an official form that the Porte has again pressed Nubar Pasha to accept the Governorship of Bulgaria, and Nubar is disposed to accept.

The Times' Vienna dispatch reports that on Monday the commander of the Russian division in Servia published an order of the day announcing the dissolution of the Russian division and appointed Wednesday as the day for their departure to Russia. It is said steamers for their conveyence have been chartered. The correspondent suggests the order may possibly be meant to exercise pressure upon the Russian volunteers, who refuse to be embodied in the Servian Army. The Berlin correspondent of the Times confirms this view, and says the Russian Legion is nominally dissolved, but the majority will probably remain as Servian soldiers. The Vienna correspondent says doubtless if the Legion remains and Servia is again ordered to take the field, she will obey. Preparations have been made in view of this. A new line of fortifications has been constructed from Razarj to Krusevec. The lines about Parahin and Cuprija have been completed and strengthened. Servia is so demoralized by her defeats that there is great doubt whether she can be expected to muster sufficient moral courage to make an independent peace with Turkey. Although the Servian Government is supposed to be making efforts in that direction a separate peace will certainly not be made while the Legion remains. The Government is overawed by the Legion, but on the other hand has relied upon it against the popular reaction which without doubt is impending.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE CONFERENCE—THE ACTION OF THE POWERS—THE ANDRASSY NOTE A BASIS FOR THE DEMAND OF THE PORTE.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—A dispatch from Constantinople says: "At yesterday's sitting of the conference the European plenipotentiaries pointed out that several points of the proposals of the powers formed part of the Andrassy note, and the Turkish representatives indicated their willingness to enter into discussion on the basis of that note. It is believed that at to-morrow's sitting the plenipotentiaries will make a last appeal to the Turkish representatives to discuss the proposals of the powers."

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says: "In semi-official quarters the fact that no decision was reached in yesterday's sitting of the conference is regarded as affording further proof that the Porte seeks to use the new Turkish Constitution as a means of avoiding compliance with the demands of the powers. Russia has reached the limit of concession, and the other powers have declared their determination to uphold the programme of the conference. Hitherto no pressure has been exerted upon the Porte, nor does the present action of the plenipotentiaries bear such a character. Nevertheless, the powers, while couching their representations in the most moderate terms, will firmly uphold their demands."

Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian plenipotentiary, is stated to have recently suggested that the reforms proposed by the powers be extended to Macedonia, Epirus, and Thessaly. It is understood Lord Salisbury, the English plenipotentiary, replied that such a proposal did not come within the scope of his instructions. A second dispatch from Constantinople says: "The Phare der Bosphore (newspaper) declares that inasmuch as all the articles of the conference programme are formed with the view to the delimitation or establishment of a privileged province, therefore, even if the powers withdraw four-fifths of their demands, the Porte would still persist in its objections." It is considered possible that to-morrow's sitting of the conference will be adjourned at the instance of the Turkish delegates, who are desirous to take steps toward an understanding on the basis of the Andrassy note."

A telegram from Constantinople announces that the next meeting of the Conference has been postponed to Thursday, at the request of the Turkish Minister, who will hold a Cabinet Council to-morrow to draw up a new project, on the basis of the Andrassy note.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—A dispatch from Constantinople to the Daily News says at Monday's sitting of the conference the Porte suggested that a commission composed of Ottoman subjects be substituted for the proposed international commission. The European Plenipotentiaries refused to listen to this suggestion. Lord Salisbury and Gen. Ignatieff have postponed their departure until Monday. This will give the Turks another week. Midhat Pasha, at his interview with Salisbury, declared that Europe was foolish to continue to annoy Turkey, as a general war might thereby result.

The Times, discussing the statement that the Porte is elaborating a new scheme, based on the Andrassy note, anticipates little result if Turkey is permitted to fence with the proposals of the powers. The game of delay has lasted too long, and we are all beginning to feel that the attitude of the conference is somewhat humiliating. But some signs appear to show that forbearance has nearly reached its limit. Prince Bismarck is said to have forbidden his representative to discuss any further concessions, impatience is beginning to be shown in other quarters, and unless the Turks suddenly change their tone a rupture may come any day.

A dispatch from Pera to the Daily Telegraph reports that great excitement prevails among the Turks in consequence of reports circulated by a Turkish newspaper of Russian defeats in Turkestan, and crowds of people are parading the streets of Constantinople cheering over the news.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION....Jan. 9.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate, the House bill abolishing the District of Columbia Board of Police Commissioners, was passed unanimously. The Runyon contempt case, growing out of the matter of the $8,000 check in the Oregon Cronin-Grover Electoral affair, was called up, and a resolution directing the arrest of Mr. Enos Runyon was adopted. The debate on the resolutions of Mr. Wallace regarding the counting of the Electoral vote was resumed, and Mr. Sherman spoke at length on the Louisiana election and the action of the Returning Board in throwing out certain polls, contending that the board had acted according to law. The resolutions went over.

In the House, the subject of the refusal of Mr. William Orton to appear and testify before the Louisiana Investigating Committee or to produce telegrams, came up, and a resolution directing the arrest of Mr. Orton was adopted. The case of J. Madison Wells and other members of the Louisiana Returning Board for refusing to produce the election returns, was referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to report what action should be taken.

SENATE.

The Chair laid before the Senate the report of the Attorney General for the year 1876. Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.

INTEREST UNDER THE GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. DAWES, of Massachusetts, presented a petition of citizens of Massachusetts, complaining of the rate of interest (four per cent.) allowed under the Geneva Award, and asking that two per cent. additional be paid to them. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAWES expressed the hope that the Judiciary Committee would give the subject early attention.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Iowa, a member of the Judiciary Committee, said the committee was making all the progress that it could in regard to this matter, and discussed it at every meeting of the committee.

WATER TRANSPORTATION ACROSS FLORIDA.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, submitted a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War to furnish the Senate with all the information in his possession concerning a water line for transportation from the mouth of the St. Mary's River, between the States of Georgia and Florida, through the Okefinokee swamp and through the State of Florida to some suitable point on the Gulf of Mexico, embracing the probable nature and character of such waterline, the extent of country and population to be benefited by its construction, and probable cost of survey. Agreed to.

THE DISTRICT POLICE.

The House bill to abolish the Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police of the District of Columbia and to transfer its duties to the Coimmissioners of the District of Columbia, was laid before the Senate and passed by a unanimous vote without discussion.

THE OREGON ELECTORAL CHECK FOR $8,000.

Mr. MORTON, of Indiana, called up the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections yesterday, instructing the President pro tem. of the Senate to issue his warrant for the arrest of Enos Runyon, of the firm of Martin & Runyon, bankers, of Wall street, New York City, and have him brought to the bar of the Senate to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt in refusing to answer the questions propounded to him by the committee as to who ordered the check for $8,000, to be drawn in favor of Messrs. Ladd & Bush, of Salem, Oregon.

Mr. WHITE, of Maryland, said he would vote for any resolution to enforce an answer to any legitimate question, but if he understood the testimony before the committee, the sum of money sent from New-York to Oregon was contributed by Democrats. Unless some Senator could state there was good reason to believe that this money was corruptly used, the Senate had no right to inquire into the private business of New-York bankers. There was not the slightest evidence to show that this money was obtained for an improper purpose, and certainly it was not used. If there was no charge that the $8,000 was improperly used, it should be made, and he would vote to arrest it out. Why, asked he, should the Senate give authority to its committee to investigate the private affairs of this New-York banker?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, said he was surprised that the honorable Senator from Maryland should oppose the adoption of this resolution. It had appeared before the committee that a large amount of money was paid to Mr. Cronin at or about the time he was appointed messenger to carry the Electoral vote to the President of the Senate; that $8,000 was transferred to Ladd & Bush, in Oregon, from New-York, on the very day the votes were to be cast for President and Vice President. It was evident from this whole transaction that that there was a species of juggling carried on, and if this witness [Runyon] could be made to tell who his customer was, every honest and candid mind would be satisfied that this $8,000 was connected with the conference held in Washington for the purpose of being used in some way in connection with the controversy then pending before the Governor of that State. As to how the money was used, or who received it, was another branch of the case.

Mr. MAXEY, of Texas, said he for one, believing that fraud should be ferreted out to the very bottom, would vote for the resolution. If there was any fraud in Oregon or elsewhere in regard to this Presidential contest, he wanted it probed to the bottom.

Mr. WHITE said he was anxious to ferret out fraud, but he proposed to ferret it out decently and in order. Having been educated at the bar, he felt it to be his duty to interpose an objection when he saw such latitude allowed in the production of testimony as would be allowed in no court of justice in this country. Cronin testified that he was paid to come to Washington to be present as one of gentlemen in Oregon, but the testimony had, in no way, connected Cronin with this New-York banker.

Mr. MORTON said Cronin was paid $2,000 in Oregon by a draft on Charles Dimond in New-York. Dimond himself swore that he paid Cronin $2,000.

Mr. WHITE said he would withdraw all objection. It was the first time he had heard of it.

Mr. MORTON said Cronin talked about a subscription having been taken up to pay him for bringing the vote of Washington, but there was no evidence to show that there was any such subscription, and he [Mr. Morton] did not believe there was. The evidence showed that the Chairman of the Democratic Committee in Oregon sent a draft on the bank of Ladd & Bush, and there he got a draft on Dimond in New-York for $2,000, and another on San Francisco. That draft on New-York was paid by Dimond in the City of New-York.

Mr. WHITE said he understood that Cronin drew a draft upon Dimond, and that induced him to withdraw his objection. Now, it appears that Ladd & Bush, the bankers in Oregon, drew the draft on Dimond.

Mr. MORTON replied that Bellinger took Cronin to the banking-house of Ladd & Bush and had the draft drawn for Cronin's benefit.

Mr. WHITE said he did not see what this transaction with Ladd & Bush had to do with the $8 000 check ordered in New-York of Martin and Runyon.

Mr. MORTON replied there was a connection there and a very delicate one. The resolution was then agreed to without a division.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The Senate then resumed consideration of the unfinished business, being the resolutions submitted by Mr. WALLACE, of Pennsylvania, yesterday, in regard to counting the Electoral vote.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, who was entitled to the floor, said the constant reference to Louisiana whenever the Presidential contest was discussed showed the importance of the vote of that State. He was tired of having the action of the returning officers of Louisiana charged as being false, and he proposed now to discuss the question as to whether the evidence before the Returning Board was sufficient to justify honest men in throwing out the votes of certain polling places on account of intimidation and violence. The Electors of Louisiana had met and recorded their vote for Gov. Hayes for President and Mr. Wheeler for Vice President. Their vote was duly authenticated and delivered to the President of the Senate, and was entitled to credit. He argued that Hayes and Wheeler were legally entitled to the vote of Louisiana for President and Vice President, and said he admitted that at the bar of public opinion, which must be known as the verdict, gave them the vote of the State was not only legally done, but was rightly done. If Gov. Hayes had been returned as elected wrongfully, he could gain no honor from such a high office as that of President. It was known that Gov. Hayes had not struggled for the office, neither had he purchased it. Yet, if it had been conferred upon him in pursuance of the Constitution, he would exercise his power. He was not to be tricked out of the office. He [Mr. Sherman] would accept any plan for a fair and honest count of the vote and felt sure that Gov. Hayes rightfully received the vote of the State. Turning from the law of Louisiana, passed in 1872, requiring the Returning Board to throw out the votes from precincts or parishes where the election was carried by fraud or violence, and argued that there was not one scrap of evidence to show that the Returning Board acted in disregard of the rights of others. Wealth, social influence, the personal safety of the members of the board—all had a tendency to make the board decide in favor of the Democratic Party. There was nothing to lead the members of the board to decide in favor of the Republican Electors except the plain mandates of the law. He then referred to the troubles in Louisiana during the existence of the Know Nothing Party and said violence was then aimed at persons of foreign birth and Catholics; now it was aimed at negroes. He referred to the testimony before the Returning Board, and said such scenes of violence as depicted by many of these witnesses could not occur in any of the Northern States without bringing about wholesale bloodshed and strife. The law was perfectly clear that if these Returning Officers felt that there had been intimidation sufficient to deter men from voting as they desired, they were in duty bound to throw out the votes of precincts where such intimidation was practiced. Mr. Sherman then quoted at great length from the testimony of Lieut. Col. Brooks, of the Army, Charles Coleman, and many others to show that intimidation, violence, and bloodshed prevailed in Louisiana, and said all this violence was to compel men to vote the Democratic ticket and elect Samuel J. Tilden President of the United States. This intimidation extended to Mississippi also, where the Democratic votes were made by such means. The votes thus made were to be opened and counted for Samuel J. Tilden. He argued that colored men voted the Democratic ticket in very few inst

LAW REPORTS.

HOW A RAILROAD WAS ROBBED.

TRIAL OF TWO FERRY EMPLOYES CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD—BETWEEN $60,000 AND $70,000 PER ANNUM SAID TO HAVE BEEN STOLEN—THE OPENING OF THE CASE BY THE PROSECUTION.

The trial of Jacob A. Van Valkenburgh and George W. West, two of the ferry employes charged with being concerned in the elaborately-planned conspiracy by which the Pennsylvania Railroad Company was defrauded out of between $60,000 and $70,000 per year, was commenced before Judge Sutherland yesterday in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. Mr. Charles W. Brooke, with whom is associated Senator Leon Abbett, appeared to prosecute the case on the part of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and Mr. John O. North conducted the defense. The magnitude of the conspiracy and the large number of persons engaged in it has attracted great attention to the case, and the court-room was filled with railroad and ferry officials. Mr. Brooke, in opening the case, said that in the early part of 1875, in consequence of certain circumstances connected with the financial matters of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, a radical change was made in the manner of issuing and collecting tickets on all the company's railroads and ferries. At the ferries between the cities of New York and New Jersey, under this arrangement, were two classes of employes—ferry-masters and ticket collectors. It was the duty of the ferry-masters to issue tickets and receive fare from every person who passed through the ferry; and the duty of the ticket collector was to take up all such tickets and deposit them in a box supplied by the company. Counsel clearly illustrated to the jury the manner of issuing and collecting ferry-tickets by means of a full-sized ferry-master's counts and ticket-taker's box, which he had produced in court for the purpose, and proceeded to show that at the commencement of each ticket-taker's tour of duty he was supplied with an empty ticket box or peculiar and intricate construction, which the ticket-taker, even had he a key, could not open unless he was acquainted with its mysteries. At the expiration of each eight-hour tour of duty the ferry-master transmitted to the Auditor's office in Philadelphia the number of tickets sold by him, and at the same time, the box of the ticket-taker was removed, and forwarded to the same destination. The simple act of removing the ticket-taker's box set in motion the machinery which closed and secured the opening for the admission of tickets; consequently the contents of the box could not be tampered with on the journey to the Auditor's office, and, on being opened, the number of ferry tickets should correspond exactly with the number sold by the ferry-master. The accounts of the ferry-master and ticket collector should agree exactly, and if either were honest he would be a check on the other. In order to carry out any scheme of fraud against the company there should of course be a combination between the ferry-master and the ticket collector, and such collusion there was in the present case. West, a ferry-master, and Van Valkenburgh, as ticket collector, were on tours of duty together, and by a previously arranged plan succeeded in defrauding the company of a very large amount. Van Valkenburgh would, for instance, retain a certain number of the tickets given him by passengers entering, and when the number had reached 100, would, as opportunity offered, return them to West, who would re-sell them, and divide the proceeds with his confederate in the ticket collector's box on being relieved from duty. For a long time this conspiracy to defraud was successfully carried on, and extended to the other employes of the company, and other frauds, by three cent ferry tickets alone, reached the enormous sum of between $60,000 and $70,000 per year. The specific acts charges against the two prisoners took place on Aug. 1 last. On that day they were on duty together, and a man named William N. Plattner, a discharged ticket collector, who knew the conspiracy and had participated in it, was present. Van Valkenburgh, who had retained 100 tickets, and was waiting an opportunity of getting them back to West to be re-sold, called Plattner, and secretly handing him the tickets, asked him to convey them to West. Plattner took the tickets, but instead of handing them all to West retained five, which he subsequently delivered to Mr. Henry H. Gwinner, Auditor of the company, in Philadelphia. At the close of his tour of duty, West forwarded his report to the Auditor, and among the tickets sold were the five which were abstracted by Plattner, and which, had the employes been honest, would have been found in the ticket collector's box when opened. This was the first suspicious circumstance against the prisoners, and the surveillance of the private detectives, which was immediately brought into requisition, showed that the number of ferry tickets retained during the eight-hour tour of duty of West and Van Valkenburgh amounted to 350. So general did the conspiracy become that the honest employes were known as "sneaks," while the dishonest party, of which West and Van Valkenburgh were bright and shining lights, were admiringly characterized as "solid men." During the trial he would produce "incontrovertible evidence that the prisoners had been guilty of that meanest, most contemptible crime of betraying the sacred trust reposed in them by their employers. Mr. Brooke then examined Dr. C. L. Hart, Ferry Agent, and Henry J. Filman, General Ticket Agent of the New-Jersey Division, who testified to the manner of distributing and collecting ferry tickets. The case will be continued to-day.

A FAMOUS BANK ROBBERY.

ONE OF THE BURGLARS OF THE BOYLSTON BANK IN BOSTON OPENS A GORGEOUS RESTAURANT IN PARIS—HIS EXPERIENCES DISCLOSED IN A SUIT AGAINST THE SHERIFF.

The trial of the case of Catherine L. Wells, otherwise Catherine L. Flynn, against William C. Conner, Sheriff, now in progress before Judge Van Brunt and a jury, in Part II. of the Supreme Court, has disclosed a very interesting story in which figure some of the participants in the famous Boylston bank robbery in Boston. The action itself is brought to recover $2,000 for alleged damage to and loss of property seized by the Sheriff in a replevin suit brought by George Chapman against Francis Strong. The property was in possession of the latter when seized. The plaintiff in the present action was, in 1871, a bar-maid at the Washington Hotel, then kept by her uncle, in Liverpool, England. After the robbery of the Boylston Bank, one of the burglars, named Charles Bullard, escaped to Liverpool, and took lodgings at the Washington Hotel, under the name of Charles Wells. He seems to have made himself agreeable at this domicile, for in two weeks after his arrival he married Catharine L. Flynn, the bar-maid, who was a very prepossessing girl. Bullard had plenty of money, and took his wife to Paris. He liked the French capital so well that he opened a restaurant there, which was known as the American Restaurant, and was at No. 3 Rue Scribe, under the Grand Hotel. The place was fitted up in gorgeous style, at a cost of $40,000. The place was frequented by traveling Americans and by the flash thieves of the day. Among those who made the place their head-quarters were "Ike" Marsh, Adam Worth, "Bob" Corcoran and "Tony" Bullard, four of the persons said to have been concerned in the Boylston Bank affair. A "green room" was connected with the restaurant, in which faro and other games of chance were indulged in. After the place had been in operation for about a year, Bullard, alias Wells, was arrested by the Police. He gave bonds, however, and then fled, leaving Worth to manage a transaction by which a London diamond merchant was robbed of $20,000 worth of jewels. Bullard returned to this country, and his furniture, duly packed, was forwarded hither and stored with one Francis Strong. Bullard resided here for about a year, spending part of the time in an inebriate asylum. Meanwhile, as is alleged, one of his associates in the Boylston Bank robbery ran off with his wife, the present plaintiff. On Sept. 6, 1875, Detectives Dearborn and Chapman, of Boston, arrested Bullard, who, pleading guilty to the charge of burglary at the Boston bank, was sentenced to imprisonment for 20 years. Bullard averred that Chapman furnished him with some money, and in return he assigned to Chapman all his property, expecting to be paid back, after the expiration of his sentence, the difference between the money advanced by Chapman and the value of the furniture. The property had been seized by the Sheriff in a suit brought by Chapman against Strong, and Mrs. Wells, or Bullard, having obtained leave to come in the suit as a party, established her claim to the ownership of the bulk of the furniture. The Sheriff then gave her the property. She claims that a portion of the furniture was lost, and that another portion was damaged. The Sheriff, in defense, says that after seizing the goods the counsel for both parties agreed to have them stored in consequence of this he claims he is not responsible for loss or damage. Besides this, he claims that the whole of the property was returned uninjured, and that the plaintiff expressed her satisfaction at its condition. The case is still on.

THE EMMA MINE LITIGATION.

In the trial of the Emma Mine suit yesterday, in the United States Circuit Court, the greater part of the day was spent in the argument of counsel as to the admissibility of certain letters of William M. Stewart to the witness James E. Lyons. Several of these, merely detailing the progress of operations for the sale of the mine, were admitted by Judge Wallace. The witness then gave the substance of the telegram sent by Prof. Silliman and Messrs. Hussey and Williams making a favorable report on the condition of the mine. At the March meeting of the board Mr. Anderson, President, made a strong speech in favor of the mine as an investment, and he then told Park that he [Park] must have furnished the money. Park told him that one day he offered Anderson 20 shares of stock, but he was afraid to take them.

On cross-examination Mr. Enoch questioned the witness very particularly in regard to his financial affairs, and in this connection read Mr. Lyons' deposition in a suit brought against him in bankruptcy by Edward Strong. In this he said he was not engaged in any business, lived by borrowing money, and that his assets were $50 and a few worthless mining stocks. He said he was a part owner in the Monitor Lode, which he did not enumerate in the list of stocks given in the deposition. At the time he believed the property was valuable, and so it afterward proved. The cross-examination will be continued this morning.

COURT NOTES.

Judge Speir, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday granted an order directing Samuel J. Tilden to show cause, on the 12th inst., why the judgment by default for costs recently obtained by him in the suit of Henry H. Beaky should not be set aside.

James Brown, a lad of 17, who appropriated a check for $145 given him by his employer, Jacob Seibert, to deposit in bank, and who raised another from $41 to $49, pleaded guilty yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Gildersleeve sent him to the State Prison for five years.

In the case of the Bank of Louisiana against Brandon and others, hitherto reported in THE TIMES, Judge Van Vorst, in Part I. of the Supreme Court, yesterday directed a verdict for the plaintiffs for $10,490. The exceptions were ordered to be heard in the first instance at the General Term.

Judge Joseph F. Daly yesterday rendered a decision in the suit of Alexander Douglas against Henry A. Gildersleeve. The plaintiff sued to recover $144 32, a balance due on a bill of $349 80 for coal and wood furnished to the defendant. The latter demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Judge Daly overruled the demurrer and gave judgment for the plaintiff, with leave to defendant, however, to answer on payment of costs.

An application was made to Judge Donohue in the Supreme Court, Chambers, recently on behalf of the Butchers' and Drovers' National Bank to remove Peter L. Cortelyon from his position as Assignee of Benedict Brothers, the jewelers. The ground of the application was the insolvency of Cortelyon. A reference was had and the Referee found the statements of the bank to be true. The report was presented to Judge Donohue yesterday, and he said he would remove the Assignee. Emmet R. Olcott appeared for the bank and Charles Earle for the Assignee.

Judge Joseph F. Daly, in the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday rendered a decision vacating an attachment obtained against the property of Nicholas Malavazi, in a suit brought by Charles A. Easton and others. The latter brought the action to recover $899 50 on a cotton transaction. They obtained their attachment on the ground that Malavazi was concealing himself to avoid the service of a summons in the suit. Judge Daly vacated the attachment on the ground that the affidavit on which it was granted did not show that Malavazi knew of any legal proceedings to enforce the indebtedness.

James Driscoll, as Administrator of his deceased wife, Mary Driscoll, sued the City to recover $5,000, and the case was brought to trial before Judge Barrett and a jury in Part III. of the Supreme Court yesterday. Mary Driscoll, it appears, lived, in August, 1871, at the south-east corner of Thames and Greenwich streets, and, on her way home from a visit to a baker's shop, fell into a hole in the sidewalk opposite to her residence. She died two days later, and her husband brought the action to recover the statutory damages on account of her death. The defense was contributory negligence. A sealed verdict was ordered in the case.

Certain active Republican "workers" are in Washington with the reported intention of procuring a "new deal" in Federal appointments in New-York. It is announced that District Attorney BLISS will not be reappointed—a fact not precisely new—and that ex-Judge DITTENHOEFER is favorably talked of as his successor—a statement which, we trust, is not true. It is exceedingly desirable that a man of the highest character and ability should be secured for the very important office of United States District Attorney in this City. It will be very hard to find such a man till after the 4th of March, when the prospect of a four-years' tenure of office would be rather less dubious than it can be now. It is needless to add that Mr. DITTENHOEFER would not, under any circumstances, be a fit nomination.

This is the year of political equipoise, and even New-Jersey has its legislative crisis. The lower house of the State Legislature is a tie, and in the Senate the Democrats retain a majority of but one. The United States Senatorship, of course, takes precedence of all other questions, and has the effect of making both parties move very warily. The equally-divided House failed to obtain a quorum yesterday owing to the absence of the Democrats, and it is not improbable that it may fail to organize for some days to come. There are at least two Democratic members whose seats are contested, and in whose election an honest inquiry would undoubtedly reveal gross frauds. If the Republicans succeed in electing the Speaker, a Committee on Privileges and Elections would doubtless be appointed, ready and able to do entire justice in these cases. But as the acceptance of a report seating the contestants would give the Republicans a majority on joint ballot, and the consequent power of electing a United States Senator, it is tolerably clear that the organization of the House will be bitterly fought over. In any case, it is possible that Democratic divisions may result in throwing the control of the Senatorship into Republican hands, and as the party candidates are men so capable as CORTLAND PARKER, WILLIAM W. PHELPS, and GEORGE A. HALSEY, it is, on every ground, desirable that there should be such a result of the contest.

The House of Representatives has had another touch of the "Bastile" fever. A resolution was adopted yesterday directing the Sergeant at Arms to bring Mr. ORTON before the Bar of the House to answer for contempt in refusing to appear before Mr. MORRISON'S committee in New-Orleans, and a similar resolution will probably be passed to-day, ordering the production of the members of the Louisiana Returning Board before the Bar of the House for a similar offense. These proceedings are rather more suggestive of petty vindictiveness than of a desire to preserve the dignity and sustain the well-founded prerogatives of the national Legislature. Neither dignity nor privilege can well survive tactics which are at once ridiculous and oppressive.

We take this opportunity to make an apology to our neighbors of the Graphic. It will be remembered by our readers that in the months of October and November, 1875, our columns contained several articles imputing improper motives to the Messrs. GOODSELL in the conduct of the Graphic and the Spectator, and also reflecting upon their personal character. Upon an examination of the facts of the case, we have become satisfied that injustice was done to each of the Messrs. GOODSELL in the several publications referred to. We are convinced that the articles in question should not have been written, and that they should not be remembered to the prejudice of the Messrs. GOODSELL as journalists or citizens.

The New-Hampshire Republicans make their nominations for Governor, State Railroad Commissioner, and Congressmen to-day. The contest in that State will be a very warm one, the Congressional ticket being especially important in view of the close vote in the next House. New-Hampshire sends two Democrats and one Republican to the present House, and the result of the March election may be a very influential one as affecting the next Congress. Both parties will try hard to gain at least one Congressman. The Republican candidates for nomination are as numerous and solicitous as the chances of success seem to warrant. The Republicans of New-Hampshire are probably convinced of the urgent necessity of making the best possible selections, both for the Congressional and the State offices. If there are any reluctant men of unexceptionable strength, they ought to be induced to enter the field. With a first-rate ticket, the State is sure for another term of Republican administration with an increased majority.

It is quite evident that the process of cleaning the streets must begin by cleaning out the Police Board. While New-York has been sacrificing hundreds of thousands of dollars because of the accumulation of snow, the Police Commissioners have resolved themselves into a body of hair-splitting pedants, whose construction of the law is as painfully precise as their practice of it is disgracefully loose. It is decidedly absurd, to say the least, to find the logic-choppers of the Police Board professing to be "fixed as fate" against deveting a dollar of street-cleaning funds to the removal of snow, while at the same time they are caught paying 30 extra patrolmen out of the proceeds of fines and penalties. It Messrs. SMITH, ERHARDT & Co. do not perceive the necessity of abandoning the attempt to conduct business for which they are obviously unfitted, Mayor ELY cannot too promptly recognize the necessity of relieving them of a trust which they have grossly betrayed. Failing relief from other quarters, a much-abused public will probably not turn in vain to the Legislature.

The Bennett-May duel turns out to have been as much of a farce as the encounter out of which it grew. Three shots were fired, nobody was hurt, the demands of "honor" were declared satisfied, and mutual explanations were followed by reconciliation. We shall now probably be told that this chivalrous pair of rowdies, who had the reputation of being crack shots, did not fire with the intention of hitting, or that, as frequently happens in such cases in novels and on the stage, they fired into the air, and then fell on each other's neck, in mutual admiration of a wonderful stroke of magnanimity. The fact probably is that both were horribly afraid, and that the steadiness of their aim was interfered with by the extent to which they felt their valor "oozing out, as it were, at the palm of the hands." Under such circumstances, it is not only fortunate that neither of the principals was injured, but that the fatal bullets—if bullets indeed there were—did not hit some of the spectators of the bloodless conflict. Any suggestion that a stray cow was wounded in the mêlée may be dismissed as frivolous.

THE CONFLICT IN LOUISIANA.

Affairs in Louisiana have reached a point so critical that an accident may at any moment produce armed strife and bloodshed. The earlier doings of the Democratic minority who seceded from the Legislature and went through the formality of declaring NICHOLLS elected to the Governorship, were in their way too ludicrous to excite serious apprehension. That, however, was but the beginning. It seems to have been intended quite as much to test the temper of the Federal Administration as to give effect to the Tilden programme, with a view to ulterior proceedings at Washington. Whatever the motive, the result has to a certain extent borne out the expectations of the Democratic managers in New-Orleans. The telegraph assured them that so long as they abstained from disturbance of the peace they would be allowed to go on unmolested. NICHOLLS and his friends accepted the hint and went a step or two further. They provided for the sinews of war by levying a tax which the New-Orleans Democracy are credited with paying promptly. The exchequer of the bogus Governor is, therefore, not absolutely empty. Then he and his associates appointed Judges, directed the organization of a Police force, and otherwise indicated a determination to take into their own hands the Government of the city and the State. All this without a sign of hindrance from Washington.

Yesterday developed more aggressive tactics. NICHOLLS declared in his inaugural that he would exercise the functions of the Governorship, and that his party should direct the concerns of the State. The incidents we now report prove that the avowal, impudent as it appeared, was not an idle boast. The "White Leaguers" responded to NICHOLLS' call in considerable force, filling the streets, mustering in the squares, and—to borrow the language of the Associated Press—"presenting all the phases of an army on the eve of battle." The demonstration was under cover of a pretense that the armed crowds thus brought together were "Militia," held subject to orders for the maintenance of NICHOLLS' authority, but the fact remains that they were members of the "White League," which played in the State the part of WADE HAMPTON'S rifle clubs, and were drawn to New-Orleans for precisely the same purpose as that which animated the latter when they took possession of Columbia. The display of force did not end here. The artillery companies were ready for service. NICHOLLS had also appointed a conspicuous member of the White League Chief of Police, and he in turn had organized a body of men who were ready to carry out the orders of the officials whom NICHOLLS had selected, or who had avowed an acceptance of his authority. Thus sustained, he proceeded with his plan. The city telegraph was seized. One after another of the Police stations was captured and the members of the regular force ejected. No attempt at resistance was made, and none could have been made with the slightest chance of success. A demand was presented for the surrender of the Supreme Court building, but it was refused, and the lawful Chief Justice for a time remained in possession, with a portion of the regular Police force under his direction. NICHOLLS' appointees for the Supreme Court subsequently met, organized as a court, and adjourned till to-day, when the power which NICHOLLS controls will be used to enforce their authority. GOV. PACKARD and the Republican members of the Legislature who had assembled were occupants of the State-house, all the avenues to which were held by NICHOLLS' citizen soldiers. So the day closed, the latest dispatches reporting that the streets were patrolled by the armed Democracy, and that the usurping Governor, yielding to the suggestion of Gen. AUGUR, had issued a proclamation calling upon his supporters to preserve the peace.

This, then, is in brief the situation: The election, as reported by the duly constituted authority, gave to the State a Republican Executive and a Republican Legislature by decisive and bona fide majorities. The criminal violence of the Democrats did not save them from defeat. They refuse, however, to accept as final the count made by the Returning Board. In spite of an adverse vote, they insist that they are entitled to the Government, and forthwith they organize one to suit themselves. The defeated candidate they declare Governor, the minority in the Legislature they call the Legislature. They take possession of the courts, drive out the lawful Judges, put creatures of their own upon the Bench, and prepare to work the machinery of law in utter defiance of the authority which rests upon law. They create their own Police force, and with the help of armed members of secret political societies obtain complete supremacy in New-Orleans. The lawful Governor is virtually a prisoner in his own office. The lawful Legislature is practically dispersed. Lawful authority—the authority ordained by the majority in the State or deriving positions from the Republican Executive—is trampled under foot. The Democrats, by the sheer force of armed organization, have for the time acquired the mastery. They hold New-Orleans, and they have wrested from the legally-chosen Government of the State the functions that are essential to the management of its affairs. And by way of exemplifying how the United States "guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government," the Federal troops now in New-Orleans rest on their arms quiet spectators of a revolution which makes of republican government a mockery, and transfers the ruling power from a majority of electors to a minority of armed and reckless partisans.

How long will this condition of affairs be allowed to stand? There was no bloodshed yesterday, not because the forces that obey NICHOLLS are unwilling to do anything that may be needful for the attainment of their ends, but because Gov. PACKARD, with the slender strength at his command, shrank from a resistance which, without Federal help, would have been ineffectual. That help he is reported to have sought without avail. The question, therefore, is, will the Federal Administration permit usurpation, armed and audacious, to accomplish its purposes unchecked? If yes, what becomes of the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution? If no, what further phase of violence must be awaited to bring about interference? Respect for the conclusions yet to be announced by the investigating committees is well enough, but it may be carried too far. We know in advance that they will differ, both as to the election and as to the relative merits of parties in the present conflict. The Administration will be obliged, after all, to form its own judgment as to the measures that may be necessary to restrain the revolutionists; and plain people will be disposed to think that something effective should be done without much further delay.

MR. DANA'S POINTS.

The North American Review for January presents an article by Mr. RICHARD H. DANA, Jr., which deserves attention. It is entitled "Points in American Politics," and is a discussion in a frank and familiar form, of a number of questions which are engaging the study of intelligent men throughout the country. Most prominent among these is, naturally, the amendment to the Constitution with reference to the election of President and Vice President. We are glad to see a man of Mr. DANA'S acknowledged weight giving attention to the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, the abandonment of election by general ticket, and the substitution of a vote by districts, as proposed by Senator MORTON. These are important propositions, and they go to the root of many of the difficulties and embarrassments under which the country is laboring. It may be that there are solid, practical objections to them; but we have not yet seen them produced, and meanwhile it is a good sign that they are receiving attention from thoughtful men outside the ordinary range of those who take an immediate interest in public affairs.

The Electoral Colleges have no excuse for existence. They no longer serve the purpose for which they were contrived, nor can they seriously be said ever to have done so. They are cumbersome, complex, and confusing. Not one in ten of the voters of the country has any clear idea of what they are, or how they work, or under what conditions they exist. On the other hand, while they do no good, they may lead to great harm. Only in the late election there were rumors of attempted bribery of Electors, and the path to such an offense was made easier by the proposal, in apparent seriousness, that one of the Republican Electors should betray his trust and throw the election into the House, because the Democrats would not acknowledge the legal result.

If the Electoral Colleges are to be abandoned, there are only two ways of choosing a President which are likely to be considered. One is by a majority of all the votes in the country. The other is by districts, that is, by giving one vote to the plurality candidate in each district, and the two votes at large to the candidate having the plurality in each State. The objection to the first method made by Mr. DANA is that it multiplies the worst evil of the present system by increasing the inducement for fraud. If it is an object now to practice fraud for the Electoral vote of Ohio, or New-York, or Pennsylvania, in the large towns of those States, what would it be when the Presidency directly depended on the result? Whether this objection has as much force as Mr. DANA gives it we doubt, but we are confident that the vote by districts would be found in practice to be the fairest and the most easily guarded, while it would give all the advantages of a direct vote.

Whatever method were adopted there might still be difficulties and disputes in regard to the result, and for the settlement of these Mr. DANA makes a somewhat undefined suggestion that they be left in the first instance to the State tribunals, and that Congress should be denied any extensive powers with reference to them. This suggestion is, in substance, and as far as it goes, a sound one. We incline to the opinion, however, that Congress could with advantage direct that where State laws fail to provide for adequate adjustment of such disputes, the District Courts of the United States might be resorted to.

Mr. DANA gives the most interesting portion of his article to civil service reform, and his remarks on this subject are well considered and pointed. Its importance cannot be rated too high. No other question presses so urgently for a right solution. If we had not had our civil service debased and demoralized, not one of the great evils which now afflict the country would, in all likelihood, give us serious trouble. If the spoils system had not made the administrative offices of the Government a means of rewarding party service, the South could never have attained the supremacy which was so absolute before 1860 that they were ready, in order to maintain it, to plunge the country into civil war with its long train of difficulties. Without the spoils system the detestable appointments at the South which, since the war, have disgraced the Republican Party and led to the worst abuses of its power, never could have taken place, because these appointments would not have been made at the dictation of Southern adventurers in Congress. Without the spoils system, no such man as Mr. TILDEN could have organized the canvass he has just failed in, since he could not have commanded the solid support which the hope of public plunder has induced his followers to give him. Indeed, it is the merest commonplace to say that more than half of the corruption, baseness, intrigue, and chicane of our politics on both sides comes from the sustained operation of the greed of office which the spoils system makes a strong motive force in party action. Remove this and we open the field for the working of that public spirit on which all free Governments must depend for power and stability. Decline to remove it, and we shall stumble along in the tedious path we have so long and painfully followed, until some unusual but inevitable disaster or disgrace shall startle the country to a realizing sense of its folly.

VALLANDIGHAM EXHUMED.

The Democracy of Ohio declare in convention assembled that to count the Electoral vote as JEFFERSON counted it, and proclaim the result as the father of Democracy proclaimed it, "will be an act of usurpation that will be resisted by the people to the last extremity, even should that extremity be an appeal to arms."

This has the tone of the ante-war resolutions by that dear, departed leader, CLEMENT L. VALLANDIGHAM, and breathes the rebellious spirit of the illustrious exile and martyr. Another dead patriot has been exhumed for seditious purposes at the Columbus Convention. GEORGE H. PENDLETON, who departed this life on or about the date of the demise of W. W. BELKNAP, returned from the grave to tell us that if TILDEN is not unconstitutionally counted in, his ghostly voice is for "wah!"

The notorious ALEXANDER LONG, of Cincinnati, expelled from Congress for treason, appeared at the Columbus indignation meeting as a member of the Committee on Resolutions, and proceeded to instruct the public on the sacred duty of obedience to law. The temporary Chairman of the Ohio Convention of Malcontents was Gen. A. J. WARNER, of Marietta, who supported TILDEN and HENDRICKS on the confessed ground that he desired inflation to revive the manufacturing business in which all his money was invested. The permanent Chairman, J. DURBIN WARD, wants TILDEN or some Democrat made President, because the business of politics, to which he has long applied his energies, needs a Democratic revival. Mr. DURBIN WARD, being hungry and heartsick from hope deferred, is opposed to the Jeffersonian plan of counting in a President. Gen. TOM EWING, the great apostle of inflation, upon whom the mantle of PENDLETON has fallen since the latter has deceased, was the favorite orator and "wah hoss" of these indignant and indigent Democrats. As the son of the great Whig leader and profound lawyer, THOMAS EWING, Gen. EWING has a personal prestige and popularity which render his position somewhat commanding. It is a mistake to suppose that "Young Tom," as he is called, has not sufficient acuteness and clearness of intellect to know the difference between financial wisdom and financial nonsense. No one is so well aware as himself that his inflation speeches in his joint debates with Gen. WOODFORD, contained a vast mass of rubbish. EWING is the owner of coal lands in Ohio valued at a million dollars, which have been for some time on the market. He supported and now supports, the declining candidates, TILDEN and HENDRICKS, because he wants to "unload;" to convert his unsalable coal lands into greenbacks of a new issue, and relieve himself from embarrassment through a currency expansion.

If Gen. EWING could realize on his large investments, he would doubtless become as sound on financial questions as his distinguished father. If financial barriers were out of the way, he would naturally gravitate toward Old Whigs of the school of Gov. HAYES, rather than affiliate with his father's enemies. Gen. GEORGE W. MORGAN, a feeble brother, known as "Cumberland Gap MORGAN," assisted at this Democratic funeral. "Jongee" THOMPSON was of necessity on hand with his blasting bugle. The ablest Ohio Democrats, such as Senator THURMAN, WILLIAM S. GROESBECK, Judge RANNEY, Judge STALLO, FRED. HASSAUREK, and Judge SCRIBNER were conspicuously absent from the Columbus congregation of Tilden mourners. Even "Rise-up" WILLIAM ALLEN rose not up, nor did he sit down with the mourners.

CITY MISERIES.

Such weather as that which we have had during the past few weeks makes the New-Yorker despair of a republican government. For, during such a crisis, he is abandoned to the elements and the street-car companies. To be sure, nobody pretends that a limited monarchy, or even an autocracy, could waft away a snow-storm, or compel a central bureau to furnish mild skies and a tranquil atmosphere to order. But a republican form of government, as illustrated and exemplified in this City, collapses under any marked meteorological disturbance. When a snow-storm fills the streets, and ice covers the sidewalks, the City Government becomes as limp as a dish-rag. If the City, from Harlem to the Battery, and from river to river, were covered five fathoms deep with snow, the men who make a ludicrous and yet exasperating formula of guarding Municipal interests, would be found hidden away in some quiet corner, maundering in muffled tones, "More money! more money!" Poor Commissioner NICHOLLS has been waiting these ten days for the snow to turn to "dirt," so that he can clean it out. He has money for removing dirt, but none for removing snow. In Boston they would call Commissioner NICHOLLS "a very talented man."

Meanwhile, the street-car companies wreak upon the long-suffering public the pent-up wrath of several months of fair weather. There was a time—before the snow came—when it was pleasant to walk down town in the morning, and to walk up town at night. This might still be possible, but the City misgovernment has ingeniously put an embargo on this innocent recreation. The man who lives up town takes his life in his hand when he goes to his business of a morning. If he were as reverent as his New-England grandfather was, he would have a note "put up" in church, asking "the prayers of the congregation for "one about to go" down town. On one occasion during the late meteorological crisis, there was a line of empty cars reaching from Union square to the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Inquiry elicited from a conductor the gloomy response, "BERGH has made a raid." The cars, crammed with tortured passengers, had been drawn through the snow by two horse-frames to each. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals had interfered to compel four horses to be put to each car. Whether this was to relieve the passengers or the horses is not clear. As a rule, the car companies do not keep surplus horses. When the teams are "doubled up," the number of cars is reduced. Consequently, if Mr. BERGH'S humane intentions were in behalf of the hapless passengers, his aim was defeated. A vehicle meant to carry twenty-two people was obliged to carry eighty-four. The spectacle of a street car wallowing through the snow, drawn by four sorry nags, and loaded to the gunwale with desperate men, women, and children, ought to convince a wandering New-Zealander that civilization is a failure.

If the conductor of one of these engines of torture would only content himself with treading on the feet of his victims, punching their ribs with his elbows, and shooting them from one end of the car to the other, he might be endured. But, when it is coldest and stormiest, he insists upon having both doors open; and, of a particularly raw night, he stands in the front door by the half hour, while he and the driver exchange views on the state of the country. There seems to be a great deal of time lost while the roads are blocked with snow. As soon as "the going" permits, the street-cars rage along the tracks, without stopping for anybody. They are apparently making up for lost time. When the drivers and conductors used to divide a percentage of the company's profits, they were solicitous about picking up every possible passenger. Now, their sole purpose in life is to make schedule time. The passenger must snatch the car with a flying leap. No stoppage is made for him to disembark; and, if he is lame, feeble, or gouty, he is cheered with a "be lively, there," from the gallant conductor. That a car should be run solely for schedule time, without regard to taking on passengers, seems a waste of horse power. Nevertheless, this is apparently the system on which most of our street railroads are managed. On the whole, it would, perhaps, be better for the public if the old plan of allowing the conductors to deduct their commissions from the receipts were restored.

Considering the woes of a street-car conductor, this may seem harsh. No one can look upon one of these unhappy beings, feebly hanging on by the door, at night, while he nods in an uneasy sleep, without a feeling of pity. No man who works seventeen hours a day, in all weather, for two dollars a day, subject to various taxes, should be expected to develop the highest virtues. He is the slave of a corporation. He is not responsible to the moral sense of an outraged community. As for the railroad company, it gradually, with the help of the City Government, reduces its customers to a state of vassalage. There have been several attempts to introduce rapid transit conveyances. These are uniformly defeated by the street-car companies. These latter have a monopoly of the public torture, which they will not part with if they can help it. So this obsolete and ancient means of transporting a great population is maintained. In like manner, the rack and the thumb-screw were employed long after the progress of civilization had made them odious. It is lucky that Manhattan Island is no bigger than it is. If it were larger, people would be obliged to give up traversing it, and its many-headed government would perish of inanition. As it is, we have stopped growing, and Controller JOHN KELLY says of a report that business men are to be consulted on public affairs, that "business men don't know nothing about politics." TWEED was a King Stork, to be sure. Now we are under a King Log.

THE DECLINE OF THE HERALD.

The decline and fall off of the Herald has been conspicuously apparent during the last fortnight. It has never attempted to compete with the principal morning newspapers in the character of its leading articles, but it has always boasted of its enterprise in the collection of news. In this very particular, however, it has recently been beaten, not only by the journals which it regards as rivals, but even by the least enterprising of the evening newspapers, and it is difficult to see how it can henceforth make even a pretense of being a purveyor of news.

Not many days since, a young man, who had obtained a certain degree of celebrity on account of his skill in polo, was fallen upon in a public thoroughfare of this City and badly beaten by another young man. The affray took place in front of a well-known club-house, and ended with a grand transformation scene, in which the eminent polo-player was converted into a picturesque representative of the obsolete semaphore telegraph, by being planted head downward in a snow-bank, with his vigorous legs waving rhythmically in the air. Of course, a spectacle of this nature demanded the notice and criticism of the press, and consequently it was fully described the next morning in all the newspapers, with the solitary exception of the Herald, in which not a line in reference to the matter appeared.

At first, the readers of that journal endeavored to defend its shortcomings by asserting that the spectacle in front of the Union Club had not been advertised in the Herald, and hence, by a rule of that paper, was not entitled to any notice. The futility of this defense was sufficiently apparent from the fact that the spectacle had not been advertised in any paper whatever, and that, moreover, it was a matter of news rather than of amusement. It was then said that the two young men who participated in the affair were altogether too ridiculous to deserve the attention of a great newspaper. That the young men were ridiculous cannot be denied, but it would be the height of absurdity to claim that only the acts of persons of good sense should be chronicled in the columns of a newspaper. The truth is, no defense of the Herald's failure in this matter can be made. Were the elder Mr. BENNETT still in charge of the Herald, we all know how promptly he would have issued an extra, giving a full account of the dastardly outrage upon the eminent polo-player, together with a brief sketch of previous outrages perpetrated upon the same person, either by the Governor General of Canada, or by the Prince of Wales, who once looked a gift yacht in the mouth, so to speak. There would also have been a "Herald map" of the street in which the outrage occurred, whereon the spot where the combatants met; the precise locality in which the defeated person was stood on his head in the beautiful, but cold and sloppy, snow; the outlet of Tanganyika, and the conjectural course of the Lualaba would have been accurately laid down. But this grand opportunity for the display of enterprise was completely missed by the present conductor of the Herald, who evidently gained his first knowledge of the affair by reading THE TIMES on the following morning.

It would naturally be supposed that after one such humiliating defeat, the Herald would have been on the alert to redeem itself upon the first occasion that might offer. A few days later both the two ridiculous persons already mentioned disappeared from the City, and every one said, "The Herald will now organize an exploring expedition, and find these two young men, no matter what it may cost." Strange as it may seem, the Herald did nothing of the sort. Apparently, it was so deeply humiliated by its failure in the matter of the street-fight that it determined to ignore the very existence of the ridiculous young men. The other newspapers, however, pursued their accustomed course. They ascertained that the young man who had been placed upside down on a snow-bank considered that his honor—which is evidently situated somewhere in the hollow of his head—had been injured by contact with the snow; that he had challenged the aggressor to fight a duel; and that the two had gone to Delaware for that purpose. Even this news did not stimulate the Herald to activity. Perhaps the blood of the graduates of Trinity College, Dublin, may have been stirred by the mellifluous sound of the word "jooel;" but, nevertheless, the columns of the Herald gave no sign of their emotion. Finally, even after the public learned through the other newspapers that the two ridiculous persons had actually met and exchanged shots, the Herald still failed to describe the duel, or make the slightest editorial allusion to it.

Of course, there is no possible excuse to be made for such a series of utter failures, and the persons at present in charge of the Herald office must expect to be visited with the severest reproof from the proprietor of that journal as soon as he learns of their shortcomings. Not only has it been beaten in a matter of news, but it has wholly neglected to use its influence to check the effusion of blood. Had the Herald, on the day after the first affray, explained, calmly but firmly, to the inverted polo-player that to be undeservedly whipped by a hot-headed brawler did not carry with it any necessary disgrace, and that if he had deserved to be thrashed, he ought to maintain a dignified silence and promptly go to Europe, we should have had no duel. Instead of doing this, however, the Herald loftily pretended that the two young men were beneath its notice, and so permitted them to add to the rest of their follies the guilt of attempting murder. Hereafter let us hear no more of its pretended enterprise and its imaginary influence. The newspaper that once discovered the channel through Plum Gut, that caught the stray LIVINGSTONE in the wilds of Africa, and that made a brilliant, though unsuccessful, effort to secure a special report of Lord DUFFERIN'S masked ball, cannot now discover a street brawl that takes place not only under, but even in direct contact with, its nose, and is unable to obtain the slightest information as to a duel which every one outside of the Herald office has reason to expect. Its day of usefulness is clearly ended, and if its proprietor carries out his present wise intention of residing henceforth in Ujiji, he had better take his newspaper with him, and transform it into a Missionary Herald under the immediate management of that eminent evangelist and converter of native kings, Mr. H. M. STANLEY.

SERIOUS RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

RUTLAND, Jan. 9.—In the accident on the Rutland Railroad yesterday seven persons were injured, namely: Mr. Nichols and son, of Ludlow, Vt., badly cut in the head and face; Edward Crosby, of Brattleboro, bruised on the chest and head; P. A. Brown, Westfield, Mass., ankle sprained; J. W. Snow, Somerville, Mass., Route Agent, injured on the stomach and back by being thrown against the stove; Mrs. F. Sampson, of Boston, severely jarred; Miss Julia Conant, of Brandon, injured internally. The first two were sent to East Wallingford; the rest, with the exception of Miss Conant, who went home, are at the Bardwell House in this city. There were about 30 persons in the passenger car, many of whom were scratched and bruised. Among them were Lieut. Gov. Proctor, who had his hand slightly injured. It appears that the engine, in making a sharp curve, must have broken a piece from a rail as it passed over, causing the truck of the passenger-car to leave the track, dragging the mail-car with it.

OVER $3,000,000 INVOLVED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 9.—The contest between the trustees of the Lick estate and the heirs is finally amicably arranged. John H., a natural son of James Lick, receives $533,000, from which he pays $72,000 to other heirs in various amounts. This leaves the trustees in a position to carry out the conditions of the trust deed, and gives clear title to all real estate included in the trust, which, on the testimony of experience, has increased in market value 50 per cent. by clearing away the cloud on the title caused by the recent contest. The value of the property involved is estimated at $3,300,000.

ALBANY.

A SHORT SESSION.

BILLS INTRODUCED—SPINOLA MAKES AN OTHER SPLURGE—NO COMMITTEES ANNOUNCED—MR. COWDIN'S BANK BILL—THE EAST RIVER BRIDGE—THE BROOKLYN COMMISSIONERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 9.—Though it was well known that the committee list would not be announced this afternoon, nor the appointments to the small offices in the Speaker's gift, the Assembly chamber, or rather the lobbies, cloak rooms, and other unprivileged parts of the House, were crowded at the hour for meeting with a miscellaneous crowd of applicants, of all ages and sizes, for the offices of page-boys, assistant clerks, &c. On the call to order the floor was cleared to some extent of these anxious attendants, and it was then seen that the House was rather thin. The only business done was the introduction of bills and resolutions and the presentation of reports, among which that on the State Prisons did not appear. The resolution for the appointment of the Reapportionment Committee was adopted. Judge Hogeboom, in presenting it, made a special request of the Speaker that he [Hogeboom] be left off it, which, of course, will be done. Though the whole business of the hour's session was more or less routine, and did not strictly admit of debate, still some little debate was interjected under the sanction of unanimous consent. The ancient Spinola contrived again to make an ass of himself, and be a nuisance.

Mr. Cowdin introduced a bill on the subject of bank taxation. The subject is an important one, and a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce is to be held on Thursday to consider it. Mr. Cowdin's unfamiliarity with parliamentary routine caused him to err in pressing the reference of the bill to a committee to which it did not properly belong. He is a prepossessing speaker, but, unfortunately, was wrong in speaking at all on this occasion. The remark was general that he had made "a bad start." The bill provides that no tax shall hereafter be assessed upon the capital, property, or franchise of any bank or banking association, either State or national; that shareholders shall be assessed, as they are upon any personal property, at the town where such bank is located; that the shares shall not be assessed at a greater rate of valuation than that at which other real and personal property in the hands of individual citizens in this State shall be assessed; that the total valuation of said shares for assessment shall not exceed the actual value of the property of the bank, in which its capital and surplus may be invested, exclusive of all property with respect to which a private citizen, at a moneyed ance to everybody else. He was tripped on one or two points of order. He moved to take up his resolution relating to the indebtedness of New-York, and was voted down; got into a protracted dispute with Mr. Alvord about a trivial resolution offered by the lattar for the appointment of a mail clerk; and wound up the performance by voting for it himself. This climax caused a general laugh, but the House will not laugh at Mr. Spinola very long. He threatens to interrupt business too seriously. Members naturally grow impatient with a man whose idea of legislative duties seems to be confined to "having some fun with the boys." Already his own associates on the Democratic side are beginning to express a wish that it should be publicly understood Mr. Spinola represents no one but himself.

corporation, other than a bank or banking association, is not liable to assessment and taxation by the authority of this State. That from such valuation shall be excluded all amounts invested in real estate owned by the bank within this State, provided that nothing therein shall be held or construed to exempt from taxation the real estate held or owned by such bank; but it shall be subject to State, county, municipal, and other taxation, to the same extent and rate, and in the same manner, as other real estate is taxed.

Mr. Fish introduced a bill prepared, it is understood, by the State Board of Charities, to provide for the custody and reformatory treatment of vagrants and disorderly persons. It is enormously long, containing 26 good-sized sections. Mr. Fish, being asked what it was, said he did not know, except that it did not apply to New-York.

Mr. Peter Mitchell has a bill which, in substance, provides that where a man is tried for a felony who has been previously convicted of a felony, that fact shall not be used against him, nor shall the jury be made aware of it unless the prisoner offer evidence of good character. After he has been found guilty, the court is to be permitted to make known the fact of the previous conviction.

Mr. Dan Bradley, of Kings, has a bill which, in one short section, reduces all the city departments of Brooklyn, now governed by commissions, to single heads, these being the present Presidents of the several boards. Another bill offered by the same thorough-going gentleman, provides that the State shall pay its just share (one-fourth) in the cost of the New-York and East River Bridge. It provides that the State shall pay one-fourth the expense.

Mr. Lange, of St. Lawrence, has a bill amending the second section of the law of 1865, relating to the right of suffrage, by adding to it a clause that nothing in the act shall be construed to prevent the registration of persons proved to be citizens of the United States, under title 25, section 1,993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. The intent of the amendment is to clear up the doubt which now seems to exist whether, under the law as it now stands, persons born abroad of citizen parents have the right to vote.

The Senate held a 20-minute session with 20 members present. A message was received from the Governor complaining of the careless manner in which bills have been engrossed, and giving notice that he will refuse his signature to such bills hereafter. Senator Bixby introduced a bill authorizing the Park Commission to complete the improvements in and around Morningside Park.

It was currently reported last night that there is some trouble with the committee list. Nothing was done with it yesterday, but this evening Mr. Sloan, it is said, undertook a final revision, which soon advanced so far as to change the aspect of the whole list. Various friends are besieging the Speaker with advice, assistance, suggestions, and information, the effect of the whole being slightly confusing. He may find safety in a multitude of counselors, but apparently he has not found comfort. Some persons have suggested that he dismiss his Cabinet, lock himself in a room and make up the list himself. It may happen that the announcement of the committees will be delayed a little. The latest gossip is that Gilbert, of Franklin, a good man for the place, will have the chairmanship of the Insurance Committee, and also that Mr. Husted will be upon it.

A VIRGINIA BANK ROBBERY.

RICHMOND, Jan. 9.—Samuel H. Thornburn, charged with robbing the Citizens' Bank of Petersburg, Va., on the 30th ult., of $16,700, returned to that city last night and surrendered himself. He states that he was at Harrisburg, Penn., when he heard of the robbery, and that he was accused of it, and, being guiltless, at once started back to face the charge and establish his innocence. Upon being searched only a few dollars were found upon his person. Thornburn positively denies having any of the money, but declines to tell why he went away. Richard Bagby, of the firm of R. J. Gates & Co., who was arrested on a charge of counseling and abetting Thornburn in making false entries in the books of the Citizens' Bank of Petersburg, by which Bagby was enabled to obtain $10,000 of the money of the bank, has been admitted to bail in $15,000, under a writ of habeas corpus, to answer the charge on the 18th inst.

BUSINESS FAILURE IN CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 9.—Schultz & Van Bargen, a heavy wholesale liquor firm, controlling the Justice, Bullion, and Exchequer Mining Companies, made an assignment to their creditors yesterday. The assets of the firm are stated at $630,000 in excess of the liabilities, and it is believed their affairs will be straightened and the firm enabled to resume.

A POST OFFICE SAFE ROBBED.

PORT JERVIS, Jan. 9.—A safe in the Post Office at this place was blown open by burglars last night, and robbed of about $50 in cash. A package containing $830 worth of stamps was overlooked by the robbers, but about a dozen registered letters were carried away.

FOUR DEGREES BELOW ZERO AT CAIRO.

CAIRO, Jan. 9.—The Ohio River froze over here last night, but the transfer steamers have broken out a passage so as to make regular trips. The weather is clear and intensely cold. The mercury fell to 4° below zero during the night.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

POSITION OF THE REPUBLICANS.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE LEGISLATIVE CAUCUS OF OHIO—THE CALM AND DIGNIFIED ATTITUDE OF THE REPUBLICANS OF THAT STATE IN CONTRAST WITH THE SWAGGER AND BLUSTER OF THE DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 9.—A series of resolutions, which is understood to have been agreed to in joint caucus of the Republican members of the General Assembly, was introduced in the House of Representatives to-day relating to the Presidential situation. The resolutions were offered as a substitute for a much longer and more aggressive series presented some days ago by a Democratic member, and, after reasonable opportunity for discussion, will be passed by both houses. The preamble declares that the Democratic Party is the only political organization that has ever attempted to set aside a Presidential election by violence; recites the course of that party throughout the late war in instigating and sustaining the rebellion, and after the war in resisting reconstruction and all reasonable plans of settlement, and declares that the same party, again fairly beaten at the ballot-box, is resorting to intimidation, blustery and threats of bloodshed to defeat the inauguration of the legally-chosen President. The first resolution declares the spirit and purpose of the Democratic Party of Ohio, as now manifested, to be unpatriotic and wicked, and that they will receive the unqualified condemnation of the people. The second calls upon all law-abiding people to visit with scorn and condemnation the party thus threatening violence and attempting intimidation. The third, fourth, and fifth resolutions read:

That the Republicans of Ohio believe that Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler were fairly, honestly and legally elected on the 7th day of November last, and are fully entitled to be inaugurated, and to hold the offices thus conferred upon them, but they will not countenance or consent to violence or disregard of law, or established precedent to secure such a result, and will cheerfully abide by and conscientiously uphold the conclusion and judgment of the legal and constitutional authority of the nation, charged by the constitution and laws with the duty of deciding the question and declaring the result.

That we oppose and condemn compromises with wrong, or abandonment of right, and without dictating to Congress or any member of it, we demand a just and fair settlement of the question soon to be submitted for decision, and call upon all good citizens to peaceably abide by such decision when made.

That we demand that no man or political party shall be allowed to secure office or power in this country by bribery, falsehood, trickery, or violence, either aimed at people, States, Electors, or Congress, and we denounce no more infamous and more wicked, the intimidation of voters practiced by the Democratic Party in the recent election in Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida, Alabama, South Carolina, and elsewhere, the tricks by which votes were attempted to be obtained for Tilden by fraud and corruption in Oregon and Colorado, and the corruption that has marked the steps of the Democratic Party before and since the election.

The concluding resolutions commend the dignified conduct of Gov. Hayes, and assure the people, North and South, that they may safely confide in him; they also commend the course of President Grant in upholding the supremacy of the laws and endeavoring to secure to the people the constitutional exercise of the elective franchise.

Hon. William A. Wheeler, Vice President elect, is expected to arrive here to-morrow.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE REPUBLICANS.

THE STATE CONVENTION TO BE HELD TO-DAY—NOMINATIONS FOR GOVERNOR AND MEMBERS OF THE RAILROAD COMMISSION TO BE MADE—THE NAMES OF PROMINENT CANDIDATES — DISTRICT CONVENTIONS TO BE HELD AT DOVER AND CONCORD.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CONCORD, N. H., Jan. 9.—The Republican State Convention for the nomination of candidates for Governor and a Railroad Commission, to be supported in the approaching campaign, which closes on the second Tuesday in March, will assemble in this city to-morrow at 11 o'clock. Many of the delegates have already arrived, and are actively engaged in canvassing for a candidate. Gov. Cheney has been twice elected to office, and usage renders him ineligible for a third term. Moreover, he has no desire for the place, and would not accept it if tendered him. He has filled the office with dignity and ability, and, could he be persuaded to continue in the chair for another term, would doubtless be unanimously nominated. The very best of feeling prevails among the Republicans of the old granite State, but to predict the action of the convention with any degree of certainty is, at this time, exceedingly difficult. Appearances, however, to-night, are quite favorable to the nomination of Hon. B. F. Prescott, of Epping, the present efficient Secretary of State, to that position. He would make a strong candidate. Hon. James W. Johnson, of Enfield, Gen. Natt Head, of Hooksett, Evarts W. Farr, of Littleton, Zimoi S. Wallingford, of Dover, Dexter Richards, of Newport, and others, are also prominently mentioned in connection with the Executive nomination. But the chances are strongly in favor of one of the three first named.

The Congressional Convention for District No. 3 will also be held in this city to-morrow. Hon. Henry W. Blair, of Plymouth, will undoubtedly be renominated. He has served one term already, and, by party usages, is entitled to a second. The conventions for Districts Nos. 1 and 2 will be held in Dover and Concord respectively on the 17th inst. The leading candidates in District No. 1 are: Gen. Marston, who has already served two years in Congress; Hon. John J. Morrill, formerly a member of the Governor's Council, who will receive a large share of the support of the two upper counties of the district; Hon. S. M. Wheeler, of Dover, who will receive some local support, and Mr. Alonzo Nute, of Farmington, who has been unwilling to be a candidate, but would undoubtedly be one of the strongest nominations that could be put in the field. He is developing much unsolicited strength, and, if nominated, he will be found more than a match for Frank Jones, the present Democratic incumbent. In the Second District the contest is hourly increasing in interest. Practically speaking, the fight has narrowed down to two candidates—O. C. Moore, of Nashua, and James F. Briggs, of Manchester. It is, however, predicted that the contest may become so bitter as to give the nomination to a third man, in which event Hon. D. H. Burns, of Wilton, or Hon. Austin F. Pike, of Franklin, might be the choice of the nominating convention.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.

EFFORTS OF THE DEMOCRATS TO SECURE THE ELECTION — THE INDEPENDENTS NOT DISPOSED TO SELL OUT THEIR CHANCES—A COMPROMISE CANDIDATE NOT YET AGREED UPON—GEN. LOGAN'S CHANCES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 9.—The Democrats caucused this evening, and appointed an executive committee of eight, with the understanding that they were to receive overtures from the Independents, if any were made. The committee is in favor of a fusion. The Inuependents threaten that if the Democrats do not unite with them they will divide on a joint ballot, present two names, one for the Republicans to take up, the other for the Democrats, and whichever first gets a solid vote will receive all the votes of the Inuependents and be elected. Judge David Davis, of the United States Supreme Court, is the last man talked of as a compromise candidate. His friends think he would get all the Democratic and Independent votes. He has been asked if he will be a candidate, but he has not answered yet. Gen. Logan is as strong as on the night of the caucus. Two of the bolting Republicans show symptoms of returning to the fold, while the two others act as if they would remain out permanently.

THE FLORIDA INVESTIGATION.

TWO REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN MISREPRESENTED—NEITHER OF THEM BELIEVES THAT TILDEN CARRIED THAT STATE—NUMEROUS FRAUDS TO BE REPORTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The two Republican members of the committee that have just returned from Florida—Mr. Woodburn, of Nevada, and Dunnell, of Minnesota—feel greatly outraged because they are represented in several prominent newspapers as having made up their minds that the Tilden electors were honestly chosen in Florida, and that one or both of them would probably join in the Democratic report to that effect. Neither of these gentlemen have such a purpose, and neither of them believes that Florida voted for Tilden. They will give some authoritative denial of the story, perhaps on the floor of the House. A gentleman from Florida says that Mr. Woodburn was exceedingly efficient in the investigation, and the remark is attributed to him that he had found frauds enough in two counties to give the State to Hayes beyond any question. Mr. Dunnell is equally firm. These gentlemen tried to observe an agreement of the committee, that individual opinions should not be expressed until after the evidence was before the full committee for consideration. Their reticence in consequence of that agreement has subjected them to gross misrepresentation.

THE LATE DEMOCRATIC MEETINGS.

THEY WILL HAVE NO INFLUENCE IN SOLVING THE PENDING QUESTION—GATHERINGS WHICH DID THE DEMOCRATS LITTLE GOOD—REPUBLICANS SATISFIED WITH THE RESULT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The Democratic meetings of yesterday have been talked of here much to-day, and it is agreed they will have no influence on the solution of the Presidential controversy. The first and most conspicuous fact was that the meetings were manufactured by a few political leaders. After all the efforts made, the character and conduct of the meetings were such as to excite ridicule and contempt rather than to gain sympathy and popular support. The Democrats admit the meetings have done them no good, and Republicans are satisfied they have done the Democratic cause actual harm. As for the gathering of 50,000 or any other large force of Democrats in Washington to witness the count and bull-doze the Republicans, the project is regarded as perfectly absurd. The meetings do not show that any desire exists among the people to interfere with the proper and responsible officers in their duty of determining who is elected President. The result of the meetings has been to increase considerably the Republican confidence.

A DEMOCRATIC FLAT FAILURE.

THE DEMONSTRATIONS OF THE 8TH INST. WITHOUT THE DESIRED RESULT—THE MASS OF THE DEMOCRATS UNMOVED BY THE FROTHY WAR SPEECHES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 9.—The demonstrations at Columbus and Indianapolis yesterday have not had the desired effect. The war speeches of Tom Ewing and George W. Julian have awakened no response in Democratic rank and file, and the sheet-iron thunder, produced at such labor and expense, has not been followed by an echo. Hardly a word was heard on the streets, to-day, about the Tilden or fuss programme, the Bennett-May affair and the trouble in New-Orleans fully occupying the public mind. The Democratic leaders here are thoroughly convinced that the inauguration of Hayes upon a count of the vote by the Senate would be an act of usurpation to be resisted by force of arms, but they find difficulty in bringing the mass of the party up to that advanced doctrine.

The report in THE TIMES of John G. Thompson's plan of swearing in 100,000 deputies to be on hand in Washington on the 4th of March, to enforce the will of the House, causes some amusement here, where "Jonge" is known. It recalls the formidable preparations for the inauguration of Vallandigham, in 1863, when 100,000 Democrats were to have met the fugitive on the Canadian frontier, and to have escorted him to the Governor's chair.

THE DEMOCRACY OF OREGON.

MASS-MEETING HELD AT PORTLAND—CARRYING OUT TILDEN'S ORDERS—GROVER'S RECENT ACTION INDORSED—RESISTANCE TO GOV. HAYES' INAUGURATION ADVISED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PORTLAND, Jan. 9.—A large mass-meeting was held here last night by the Democracy, pursuant to instructions issued by the National and the State Central Committees. Great enthusiasm prevailed. Considering the excited state of the public mind over the pending struggle on the part of Tilden and his party, there was less denunciation and party bitterness evinced than was anticipated. The meeting was addressed by a number of prominent speakers, most of whom tempered their partisan rancor with a surprising degree of moderation. Only a few counseled a resort to violent and revolutionary expedients in the event of Mr. Hayes' inauguration. Resolutions were unanimously adopted heartily indorsing Gov. Grover's recent action, denouncing in the most acrimonious terms the conduct of the Returning Boards, and demanding, in the name of the American people, the inauguration of Tilden, claiming his election certain beyond human doubt. Similar meetings were held in most of the counties in the State, and proceedings of a kindred character are reported. The Democracy in this State appear united, and seem determined on the question of resistance to Gov. Hayes' inauguration.

THE OREGON CASE.

THE TESTIMONY BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE — CONTRADICTORY EVIDENCE GIVEN—DEMOCRATIC IRREGULARITIES OF SPEECH INDULGED IN—PALPABLE FALSEHOODS SWORN TO—THE TESTIMONY IN FULL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The Oregon investigation to-day resulted in obtaining some very contradictory testimony respecting what took place in the room where the Electors met. Klippel, who was present, swore in the most positive manner, in direct opposition to a statement by Cronin. The latter said that Cartwright and Odell demanded of him the production of the Governer's certificate of election, and he refused to show it or give it into their possession because he desired them not to have it to inclose with their votes sent to the President of the Senate. Klippel, who was produced as a strong Democratic witness, swore that no conversation took place in his hearing, and if there had been he must have heard it. Mr. Cronin's testimony on this point was corroborated by several witnesses, and Mr. Klipples' statements are all shaken by the palpable falsehood in contradicting Mr. Cronin.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections continued the investigation of the Oregon case to-day. Henry Kleppel, who was a Democratic candidate for Presidential Elector in Oregon at the late election, testified, in answer to Senator Kernan, that he was a resident of Jacksonville, Oregon, and that he was in Salem, Oregon, on the day of the meeting of the Electoral College; after the Republican Electors had elected Mr. Watts to fill the vacancy occasioned by his own resignation, the witness wrote on a slip of paper to Mr. Cronin: "The election of Watts is conclusive proof that they ignore you;" Mr. Cronin then left the Republican Electors, saying to the Republican Electors as he did so: "Then you refuse to act with me." Witness understood Mr. Cartwright to say, "I do." In answer to Senator Morton, witness testified that it is 250 miles from Jacksonville to Salem. Before he left home he believed he had been defeated as a Democratic Elector; he had been urged to go to Salem by a number of parties; he received a letter from Secretary of State Chadwick informing him of the time when the Electoral vote would be counted; he received a letter from Mr. Bellinger asking him to go to Salem on that day; witness has no acquaintance with a man named Patrick, and does not know that he ever saw the man referred to, but Cronin told him he had met a man named Patrick, whom Cronin described to witness as a pompous fellow who wanted to impress him [Cronin] with his duty as a Democratic Elector; Cronin did not say that Patrick represented himself as an agent of Gov. Tilden or that Patrick had offered him any consideration; a secret meeting was held at Salem after the arrival of witness, at which the whole Electoral question was discussed; at the meeting of the Electoral College he did not hear Cronin refuse to produce the certificates; nor did witness hear Odell and Cartwright demand that the certificates be laid on the table; Cronin did say, "Let us vote and attach the certificates to our votes." The secret meeting was held at the Capitol, in the room of the private Secretary of Gov. Grover. Witness never had any private conference in relation to the matter with Gov. Grover. Witness saw the Republican Electors signing papers after Cronin had left them. He also saw ballots lying on the table at which the Republican Electors sat; when Secretary of State Chadwick knocked at the door, at the time of handing the certificates of the Electors into the room, Cronin stood in the middle of the room; Cronin went promptly to the door upon hearing the knock, and took the envelope containing the certificates from the Secretary. Mr. Chadwick, who advanced a step into the room, but did not speak Cronin's name. Witness stated that he was sure the Republican Electors never once demanded their certificates of election of Cronin; was sure of it as he was of anything he had testified to. In answer to Senator Mitchell, Mr. Klippel testified that he was beaten as an Elector by over 1,000 votes, and thought when he went to Salem that he had 10 or 12 more votes than had any of his colleagues. He had "five shooter" in his person on the day the Electoral vote was cast, but knew of no arms being taken from the armory prior to the counting of the vote; his expenses from his home in Jacksonville to Salem were borne by himself and no one else; but he had talked with Mr. Billinger about raising a subscription to pay the necessary expenses—to pay the lawyers. Witness said he would subscribe; but Mr. Billinger said as he [witness] had paid all the expenses of his journey to Salem, he need not do so. The witness heard mention of money being raised to pay Mr. Cronin's expenses to Washington; he paid his own expenses from Jacksonville to Salem, and paid his own expenses during the campaign; he had never been reimbursed for the money thus spent, and no one has ever promised him that he should be.

In answer to Senator Morton, witness stated that it had been agreed upon before the Electoral College met that Parker and Miller should be appointed Electors in case Odell and Cartwright refused to act with Cronin. In reply to Senator Kernan witness stated that the idea was to appoint men, even if Democrats, who would cast their vote for Hayes and Wheeler; got the pistol he carried at the hotel where he stopped in Salem; the Republicans were considerably excited, but the Democrats were peaceable and quiet. In reply to Senator Morton witness said the Republicans held indignation meetings at several places, and denounced Cronin's and Gov. Grover's action, as outrageous. They talked and swore.

Senator Morton—I guess they did not swear like the Army in Flanders.

J. N. A. Miller, one of the Electors appointed by Cronin, testified, in answer to Senator Kernan, that he lives at Jacksonville; he was in the Senate Chamber, at the Capitol at Salem, the day before the Electoral College met, and went into the room where the college was in session when his name was called; when he went in he found that he had appointed him in place of Cartwright, who refused to act; Cartwright then got up and came over to them, when witness asked him if he refused to act with Cronin; Cartwright replied that he did, and witness then accepted his account of the proceedings, which did not differ from that of Mr. Klippel. In reply to Senator Morton, he testified that it cost $60 to go to Salem from Jacksonville and back, not including hotel bills; he went to Salem to get his daughter and to see the counting of the electoral vote; he was requested to act as an Elector by Klippel in the Odell and Cartwright refused to act with Cronin on the day the vote was counted he did not hear Odell ask Cronin for the certificates and did not hear Cronin refuse to produce them; he had a pistol in his pocket on the day the Electoral College met; it was a five-shooter, and he always carried it on his person.

Mr. Dolph, a Portland (Oregon) lawyer and a prominent Republican, was recalled, and testified, in answer to Senator Morton, that Mr. Chadwick did not enter the room a single step when he handed Cronin the Electoral certificates, and he said he was quite sure that Mr. Chadwick called Cronin's name. In answer to Mr. Kernan, Mr. Dolph stated that he had a pistol on his person on the day of the meeting of the college—a seven shooter; he told Secretary Chadwick that day that the proceedings of the Cronin College were a gross outrage, and that the people of the State ought never to allow the Governor to leave the State alive; he might have been somewhat excited then.

Mr. Morton—In reference to this remark about the Governor, what were the circumstances under which you made it? A.—I was considerably exasperated against the Secretary of State and the Governor, and felt that a great crime had been committed against the people of the State for which they had no legal redress, and that some punishment ought to be meted out to the instigators.

Senator Kernan—Then where an offense has been committed you would resort to murder and violence, would you? A.—No, Sir. I don't believe in lynch law, but I do think that the perpetrators of the crime in question ought to be punished in some way.

Mr. Kernan—Well, then, what did you mean by your remarks in regard to Gov. Grover? A.—The remarks were made under the circumstances I have described, and I don't know that I have anything to add to my explanation. Mr. Dolph, in reply to Senator Kernan, also stated that he had been in Washington since the last of December, and that he had business of a professional nature here in addition to being a witness in the Oregon case.

Mr. Cartwright was recalled, and in answer to Senator Morton testified that he did ask Cronin for the certificates of the Electors three or four times, and Cronin refused to give them up; the last time he was requested Cronin replied, "You may as well understand first as last that I will not give up the certificates." In answer to Senator Kernan witness replied that he was somewhat excited at the time; he had a pistol on his person, a seven-shooter, but does not know whether it was loaded or not; witness' brother, who lived in Salem, handed it to him on the morning of that day. At this point the committee adjourned.

THE TENNESSEE SENATORSHIP.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 9.—Ex-Gov. Isham G. Harris was to-day at 12 o'clock elected United States Senator on the first ballot in both houses of the Legislature, for the long term, to succeed Hon. Henry Cooper, whose term expires March 4, 1877. For the short term, one ballot was taken in each house, as follows: William B. Bate, 34; James E. Bailey, 24; D. M. Key, 12; Peter Turney, 9; A. H. Pettibone, 20; Horace Maynard, 1.

AMUSEMENTS.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Mr. Frank Frayne is acting and shooting at the Olympic Theatre, in London.

"Robinson Crusoe" is the title of the pantomime at Covent Garden, in London.

Signor Rossi is engaged at St. Petersburg for Lent, a period when the Russian theatres are closed. He is to play at the Théâtre-Marie.

The Fantaisies-Oller, on the Boulevard des Italiens, in Paris, has been closed by order of a Judge sitting in chambers, in consequence of non-execution of an ordnance legally issued.

Miss Minnie Hauck, the young American prima donna, is at present the great musical attraction at Berlin. Since the beginning of October she has appeared at the Hotopernhaus in no less than ten different operas.

"The Forty Thieves" is the subject and title of the pantomime at Drury Lane Theatre, in London. The Vokes Family fill the leading rôles. Pantomime, of course, is the attraction at almost all the other metropolitan theatres.

The Communal Council of Brussels has just voted a supplementary credit of 1,500 francs as an encouragement to Mlle. Dulait for the success that young Belgian artist has obtained at the Paris Théâtre Français in "Rome Vaincue."

The first of the representations at the Salle Ventadour, in Paris, in which Mlle. Albani was to appear, was to take place on the 6th of January. She was to sing, during her engagement, in three operas, "Lucia," "Rigoletto," and the "Sonnambula," in the order named.

At the Third Théâtre-Français (that of M. Ballande,) in Paris, a five-act comedy, entitled "L' Obstacle," has been produced with much success. The plot, without being novel, is strongly dramatic, and gives rise to some striking situations. The obstacle in question is one that is interposed to prevent the marriage of a charming young girl, Mlle de Champlieu, to her betrothed lover, Georges de Liary. The obstacle lies in the fact that the mother of the young lady, who was supposed to be dead, is, in fact, leading the life of a demi-mondaine under the name of Mme. De Rives. All is well that ends well, and it is thus with the story of "L' Obstacle."

In the French budget of the fine arts, the proposition of the Minister of that department, which for the past year amounted to 1,618,000 francs for the national theatres and the Conservatoire, is for the present one 1,643,500 francs. The difference is the result of some additional branches of study at the institution last named, more particularly a course of lectures on the general history of music, an orchestra class, four singing classes of special character, and two preparatory courses for the violin. The subventions granted to the national theatres are not altered, being for the Grand Opéra 800,000 francs, the Théâtre Franç is 240,000 francs, Opéra Comique 140,000 francs, Théâtre Lyrique 100,000 francs, and Odéon 60,000 francs.

Of Mme. Carvalho's performance of Isabella in the revival of "Robert" at the Paris Opera-house, a critic says: "It was simply marvelous. The lady is over 50 years of age, and her voice has already shown fatal symptoms of decay, yet I have never heard the flexible music of the Princesse more delicously sung, especially the Robert, toi que j'aime, which aroused a genuine and spontaneous outburst of enthusiasm from the audience. She looked, too, so wonderfully youthful and pretty, particularly in the dress of the fourth act, which was extremely trying, being a perfectly plain and close-fitting robe of white cashmere, with wide hanging sleeves, only relieved by a few lines of narrow gold braid down the front. In this severely simple garb, with a good deal of reddish golden hair hanging over her shoulders, and confined by a plain circlet of gold, she did not look 20 years of age."

WASHINGTON.

DEBATE IN THE SENATE ON THE SOUTHERN QUESTION.

DEMOCRATS ENDEAVORING TO BREAK DOWN THE EVIDENCE—AN ABLE SPEECH BY SENATOR SHERMAN—THE EVIDENCE QUOTED—STRONG POINTS MADE—A FEEBLE ATTEMPT AT REPLY MADE BY SENATOR BOGY—THE RIGHT OF A MINORITY TO REBEL AGAINST THE MAJORITY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The principal feature of the Senate proceedings to-day was a debate on the Southern question, which demonstrated very clearly that the Democrats intend to rest their claims to the Presidency upon the vote of Louisiana. They have evidently discovered that they can hope for nothing from Florida or South Carolina, and it now seems to be assured that they will devote all their energies to breaking down the evidence and overturning the testimony upon which the Returning Board of the Pelican State threw out the vote of the "bull-dozed" parishes. The debate referred to was opened by Senator Sherman, who spoke for nearly two hours and a half. Referring to the action of the board in the matter, he proved very conclusively that it was entirely in accordance with the law and the Constitution of the State. He believed, however, that there was something more than legal action required. The people, who were the grand and final judges of all such questions, would demand not only that the action of the board should be legal, but that it should be just, equitable, and right. To prove that the Returning Board had acted justly, it was only necessary to prove that the testimony upon which the vote of the intimidated parishes had been thrown out was reliable and sufficient. The Senator then referred to the character of the testimony upon which this action had been taken, and made a very good point against the Democrats by quoting the evidence given by Gen. Brooke, of the Third United States Infantry, and other United States Army officers, whose word could not be doubted, and who, it will be remembered, swore positively that in East and West Baton Rouge, East and West Feliciana, Morehouse, Ouachita, and a number of other parishes, such a reign of terror had been established by the white Democrats before the election that not one black man in a hundred dared to attend political meetings or vote the Republican ticket. The Speaker also referred to and quoted the very conclusive testimony of Ben Morgan, the negro Coroner, who swore that he had not held inquests over the bodies of murdered Republicans, because he had been warned that if he did so he would be killed, or, to use his own words, that "somebody would have to hold an inquest over him." All these things, continued Senator Sherman, are true before God. And yet it sometimes seems impossible to make the American people believe them. They will not believe, because they cannot bring themselves to think that in this nineteenth century men can commit such crimes as those which are committed in Louisiana.

Here Senator Withers, of Virginia, interrupted the speaker by the remark, "As those which in your opinion are committed." "No," replied Senator Sherman, quickly; "I make no statement simply upon my own opinion. The crimes of outrage and murder to which I refer were proved against the Democrats beyond all question; proved by testimony which would have been accepted as conclusive by any court in the country." Then he continued to quote from the testimony, and concluded by a strong and effective argument in support of the just and lawful action of the Returning Board. When he had finished Mr. Bogy obtained the floor, and made a vain attempt to pick a flaw in the address of the Senator from Ohio. He made the old-time, worn-out, general charges against Gov. Kellogg, Mr. Packard, and other Republicans of Louisiana, and claimed that they had no interest in the State and paid no taxes. Of course the honorable Senator was not aware that what he stated was untrue. Had he taken the trouble to inquire, however, he could have discovered that Mr. Kellogg alone owns more real estate in Louisiana than Messrs. Nicholls, McEnery, and all the other Democratic pretenders combined; and this property, it may be well to state, was bought and paid for long before the Governor held an office in Louisiana.

After making the misstatements regarding Gov. Kellogg and Mr. Packard, the Senator seemed to lose all control over his feelings. He said in one breath that the white men of the South were justified in rising as they had done to crush out the Governments that were oppressing them, and in the next he denied that there had been any crimes committed in Louisiana for political effect. then he concluded by making the remarkable statement that it was much easier to get colored men to testify to violence and intimidation than it was to get white men. This, of course, is true, for it is a well-known fact that the black men are intimidated, outraged, and murdered—not the whites. At this point Senator Boutwell gave notice that he would speak on the Mississippi election in a few days, and that he would prove even greater crimes against the Democrats there than those referred to by the Senator from Ohio. Then Senator Sherman concluded the debate on his side by the remark that, as Senator Bogy had admitted the right of a minority to rebel against, and, by force, overcome, the rule of a majority, it would be useless to discuss the matter with him further, for it would be just as well for the Republicans of New-York to claim that they would be justified in overturning by force, fraud, and violence, the thieving Democratic Government in that City.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

THE PRIVACY OF TELEGRAPHIC DISPATCHES—THE SILVER QUESTION IN CONGRESS—CONFIRMATIONS BY THE SENATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The House to-day adopted a resolution directing the Sergeant at Arms to take William Orton into custody and bring him to the bar of the House to answer for contempt in refusing to appear before Mr. Morrison's committee at New-Orleans, in obedience to the summons of the House. A similar resolution was introduced directing the Sergeant at Arms to take into custody the members of the Louisiana Returning Board for their refusal to appear and answer before the same committee. This resolution was postponed until to-morrow, when it will probably be passed.

The House Committee on Commerce to-day agreed to report favorably Mr. Cox's bill regulating immigration, with an amendment reducing the amount of head tax to be imposed on each immigrant from $2 to $1 50. The details of this bill have already been printed in THE TIMES.

Senator Morrill, of Vermont, to-night entertained the celebrated silver currency advocate, M. Cernuschi, at dinner, and invited several Senators and Members of the House to listen to a statement of his guest's views on the silver question. The silver bill was not taken up in the Senate Committee on Finance to-day, as was intended, owing to the absence of three members of the committee. It now begins to look as if the other important questions of the Winter would really crowd the silver legislation over to next session, but this cannot be hoped very confidently.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

Orders have been issued from the head-quarters of the Army to the Superintendent of Recruiting Service at St. Louis to discontinue enlistments at that station, except for the Tenth Cavalry, until further orders. Capt. Andrew Sheridan, of the Twenty-fourth Infantry, has resigned. Major John W. Todd, of the Ordnance Department, is relieved from duty at Louisville, Ky., and awaits further orders.

Cadet Midshipman Edwin B. Webster, of Connecticut, who was dismissed from the Naval Academy at Annapolis, last October, for refusing to reveal the names of the Cadet Midshipmen that he had seen "hazing," has, at the instance of Senator Barnum, been reinstated by the Secretary of the Navy.

The President sent the following nominations to the Senate to-day: Moses Hallet, to be United States District Judge for the District of Colorado; W. S. Decker, to be United States Attorney for the District of Colorado; John D. Miles, of Indiana, to be Indian Agent for the Upper Arkansas Agency, Indian Territory; Charles D. Pasten, of Arizona, to be Register of the Land Office at Florence, Arizona; Barbour Lewis, of Tennessee, to be Register of the Land Office at Salt Lake City, Utah; Moses M. Bane, of Utah, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Salt Lake City, Utah; Third Lieut. C. T. Borlan to be Second Lieutenant in the Revenue service.

THE DISTRICT ATTORNEYSHIP.

THE PRESENT INCUMBENT NOT TO BE REAPPOINTED—THE OFFICE SAID TO HAVE BEEN TENDERED TO GEN. ARTHUR—JUDGE DITTENHOEFER'S CHANCES CONSIDERED GOOD.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—Thomas Murphy, Hugh J. Hastings, A. B. Cornell, Col. Frank Howe, and a number of other gentlemen prominently connected with New-York politics, arrived in Washington last evening and this morning. They are all very reticent as to the object of their visit, but it is generally understood here that they come regarding one or two contemplated changes in the Federal service at New-York City. It can now be definitely stated that Col. George Bliss will not be reappointed to the position of United States District Attorney which he now holds. The office has been tendered, it is understood, to Gen. Chester A. Arthur, but he prefers to retain the position at the head of the Customs Department which he has so long and satisfactorily filled. Ex-Judge Dittenhoefer is now considered by his friends the most prominent candidate for the District Attorneyship, and it is probable that Mr. A. B. Cornell will be appointed to the position of Naval Officer of the Port.

THE BALANCE OF THE GENEVA AWARD—A BILL INTRODUCED IN THE HOUSE FOR THE FORMATION OF A COMMISSION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—Congressman Freeman, of Philadelphia, offered a resolution in the House to-day, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, for the appointment of a commission to inquire into and report the most feasible plan of appropriating the balance of the Geneva award fund, so as to reimburse, in the most equitable manner, losses by the rebel cruisers, and for the disposition of funds that may remain after such adjustment of losses in such a manner as to promote the interests of American ship-building and commerce. The resolution provides that the Commission shall consist of one Senator, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, two members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker, and two other persons to be named by the President of the United States. An effort will be made to get the resolution considered by the committee at its next meeting and reported to the House at an early day.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S REPORT.

THE RECENT ELECTIONS—HOW THE PEACE WAS PRESERVED AND THE RIGHTS OF CITIZENSHIP SECURED—DEMONSTRATIONS OF DOMESTIC VIOLENCE—THE PRESIDENT'S COURSE A PROPER ONE—THE SPIRIT OF INSURRECTION.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The following is the conclusion of the annual report of Attorney General Taft, communicated to Congress to-day: "The state of the country, in anticipation of the recent Presidential election, has thrown upon the National Government unusual responsibility. Evidence which could not be discredited came to the President and to the Department of Justice showing that intimidation and violence prevailed in several States to such an extent as to prevent freedom of opinion, and that in South Carolina unlawful military companies known as "rifle clubs" were organized, and that by riding through the country armed, doing violence to peaceable people, and menacing the good citizens who differed with them in political opinion, they broke up or prevented assemblages for political discussion. In view of the actual and prospective danger of lawless violence before and at the election, and in pursuance of the statute which requires the Attorney General "to exercise general supervision and direction over the Attorneys and Marshals of all the districts in the United States as to the manner of discharging their respective duties, I communicated to the Marshals in those districts which appeared to be in special danger from intimidation or fraud the instructions inclosed. These instructions have heretofore been published, are stringent in their character, and designed to secure voters in the exercise of their rights. The Attorney General says: "I am satisfied that the United States Marshals and Attorneys acting in concert with the Supervisors of Election under these instructions in New-York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, St. Louis, Chicago, New-Orleans, and in several of the Southern States, contributed materially to the preservation of the peace and to the securing to the citizens freedom in the exercise of the right of suffrage. The interest when the people of the United States have in the purity of the ballot for Federal officers to be elected by the popular vote, and the acts of Congress intended to guard the ballots for Congressional candidates from fraud, justified and required the instructions. Such were the demonstrations of domestic violence in South Carolina a few weeks before the election, so defiant and uncontrollable by civil power, that the Governor of the State applied, under the Constitution, to the President, stating that he was unable to suppress the domestic violence that existed in the State; that armed organizations, contrary to law, known as "rifle clubs," continually roamed over the country doing violence, and that they were altogether beyond his control, breaking up the peace of the State and terrifying the citizens. The declaration of the Governor, supported by ample evidence from other sources, left the President no course but to comply with his constitutional demand by issuing the appropriate proclamation, and by ordering to that State such military force as seemed to be necessary and was within his control. The troops were not intended to interfere, and did not interfere, with any citizen's right to vote, but on the contrary their endeavor was to make it safe for citizens to vote according to their political opinions. There is no authentic evidence that any man has been deprived of his right to vote, or of his freedom of opinion by the presence of the small military force in South Carolina. To have refused the aid sought by the Governor to suppress domestic violence and insurrection would have been a plain denial of the constitutional right of the Governor and people of South Carolina. The spirit of insurrection in South Carolina, and in some other States in which colored voters are numerous, seemed to be founded upon the idea that the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution, prohibiting the deprivation of citizens of their rights to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, was a blunder, and that the people of the South were not bound to recognize or submit to it. But such pretensions, in view of the history and under the present circumstances of the country, are unreasonable. The fifteenth amendment to the Constitution was forced upon the people of the Union by the insubordination of the then dominant voting population of the States which had been in rebellion against the Government. It became obvious that the freedom and civil rights of the colored citizens of those States could not otherwise be preserved. At the same time, with the adoption of this amendment, the political power of those States was increased to the extent of two-fifths of the colored population; in other words, by more than 20 Electoral and more than 50 Congressional votes, so that, but for the fifteenth amendment, the party with which these States have generally affiliated would have been in a decided minority in the late election, instead of approaching, as it did, equality with the Republican vote. To allow the Southern States the increased political power implied by extending the rights of suffrage to the colored population, and then to allow the exercise of this right to be prevented by intimidation or otherwise is a perversion of the Constitution, and operates most injustly toward the other States of the Union. Without denying the inconvenience of having a large population of unintelligent voters, it is enough to say that the colored citizens have, under the Constitution, a clear title to the ballot, of which I know no fair or even practicable way to deprive them. It is the duty of those who are more intelligent to aid in putting into operation a system of popular education which shall reach every class in every State. Universal education of the voting people, both white and colored, is essential to the safety of our republican Government. No time should be lost in furnishing ample opportunities to every American citizen, of whatever complexion, race or condition, to acquire sufficient mental and physical training to vote and fight with intelligence. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALPHONSO TAFT, Attorney General.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

STOLEN PROPERTY RECOVERED—CIVIL ENGINEERS TO EXAMINE THE BROKEN STRUCTURE—THE CORONER'S INQUEST.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 9.—Mayor Hepburn reports that between $300 and $400 worth of property has already been recovered. A committee of civil engineers from various parts of the country have volunteered their services to thoroughly investigate the cause of the falling of the bridge. This committee is already on the ground, and commenced their work to-day, but owing to the severe cold their progress is slow. When these gentlemen have carefully examined the broken bridge, piece by piece, and made their report, it will be the nearest approach to ascertaining where the responsibility for this terrible disaster lies that can ever be arrived at.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 9.—The Leader's Ashtabula special says: "The Coroner's jury convened at 9 o'clock this morning. George M. Reid sworn: Am Superintendent of Bridges for the entire length of the Lake Shore Railroad; have been in the employ of the road five years; previous to that was employed by the McNairy & Cladin Manufacturing Company of Cleveland; am perfectly familiar with the construction of both iron and wooden bridges; all inspection and repairs of bridges are under my direction; Mr. A. L. Rogers is inspector of the division in which the Ashtabula bridge is located; considered myself perfectly familiar with the Ashtabula bridge; thought it was a very strong bridge, heavy in all its parts; have never received any report that anything serious was the matter with it; it never needed anything but trifling repairs; went through the bridge last September for the purpose of inspecting it, and while so doing two trains passed over; examined it for two hours; have made bridges a study for the past 25 years; the bridge was put up in 1865; was considered above the ordinary

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK BY THE UNDERSIGNED, AS AGENTS FOR THE PROPER AUTHORITIES OF SAME UNTIL

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 10, 1877,

AT 2 O'CLOCK P. M., for the whole or any part of the sum of $2,800,000, MUNICIPAL BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI, as authorized by an act of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, entitled "an act relating to cities of the first class having a population exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants," passed May 4, 1869, and "an act supplementary thereto," passed Feb. 24, 1876, a vote of the people of the CITY OF CINCINNATI, and a resolution of the City Council as prescribed by the said act.

SAID BONDS WILL BEAR INTEREST AT THE RATE OF 7 3-10 PER CENT. PER ANNUM, PAYABLE ON THE 1ST DAY OF MAY AND NOVEMBER IN EACH YEAR, AND THE PRINCIPAL WILL BECOME DUE IN 1906, BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST BEING PAYABLE AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK IN NEW-YORK.

Each proposal should be sealed and indorsed:

"PROPOSALS FOR 7 3-10 PER CENT. BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI," AND INCLOSED IN A SECOND ENVELOPE ADDRESSED TO THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK.

The right is reserved on the part of the undersigned to reject any or all of the bids, if, in their judgment, the interests of the city require it.

AWARDS WILL BE MADE ON JAN. 11.

THE SNOW IN THE STREETS.

DETERMINATION OF THE POLICE COMMISSIONERS NOT TO REMOVE IT, EXCEPT A SPECIAL APPROPRIATION BE MADE FOR THAT PURPOSE—THEIR REPLY TO THE MAYOR.

The utter failure of the Street-cleaning Bureau to remove the snow and ice from the principal thoroughfares of the City, and the abominable condition in which the streets have been for the past two weeks, have attracted considerable attention. The Board of Appertionment, on Monday last, unanimously refused to grant an additional appropriation to the Police Commissioners for street-cleaning purposes, as they had already appropriated a sufficient asum for that purpose. Police Commissioner Nichols, Chairman of the Street-cleaning Committee, on being asked yesterday what steps the board intended to take in the matter, said that when the snow first fell he and Commissioner Wheeler, the other member of the committee, were in favor of removing it at once. The matter was brought before the board, and Gen. Smith, the President, and Commissioner Erhardt, were both opposed to it, for the reason, as they said, that there was no appropriate fund in existence out of which the expense of such work could be paid, and the Board had no right to use money appropriated for street-cleaning for the purposes proposed. They then made application to the Board of Apportionment for the appropriation of $50,000 for the purpose of removing snow and ice from the streets, and the Board of Apportionment refused to grant the appropriation. Therefore, he said, it was the opinion of the Board, and in that opinion they were sustained by their legal adviser, that, in the face of the refusal of the Board of Apportionment to give them the money asked for, they had no right to use the money appropriated for street-cleaning purposes to remove snow and ice from the streets. He said that the Committee on Street-cleaning were still anxious to remove the snow, but that they could not do so against the opposition of their colleagues on the board and the legal advice of counsel. He had had 500 carts and 600 or 700 laborers waiting from 8 A. M. until 5 P. M. every day since the snow fell, ready to be put to work at a moment's notice, as soon as they could obtain the proper authority to do so. The counsel of the board gave it as his opinion that all the money heretofore used for removing ice and snow had been misappropriated, and that the opinion heretofore given by Corporation Counsel E. Delafield Smith did not cover the point now at issue, as at that time the appropriation for removing ice and snow had not been refused. When asked what the committee proposed to do about the matter, Mr. Nichols replied that they had consulted Corporation Counsel Whitney for his opinion, and that he was disposed to be guided by that opinion, whatever it might be. He contended that he was anxious to remove the snow from Broadway and the various cross streets leading to the different East and North River ferries as soon as what were considered legal obstacles thereto were removed. Referring to the statement made on Monday by ex-Commissioner Voorhis, in regard to the expense of running the Street-cleaning Department under Mr. Voorhis' administration, Mr. Nichols said that Mr. Voorhis omitted to state that for six years previous to last May the New-Jersey Central Railroad had removed all the ashes, garbage, and other material gathered from the North River side of the City, furnishing boats, laborers, tugs, and a place for dumping. In that way, he said, $75,000 to $100,000 per year had been saved to the board. Since last May, however, the railroad companies had abandoned the arrangement, and the work now devolved upon the City.

Commissioner Erhardt said that so far as he was concerned, when he was satisfied that the board had no right to spend money for any specific purpose, he was as "fixed as fate," as he had rather be removed for not spending it than indicted for spending it. The position of the board, he said, is this: When Judge Beach drew the present bill he purposely left out snow and ice, because he saw that the City could not remove it and bear the expense. When the snow first fell, Mr. Nichols and Mr. Wheeler were anxious to remove it from Broadway by doing as the previous board had done, and using the money appropriated for cleaning the streets. Both he and Gen. Smith, however, satisfied that the law did not provide an appropriation for that purpose, were of the opinion that the taking of money from the street-cleaning fund to do that for which an appropriation had been denied would be a clear violation of all the opinion of counsel. The other two Commissioners finally concurred. Besides, if it is the duty of the board to remove the snow and ice from Broadway, it is also their duty to remove it from every street in the City, which it is impossible to do, and which if attempted would speedily bankrupt the Treasury. When asked what action the board proposed now to take, and whether they would be guided by the opinion of Corporation Counsel Whitney, when obtained, Mr. Erhardt said that, inasmuch as the courts had already decided that they were not bound by any unsound law or any unsound decision of a law officer in regard to the acts of any public officer, he preferred to be governed by what he regarded right before he would consent to adopt any course liable to legal complications. If the snow was to be removed from the streets under the law governing street cleaning it must be done in accordance with the provisions of that law and towed out to sea and dumped; and that," said the Commissioner, "cannot be done."

Gen. Smith, President of the Board, and Commissioner Wheeler, the other member of the Street-cleaning Committee, were also asked to state their position in regard to the matter, and both coincided with the opinions expressed by their colleagues.

THE POLICE COMMISSIONERS' REPLY TO THE MAYOR'S COMMUNICATION.

The subjoined communication was transmitted yesterday by Gen. Smith, President of the Police Board, to Mayor Ely:

SIR: Your letter of the 5th inst. is received, requesting me to inform you "why the removal of ashes has been suspended, and whether it is practicable to have snow removed from at least one or two of the principal streets?" To the first inquiry I beg to reply that ashes and garbage have not been removed with usual promptitude and regularity because:

First—The snow and ice in the streets have rendered it impossible, with the sub-cart force at the command of the Street-cleaning Bureau, to perform the work of collection with the accustomed regularity.

Second—By reason of the obstacles of ice in the bays and storms on the coast, the tugs and scows cannot go to sea, and the material is producing an objectionable, if not an illegal, accumulation at the dumps.

Third—Because the law and the constituted authorities do not allow the material (ashes and garbage) to be disposed of within the City limits.

In answer to the second inquiry, allow me to say that it would be practicable to remove the snow from one, two, or more principal streets if the board possessed the money, and the authority to expend it; but the power to grant that the board is authorized to remove snow from any street, it is, by chapter 677 of the laws of 1873, and would by that act be required to remove the snow from all the streets, unless you exhaust the whole appropriation for street-cleaning for the year 1877.

Inasmuch as the Board of Apportionment have recently swallowed and struck out from our department estimate the item for removing snow, and as we have refused to transfer for that purpose any part of the unexpended balance for 1875, and having in view the consequences of expending public money for purposes for which appropriations have been refused, the board, as at present advised, are not willing to spend public money when there is well-founded doubt as to the legality of the proceeding.

They beg to state that the Board of Apportionment will by resolution appropriate or devote any part of the appropriation for 1877 to, or if they will transfer to the year 1877 any part of the unexpended balance of 1875 for the purpose of removing snow or ice; or if the board will state by resolution what portion of the appropriation of 1877 may be expended for removing snow and ice, and designate the streets and parts of streets which shall be cleaned, the board will be most happy to apply it promptly to the purpose for which it is appropriated. Yours respectfully,

W. F. SMITH.

THE BROOKLYN CALAMITY.

Very little testimony of importance was elicited last night at the inquest concerning the death of the victims of the Brooklyn Theatre. John R. Petty described the escape of a man from a window on Flood's Alley. Frederick Jenkins testified that he heard confused noises on the stage before the rising of the curtain, and a man's voice calling "Get down from there." John Boyle testified that he escaped from the top gallery, and saw no Policeman go up the gallery stairs. George Hyson, Jr., assistant scenic artist, testified that he had seen a hose on the stage, but could not say whether it was a fire-hose or not. George W. Holland escaped from the gallery, coming down the stairs with about 70 persons. The gallery, the witness said, was crowded. Patrick Heffernan gave similar testimony, after which the inquest was adjourned until this evening.

THE STEAM-SHIP MONTGOMERY.

The steam-ship Montgomery, which was run into and sunk on Sunday last by the steamer Seminole, of the Boston and Savannah line, left this City for Havana at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Jan. 5. She took out only four passengers, all of whom were lost. Their names were: Venancoo Alday, Juan Porcy-Pons, George Grastaves, and Manuel Suadez Gonzalez. The cargo consisted chiefly of provisions, and was valued at about $50,000. The Montgomery was built in 1858 in this City for the Cromwell Line. At the breaking out of the war she was sold to the United States, and was equipped as a gun-boat. She did excellent service along the Atlantic coast, and was extremely fortunate in capturing prizes. At the close of the war she was bought by Russell Sturgiss and Robert L. Taylor, and with the Huntsville formed the Black Star Line between New-York and Savannah. Two years ago she was sold to Otto Gelpcke, and was put upon C. H. Mallory & Co.'s Fernandina and Port Royal Line, Mr. Gelpcke being associated with Mr. Mallory in business. About a year ago the vessel was seized in behalf of a number of mortgagees, and Messrs. Richard Irwin, Richard Poillon, and John Roach were appointed Trustees for the mortgagees, and managed the steamer from that time up to the day of her loss. For several months after her seizure she lay idle, but was subsequently chartered by C. H. Mallory & Co., who used her a time for the transportation of cotton. Having no immediate use for her she was recently leased to James E. Ward & Co. The Montgomery is insured in the interests of the mortgagees, but the Trustees declined to state the amount of the insurance.

A NEW METHOD OF SWINDLING.

AN ADVERTISING AGENT DECEIVES A NUMBER OF MERCHANTS, AND CHEATS HIS EMPLOYER—HE MAKES BIG CASH COMMISSIONS EXCEED THE AMOUNT OF HIS CONTRACTS.

Last Summer the firm of H. W. Pinninger & Co., No. 81 Barclay street, were called upon by H. K. Whytal, who exhibited a prospectus of the "Patrons of Husbandry (Grangers) and Sovereigns of Industry United States Business Directory," an advertising sheet, and solicited an advertisement. He said that the publisher, Mr. O. R. Ingersoll, of No. 259 Front street, was the manager of the Patrons' Paint Company, engaged in the manufacture of Ingersoll's ready-mixed paints, and did a large business with the Grangers; that he was constantly receiving large numbers of letters asking him to give his correspondents the names of leading business houses in this City, in order that they might buy goods without fear of being cheated. This correspondence had become such a burden that Mr. Ingersoll had decided to add the cards of a certain number of firms to a circular of his own advertising the company's paint, for a sum merely sufficient to pay the postage. For this reason he would take advertisements at only $10 per page, and $5 per half page. Whytal's story was so plausible that the Messrs. Pinninger were induced to sign a contract for a half-page advertisement, to be paid for when the circular was published, the edition to be of 25,000 copies. A short time ago they were much surprised to receive a bill from Mr. Ingersoll for the sum of $75 for the advertisement, and very naturally refused to pay it, saying that they had agreed to pay $5 only. Ingersoll then presented the contract, written on a printed blank, in which it was stated that $75 should be paid. The firm then called attention to the fact that the word "seventy" was written in before the word "five" in a crowded manner, and had evidently been inserted after the contract had been signed by them. They also called attention to the fact that the "five" was begun with a capital letter, which was unusual. They then produced their copy of the contract, across the face of which Whytal had written his initials, which was for $5 only. As they refused to pay, Mr. Ingersoll placed the matter in the hands of his lawyer, who brought suit to recover the amount charged. The firm referred the matter to their attorney, and this gentleman, obtaining a copy of the circular, wrote to all the firms who had advertised in it, asking whether they had met with a similar experience. In many instances the replies were in the affirmative, and a general intention of refusing to pay the excess charged, was manifested. These facts having been obtained by a TIMES reporter from Mr. Todhunter, counsel for the Messrs. Pinninger, yesterday afternoon, the reporter called on Mr. Ingersoll at his place of business, No. 259 Front street, to get his version of the matter. Mr. Ingersoll said it was true that Whytal had solicited advertisements for his circular as stated, but that he had no personal knowledge of any acts or bad faith on his part. In the early part of last year he had published a Directory of similar character to the one in question, and had employed Whytal to procure the advertisements. He had done his work satisfactorily, and the bills were all collected, and no complaints had been made. Later in the year, believing him to be honest, he had again employed him in the same capacity. The rates he had directed him to charge were $150 per page and $75 per half page, and these rates were printed on the margin of the sample sheet or prospectus he had given him. On the back of the contracts the same rates were printed. In point of fact, however, he believed that Whytal had in many instances watered into contracts for $10 and $5 per page, instead of $150 and $75. But he (Ingersoll) was really the only sufferer, as Whytal had raised the amounts set down in the contracts before turning them into his office, and had been paid his commission of 30 per cent on them, thus receiving $22 50 for a half-page advertisement, which he had agreed to insert for $5. But this had nothing to do with collecting the bills. Mr. Ingersoll was ready to say that he had complied with the terms of his contract, and had printed the 25,000 copies he had agreed to, and had had them distributed through the mails. If the parties had signed the contracts in such a manner as to admit of the interpolation of another word before the one denoting the sum agreed upon, it was their own negligence, and he did not feel that he ought to suffer for it. Besides, the advertisements were worth what had been charged for them, and the advertisers, as business men, ought to have known there was something wrong when so little was asked. He had paid Whytal about $1,000 in commissions, and had expended about an equal amount in having the circulars printed and sent through the mails. He thought, as the advertisers had secured the advantages of the circular they ought to be willing to bear some of the expense. He would be perfectly willing to compromise with any of them on a fair basis, as he had already done in several cases, but he was not willing to bear all the burden. In cases where a forgery or interpolation was clearly proved he did not propose to bring suit, but where it was open to a doubt, and the contract bore the amount written clearly on its face, he would. As for Whytal, he had not seen him for some months, and he believed he had left the City.

THE BAR ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING — ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS AND ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The Bar Association of the City of New-York held its annual meeting last night. Hon. William M. Evarts presided. The annual report of the Executive Committee stated that $6,000 had been appropriated to the library fund during the year. According to the Treasurer's annual report, the balance to the credit of the general fund was $6,238 07, and to the Library fund, $1,478.12, the Special Committee appointed to investigate the charges of perjury preferred by Mr. Victor Lusker against Mr. Charles H. Roosevelt, reported that there was nothing in the charge, Mr. Rosevelt having already been exonerated by two competent legal tribunals, and recommended that the charges be dismissed. The report of the Committee on Amendments, in favor of the passage of a law by Congress providing for the appointment of two additional Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States, for this circuit, was adopted by the association. The following gentlemen were elected members of the association: John Brooks Leavitt, L. E. G. Rande, James L. Bishop, Frank Etheridge, Frederick H. Comstock, Eugene L. Bushe, Robert C. Cornell, George N. Williamson, David L. Williams, John O. Heald, and James R. Adams.

President—William M. Evarts.
Vice Presidents—Samuel J. Tilden, Charles W. Sandford, James Emott, William Aitchell, and Charles Tracy.
Recording Secretary—Mason Young.
Corresponding Secretary—William Allen Butler.
Treasurer—Edward Mitchell.
Executive Committee—Edgar S. Van Winkle, Stephen P. Nash, James C. Carter, Joseph Larocque, and Julien T. Davies.
Committee on Admissions—Charles B. Moore, Silas S. Brownell, George W. Soren, Charles C. Beaman, Jr., S. Sidney Smith, Ernest G. Stedman, and Thomas H. Rodman, Jr.

The association then adjourned to meet on Tuesday evening next, for the purpose of considering the subject of the revision of the statutes.

SALE OF PAINTINGS.

Messrs. George Leavitt & Co. will sell to-night, (Wednesday,) at their art gallery, No. 817 Broadway, a lot of paintings selected from the valuable collection made from time to time by Mr. Charles M. Congreve, of Brooklyn. There are a hundred paintings in all, and about eighty of these are water colors. Among the few oil paintings worthy of special note, are three good specimens of Theodore Fréé. This popular painter of Oriental subjects is represented by two cabinet pieces—"Arabs at a Fountain," and "Tombs Near Cairo." His best work, however, is a charming and powerful drawing of an Arab in encampment at twilight. H. Waterman, a London artist, is represented by two large paintings. H. A. Harper, another London artist, is represented by two very fine specimens of his workmanship. These are "Wharfedale," a fine landscape, and "Kilchurn Castle." The Spanish and Italian schools are fairly represented. Indoni is great in landscape and picturesque figures, and a few very pretty pieces from his easel will be found worthy of special attention. Among the American artists are a few exceptionally fine works of art by W. T. Richards, who contributes a very quiet painting, in quiet but effective gray tone, of a scene on the coast of New-Jersey. The late Van Beest of this city is the painter of a remarkably careful study of the "Whalers" in black and white. Mr. J. C. Thom, of New-York, treats a very conventional picture, a "Winter Sunset," in a weird and highly characteristic manner. The two specimens of Still Life, by Amalie Kaercher, have been exhibited in the Association Gallery, and are familiar to connoisseurs. There are, besides those mentioned, a few other works of very high merit. The sale commences at 8 P. M.

FUNERAL OF SHINNECOCK INDIANS.

The funeral of the six Shinnecock Indians, drowned at the wreck of the Circassian, took place yesterday at the Indian Reservation on Long Island. The funeral was largely attended by the residents of Sag Harbor, Bridgehampton, and Southampton, by whom the dead men were held in high esteem. Thus far 22 bodies have been recovered from the wreck, four being washed ashore at Montauk Point on Monday. The bodies have not yet been recognized. An inquest will be held to-day.

THE STRANDED STEAM-SHIP.

L'AMERIQUE STILL IMBEDDED IN THE SAND—PREPARATIONS FOR REMOVING THE CARGO—FUNERAL OF THE DROWNED SAILORS.

The stranded steam-ship L'Amérique, which was driven ashore on the coast of New-Jersey, near Long Branch, on Sunday morning, was still in the same position yesterday. Monday night was very dark, and the wind veered around to the north, from which point it blew a light gale almost during the entire night, accompanied at intervals by snow. This had the effect of beating down the surf, which still thundered against the vessel's starboard side. The men attached to the life-saving station near by remained on the beach all night and kept up a blazing log fire, which brought out the ship in strong relief against the dark sky beyond. The incoming tide banked up the sand on both sides of her, and the strong current that swept up the beach washed it partially away from stem and stern. If L'Amérique was not so deeply imbedded in the sand this washing away from both ends might result in her being badly strained, but it is not thought that this will occur. The Coast Wrecking Company's men have laid one anchor from the stern to which is attached a great cable 22 inches in circumference, and weighing 2,000 pounds. This is "backed" by a second, somewhat smaller, to which is attached a second anchor. Six of these cables and anchors will be laid, stretching along the starboard side of the vessel. Power will then be applied by means of a steam windlass, and it is expected that the ship will be got afloat. This work will necessarily take some time, and no efforts can be made to get the ship off the beach until after her cargo is all taken out.

The agents of the company yesterday employed longshoremen to the vessel, and they were all day engaged in making preparations to discharge the cargo. The middle portion of L'Amérique was yesterday sunk in the sand to a depth of about 10 feet, while the ends were sunk between five and seven feet. Opinion is divided as to the possibility of getting her off the beach, and the men along the coast wonder how she got so high up. The work of removing the cargo, which is uninjured, will probably be commenced this morning. The funeral of the three sailors, Francis Domalain, Francis Bastard, and William Lebourbis, who were drowned on Sunday morning while endeavoring, with the aid of buoys, to reach the ship from the shore in a yawl boat, took place yesterday afternoon from Long Branch. The remains were inclosed in plain coffins, and were interred at Mechanicsville, N. J.

NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING AND ELECTION OF DIRECTORS—A BOARD OF OFFICERS CHOSEN.

The fifth annual meeting of the National Rifle Association was held at the First Division "Rendezvous" last evening, Major Gen. Shaler, the President, in the Chair. The latter, in delivering his annual address, referred to the past year as being the most important in the history of the Association, owing to its being the Centennial year of American independence. In the Centennial long-range rifle match, contested on Sept. 13 and 14, the American riflemen had measured lances with the representative riflemen of four other countries, and it was a peculiarly happy coincidence that the riflemen of this country, had been successful in a rifle-match contested just 100 years after the attainment of American Independence. The American Riflemen had commenced long-range rifle shooting on the same plan in which they had always begun a new enterprise—with a determination to succeed, and "to be first, or not at all." The General recommended the continuance of these matches as the most effective encouragement to rifle shooting. In reference to future administration he recommended that the range should be made self-sustaining, and that the charges for admission to, and the use of the range should be made as low as possible. Owing to the growth of the association, he said the position of Secretary was becoming exceedingly onerous, and it would not be many years before it would become necessary to employ a gentleman to fill that position at a salary which should provide adequate compensation to enable him to devote his entire time to the business of the association. He was gratified to be able to state that the property of the association was unincumbered, and that the organization was practically free from debt.

The Secretary next read his annual report, giving in detail the matches and meetings held during the past year. The Treasurer's report showed the receipts for the year to have been $22,613 04, including the balance on hand at the beginning of last year; expenditures, $21,946 24; leaving a balance on hand of $666 80. The assets of the association were shown to be $103,633 79; liabilities, $2,878 07. The vacancies in the Board of Directors were next filled by the election of the following gentlemen: Col. H. A. Gildersleeve, Capt. Joseph G. Story, Hon. N. P. Stanton, Col. George D. Scott, and Major Joseph Holland. The meeting then adjourned.

The new Board of Directors held a meeting immediately afterward, Gen. Shaler in the chair. The Board at once proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year, with the following result: President, Hon. N. P. Stanton; Vice-President, Col. George W. Wingate; Secretary, George S. Schermerhorn, Jr.; Treasurer, Major Daniel D. Wylie. Executive Committee, Major Gen. Alexander Shaler, Col. Henry A. Gildersleeve, and Major Gen. Thomas S. Dakin. A vote of thanks was passed to the retiring officers, and the meeting then adjourned.

THIRD DISTRICT REPUBLICANS.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED EULOGIZING THE RETIRING OFFICERS OF THE ASSOCIATION AND COMMENDING THE COURSE OF THE NEW-YORK TIMES.

At a meeting of the Third District Republican Association on Monday evening, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, As we are about to enter another year under the auspices of a new President and associate officers, it is fitting that we offer some tribute to the retiring ones; therefore be it

Resolved, That we heartily approve the action of our past officers for the upright, capable, and fearless manner in which they have discharged their respective duties. And be it further

Resolved, That we return our most heartfelt thanks to Mr. Thomas H. Geary, our late President, for the able, energetic, and gentlemanly manner in which he has fulfilled the position he has held for the past three years—one which has been ably and nobly filled, and which will meet with the hearty approval of all good and sound Republicans of this district. And be it further

Resolved, That we heartily indorse THE NEW-YORK TIMES as the only true and reliable Republican newspaper now published, and we recommend it to the favorable consideration of every reader throughout this district as fearless and independent.

THE THOMAS PERJURY CASE.

The trial of Ezra P. Thomas, an importer of millinery goods, charged with perjury in having sworn falsely to his losses by a fire on his premises on Sunday, Nov. 15, 1874, with intent to defraud the insurance companies, was resumed before Judge Gildersleeve yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Assistant District Attorney Rollins, who conducted the prosecution, examined Andreas W. Ketchum, an appraiser, who testified that Thomas' losses by the fire were estimated at a little over $11,000, while the accused claimed a loss of $23,000. Thomas' books, by which Mr. Rollins offered to prove that the accused had deliberately falsified his accounts in order to carry out his fraudulent intentions, were then produced and admitted as evidence. This closed the evidence for the prosecution, and a motion to acquit having been denied by Judge Gildersleeve, Mr. A. Oakey Hall, counsel for the prisoner, proceeded to sum up to the jury without offering any testimony. Mr. Hall argued that the accused had made a fair estimate of his stock on hand at the time of the fire from his books, which were his only guide. The difference in stock between the amount of loss claimed by the prisoner and that estimated by the appraisers had been utterly destroyed by the fire. Counsel contended that the evidence of the prosecution was flimsy in the extreme, and had failed to establish the grave charge which, if proved, would consign his client to an ignominious incarceration in the State Prison. Assistant District Attorney Rollins, in replying for the prosecution, alluded to the awful crime of perjury and its effects on the community. The defense had apparently treated the matter lightly, not condescending to explain away the damning evidences of guilt which had been produced. The District Attorney then went through the prisoner's books in detail, and pointed out to the jury the evident "cookery" which had been carried on. Judge Gildersleeve will charge the jury to-day.

AN EXPENSIVE ATTORNEY.

The case of William Muller against Otto Herken was brought before Judge McAdam in Marine Court, Chambers, yesterday, on an application by the plaintiff to have Sigismund Kaufmann substituted as his attorney in the place of A. P. Wagner. The latter, it appeared, on a judgment of $750 had collected and retained as fees $500, and insisted upon having $90 more. Muller, in an affidavit, stated that he had gone to Wagner asking for some of the money which had been collected. Muller told him he wanted to purchase shoes, clothing, &c. Wagner, he says, laughed, and said it was not "fashionable for lawyers nowadays to give their clients any money." In court yesterday, Wagner admitted keeping the money, but insisted that the court should protect his lien for the balance claimed. Judge McAdam granted the motion for the substitution of attorneys at once, deciding that the attorney had more than protected himself, and needed no protection from the court. It is now proposed to submit the case to the Supreme Court, General Term, on an application for the disbarring of Wagner.

SALE OF PLYMOUTH CHURCH PEWS.

LARGE FALLING OFF IN THE AMOUNT OF PREMIUMS PAID—LIST OF THE HIGHEST BIDS.

The annual auction sale of pews at Plymouth Church took place last night. The attendance of bidders was not so large as in former years, and the bidding was less spirited than usual. The premiums paid were unprecedentedly low. The first choice sold to H. B. Claflin for $600, and he selected Pew No. 89, which he has occupied for two years. Last year he paid $650 for the same pew. The second choice brought $525, against $625 last year. Moses S. Beach paid $375 for the same pew that Mr. George W. Sage paid $625 for last year. The first five bids brought the premiums down below $400, and the fifteenth, $300. The aggregate of the pew sales this year is $48,421 50. Last year it was $63,683; in 1875 it was $70,319 50; in 1874 it was $59,430; in 1873 it was $60,230; in 1872 it was $59,875.

Mr. Beecher called the audience to order promptly at 7 o'clock, and said: I have great pleasure in addressing the outs this evening, for since last Sunday there have been no persons in possession, and you are all out in the cold. Now, this is the evening in which you will all have an opportunity of getting in. I do not think it fair to disguise from you the impression which prevails that it is hard times with most of you; that is the rumor, and I more than half believe it is so; and it is not fair, under such circumstances, that there should be anything like the same endeavor to carry up the pew rents that have characterized some years that were more flush. With this we are all familiar, and expect that you will accommodate yourselves to the circumstances. If, therefore, the rentals of the evening should fall below the average of the two or three years past we shall not be disappointed, and no doubt in some respects we shall be gratified; that is to say, if it shall enable some persons to procure seats at a cost more nearly within their means than hitherto, that will be a gratification to me.

Following are the highest premiums paid:

A SUIT FOR SEPARATION.

The case of Sarah Perry against Edward C. Perry was brought before Judge Joseph F. Daly in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday, on a motion to strike out the greater portion of the defendant's answer. Judge Daly denied the motion. In her complaint the plaintiff alleges that she was married to the defendant on Nov. 23, 1869, and that she has always conducted herself toward her husband as a faithful and obedient wife should. The defendant, she alleges, abandoned her on Aug. 6, 1876, and refuses to provide for her and their children. She seeks a separation from bed and board, and asks for the custody of the children. The defendant, by way of answer, alleges that since the marriage he has always endeavored to support his wife and children properly, but that the plaintiff failed in her duties toward him and the children. She has been, he asserts, for a long time addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors in a way and to such an extent as to have caused their home to be broken up repeatedly and the family to be exposed to distress and danger. Her fits of intoxication, he says, for a series of years have been frequent, violent, and protracted, and by reason thereof his scanty means have been wasted by her, piece by one article after another of his furniture has disappeared. Her own clothes have been parted with, and needless debts have been incurred by her. By reason of the plaintiff's conduct, Mr. Perry alleges, the family have been driven from place to place, and he has not been able, at any time to feel any reasonable certainty from day to day as to what might happen to his family, nor how long they might be able to reside in any given place. He denies the charge of abandonment, and says he is now lying dangerously sick at his sister's house in Brooklyn, whither he was obliged to go in August last, owing to the plaintiff's continued intoxication and neglect. He says he is desirous of providing for his wife and children, and intends to try and do so as soon as his health is restored.

THE CHARGES AGAINST H. B. HERTS.

Mr. H. B. Herts, the auctioneer, appeared yesterday before Mr. John Hardy, the chief clerk of Mayor Ely, to answer the charges preferred against him by Capt. Walsh, of the Twenty-sixth Precinct, who alleged that Herts made false representations in relation to a sale of furs. The affidavit of Capt. Walsh having been read, counsel for Mr. Herts presented several others on behalf of his client, which contradicted the statements made by Capt. Walsh that the auction was a fraudulent one. An affidavit made by ex-Deputy Sheriff William Henry, corroborating the statement of Mr. Herts, was then presented, together with the affidavit made by Mr. Jaques H. Herts, who says that he was counsel in an action brought in the Marine Court, in which Gabriel A. Joseph was plaintiff and A. Morse defendant; that on June 10, 1876, he recovered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $485 41 and costs; that he issued execution to the Sheriff, and that on the 8th inst. he received a check for the amount of the judgment. This affidavit was accompanied by one of ex-Sheriff Conner, reciting that the execution had been issued to him and that the judgment had been satisfied. The Mayor will probably render a decision to-day or to-morrow.

TAMMANY ALDERMEN'S PATRONAGE.

The following appointments of assistant clerks, librarians, and messengers, under the new Common Council, were made yesterday by Capt. Toomey, the Chief Clerk of the Board of Aldermen:

	Salary.
William H. Moloney, First Assistant Clerk	$2,500
Patrick H. Maguire, Second Assistant Clerk	1,500
Joseph H. Purroy, Third Assistant Clerk	1,200
Andrew Hannemann, Fourth Assistant Clerk	1,200
Michael Clyne, Fifth Assistant Clerk	1,000
John Perry, Librarian	1,000
Richard McLoughlin, Assistant Librarian and Janitor of City Library	1,000
James Walsh, Sergeant at Arms	1,200
Michael J. Goodwin, Engrossing Clerk	1,000
Redmond Joyce, Engrossing Clerk	1,000
Luke Walsh, Messenger	1,000
Henry Schwab, Assistant Messenger	900
Thomas Fitzsimons, Door keeper	1,000
	$15,500
Add salary of Chief Clerk Toomey	5,000
Total	$20,500

The list is about the same as that of last year. Every Democratic Alderman was allowed to name a candidate and have him appointed.

BUSINESS EMBARRASSMENTS.

Robert W. Strachan, house-furnishing goods, of No. 355 Eighth avenue, assigned his property to Adolph Libko yesterday.

In the assignment of Daniel W. Terry, hats, of No. 240 Third avenue, to Henry Lippens, the liabilities are reported at $5,662 60 and the assets at $750.

The schedules were filed yesterday in the matter of the assignment of Joseph Schmitt to Ashbel P. Fitch. The liabilities are $64,344 65, of which $3,000 are secured. There are $5,867 33 of good and $18,854 04 of doubtful assets.

Case, Chapman & Lockwood, wholesale dealers in millinery goods at No. 543 Broadway, have been adjudicated voluntary bankrupts by Register Allen. The liabilities amount to $83,090 and the nominal assets are $35,000. The principal creditors are: Edwin J. Brown, $37,375; the Ninth National Bank, $6,263 71; Auffmordt & Co., $3,897 50; A. Picaut & Sons, $6,663; M. S. Chapman, $2,648; E. C. Cawdor & Co., $2,632 46; Ball & Bro., $2,362 81.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The New-York Horticultural Society held their annual dinner last night at Mouquin's.

The annual meeting of the St. George's Society, for the election of officers for the ensuing year, will take place this evening at Delmonico's.

A man, supposed to be Patrick Grimes, was found sick at No. 125 East Eleventh street last evening, and died soon after in the office of the Commissioners of Charities. His remains were taken to the Morgue for identification.

The Superintendents of the various street railroads in this City have been invited to confer with the Sanitary Superintendent in relation to the practice of covering the floors of the cars with straw, which is prohibited by the Sanitary Code.

It is said that Messrs. Guntzer, Cowing, and Reilly will be appointed as the Committee on Railroads of the Board of Aldermen, and that they will meet next Friday to consider Alderman Cole's resolution providing for heating the City railroad cars.

The trial of Sergt. Miller before the Police Commissioners was concluded yesterday. Several witnesses were examined for the defense in corroboration of testimony already before the board, and Inspector McDermott was recalled in rebuttal. The case was referred to the board for decision.

Frequent inquiries were made yesterday at the office of Messrs. C. L. Wright & Co., relative to the steam-ship Colombo, of the Wilson Line, bound from Hull to New-York, reported lost, being about a fortnight overdue. The company had nothing to communicate, having received no recent report from the ship.

The annual meeting of the United States Military Post Library Association was held last evening at the Bible House, the President, Gen. Lloyd Aspinwall, presiding. Gen. Lloyd Aspinwall was re-elected President; Robert Hoe, Chairman of the Executive Committee, and John R. Ketchum, Corresponding Secretary.

The documents in the case of Dr. J. K. C. Walker, of No. 88 Greenwich street, who was charged with giving a false certificate of death in the case of an infant named Irene Fitzgerald, were transmitted by the Board of Health yesterday to the Coroner's Office, it being out of the jurisdiction of the Health Department to investigate the cause of death.

Dirigo Lodge, No. 30, F. and A. M., on Monday evening elected the following officers: Max Moral, M.; William Mills, S. W.; Christopher Wilpkin, J. W.; Aaron Cohn, Treasurer; Michael E. Goodhart, Secretary; J. Judell, S. D.; Joseph Groaner, J. D.; A. Newburger, Chaplain; H. Heitz, Marshal; C. Janzen and D. Benoliel, S. and J. M. of C.; F. Kipp, Organist; H. S. Jennings, Raphael Prince, and Charles Foster, Trustees; Isidore Pinksohn, Tiler.

The annual meeting of the New-York Cheap Transportation Association was held yesterday, when the following officers were elected: President, E. P. Baker; Secretary, F. B. Thurber; Treasurer, E. R. Durkee; First Vice President, Col. F. A. Conking; Second Vice President, John F. Henry; Third Vice President, Jeremiah P. Robinson. The Treasurer reported that the expenditures during the past year had been $7,863, and the receipts $6,805, leaving, with the balance in the Treasury, a balance on hand of $1,125.

Timothy Reagan, aged 31, residing at No. 215 West Houston street, went into the drug store of John R. Keating, No. 68 Downing street, yesterday, and asked for half an ounce of laudanum, stating that he wanted to apply the narcotic as a lotion to a sore finger. Keating, suspecting that he wished to commit suicide, gave him arnica instead. Reagan went home and swallowed the arnica, and then told his mother that he had poisoned himself. A policeman was called and the would-be suicide was taken to the Charles Street Police Station.

BROOKLYN.

Daniel Ferry was sworn in as Justice of the First District Court, ad interim, in the City Clerk's office, yesterday.

The East Reform Church, corner of Madison and Bedford streets, was sold by auction yesterday under a second mortgage foreclosure suit. The property brought $50. The mortgages amount to about $72,000.

THE LOUISIANA SITUATION.

GOV. KELLOGG ELECTED SENATOR.

ONE BALLOT FOR CANDIDATES FOR THE SHORT TERM—QUIET IN NEW-ORLEANS—THE WHITE LEAGUE REVOLUTIONISTS SOMEWHAT TAMER—NICHOLLS CONCEDED TO HAVE MADE A BLUNDER IN HIS LAWLESS HOT-HASTE—AN INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE FOR THE DEMOCRATIC INVESTIGATOR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 10.—Comparative quiet reigns in our city to-day. The revolutionists are still in possession of the Police-stations, of the Supreme Court room, and of a few arms and two pieces of artillery, forcibly taken from the State Arsenal. They failed to follow up their first victory, and did not attack the State-house, as was expected. It having been reported that no such attack would be made to-day, the members of the Legislature assembled as usual. A quorum was found in joint session, and the Assembly proceeded to vote for United States Senator.

The ballot for the long term was declared first in order. Ex-Gov. William Pitt Kellogg was nominated and elected United States Senator, without opposition, receiving 83 votes. Ex-Gov. Warmoth, a member of the House, having himself Senatorial aspirations, voted for Kellogg, and in explaining his vote said the validity of our State Government might be in question, and he wished Mr. Kellogg to go to Washington with all the support that could be given him here.

Balloting for the short term resulted in no election to-day, and will be continued to-morrow. Lieut. Gov. C. C. Antoine received 22 votes and P. B. S. Pinchback received 26 votes. Other candidates received small numbers of votes. It is believed Pinchback has polled his full strength, and that if a colored Senator is to be elected that Antoine will be the man.

The seceding Democrats were in session at Odd-fellows' Hall to-day. They voted for a United States Senator, but failed to get a majority for any one man.

Mr. Nicholls has made a few appointments, and keeps up a show of being Governor. He has demonstrated that people enough can be collected in a great city to overthrow and subvert the Police authorities, as did Mr. McEnery, in a similar White League uprising in 1874, and he has shown that he could forcibly take possession of the Supreme Court room and keep out the Judges. He has attempted things which he could not lawfully do were he Governor—that is, by removing officers of the Police without trial, and by appointing Judges of the Supreme Court where no vacancies existed. It is believed his indecent haste to take possession of the State Government, and the forcible means he employed, without first exhausting all peaceful methods, will injure the prospects of his party.

The Congressional investigating committees are still at work getting at the bottom facts. The House committee, in the past, has spent much time in trying to prove that there were no armed organizations in Louisiana. Within two days the Democratic members of the committee have seen 5,000 armed White Leaguers appear on the streets of New-Orleans at daylight, and march past the committee-rooms on the way to push a Supreme Court from the Bench, and to overthrow a State Government; and yet the Democrats tell us there can be no intimidation, and Watterson says the Crescent City is as quiet as a nursery.

WHITE LEAGUE EXUBERANCE CHECKED.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 10.—At 9:30 A. M. the city was perfectly quiet, and, with the exception of a few armed squads patrolling the streets and wearing the white ribbon badges of the Nicholls "police," there was nothing to recall the events of yesterday. Not a single case of violence or disorder occurred during the night, as far as is known. Both sides were exceedingly reticent in regard to their intentions, and nothing is known of them outside the circle of their trusted friends.

On visiting the State-house this morning a line of White Leaguers was found on the south side of St. Louis street, and on the opposite side a line of the Metropolitan Police. The former permitted representatives of the press to pass, but the latter halted them until word from Gov. Packard was received to pass them inside the building. The Metropolitans looked as if they had been on duty all night without sleep, and the members of the Legislature presented a similar appearance. Gov. Packard, who had just returned from breakfast, looked as cool and collected as on yesterday. He stated that there was no change in the situation since last evening beyond the fact that the House would have a quorum to-day, which was prevented yesterday by the foars of the members. The Senate still lacked one to complete a quorum. Ex-Gov. Kellogg, United States Marshal Pitkin, and others were present, engaged in earnest conversation. All were very reticent, and declined to give any information as to their intentions.

The Republican this morning says: "At about 10 o'clock last evening, Marshal Pitkin informed Gen. Augur that his deputies had been refused admission to the State-house. Gen. Augur immediately communicated with Mr. Nicholls, and stated through a staff officer that this must be stopped. Mr. Nicholls said it was not by his order, and directions were then given that there should be no restrictions placed upon any persons entering or leaving the State-house or vicinity. Nicholls' Police patrolled the streets last night, but made few or no arrests. At midnight but few men were on the streets, and most places of business were closed. A train of cars from Mobile brought in several companies of United States troops at 11 o'clock last night."

In its leading editorial on the affairs of yesterday, the Republican also says: "As we have at present no Government in this State whose authority is undisputed, and as there are two or three Congressional committees trying to find out the truth about the late election, perhaps the President may deem it his duty to establish martial law till such time, if ever, as Congress shall come to some conclusion and agreement in the premises. Such a step would at least give to the business community a season of peace such as they understand it, instead of sounds of war alarms, and the tramp of armed men that all day yesterday resounded through the streets of the city. Though we are tolerably well-seasoned to popular commotions here, there is a decided preference on the part of the majority of the people for a government of any kind strong enough to maintain itself over the uncertainties necessarily incident to two armed hostile forces in the same camp."

At 11 A. M. no armed men were to be seen on the streets, and it was said they have all disbanded. Gen. Augur stated that he anticipated no further trouble. He has notified both Nicholls and Packard that he would only interfere to keep the peace, and that when it was reported to him last night that Nicholls' Police were preventing Government officials from visiting the State-house, he promptly notified Nicholls that he could not allow that, and Nicholls replied that it was done without his knowledge.

At 12:30 P. M. the Legislature was in session with a quorum present. A crowd of several hundred people were congregated in the streets around the State-house, but were very quiet.

The Picayune, in an extra published at 2 P. M., says: "Alfred Bourges, the newly-appointed Sheriff for the Supreme Court, made a demand for possession of the Court-room this morning, and was refused. It is expected that a squad of Police will be sent there to take it."

The Republican Senators, of the Senate Investigating Committee, were in conference with the Republican chiefs at the State-house, this morning. It was rumored that the conference had reference to the existing state of affairs, and that they would join in a telegram to President Grant for recognition.

There is much discussion here over the legal aspect of yesterday's proceedings. The Democrats allege that Chief Justice Ludeling, who was appointed by Gov. Kellogg a few days since, could not hold over, while the Republicans claim that the Chief Justice had authority to remove the Sheriff before he took possession of the Supreme Court-room.

In the House Mr. Warmoth made a motion, which was carried, that the speaker instruct the Sergeant at Arms to see that the members had free ingress to and egress from the State-house.

Mr. Warmoth also introduced a resolution which recites that the peace and good order of the State is threatened by the present condition of affairs, and that it is the duty of all, especially those claiming authority, to provide means to secure good government and quiet to the State. Therefore, be it

Resolved, &c., That a joint committee be appointed, five by the Speaker and three by the President of the Senate, which shall be empowered to confer with a similar committee appointed by the members of the Legislature who recognize Nicholls as Governor, to devise and report as soon as practicable measures to secure a lawful and peaceable settlement of the pending political contest relative to the government of the State. The resolution went over under the rule.

To-day an injunction was sent out of the Fifth District Court by Ogden enjoining Alfred Shaw from acting as Judge of the Superior Court, lately created by the Republican Legislature.

The Nicholls "Government" has organized a regiment of field artillery, with John Glynn, Jr. as Colonel, and a full staff. Nicholls to-day made numerous appointments of parochial officers. Three Napoleons and two Gatling guns, lately taken from the Washington Artillery by Gov. Kellogg, were taken from the State Arsenal to day by Nicholls, and drawn through the street by bodies of men to the Washington Artillery armory.

The Democrats assert that the Republican Legislature was without a quorum to-day, as the absence of Senators Hamlet, Weber, Wheeler, and Demas left the Senate with one less than a quorum. The Republicans say that while there was no quorum of the Senate, the joint session had 84 members, whereas 79 constituted a quorum. They also say the death of Senator Meredith has left the Democratic Senate without a quorum of the members claimed by that body.

The authorities at the State-house claim to have authentic information, which they say will be published in detail in the Republican to-morrow, of bribes offered to members of the State-house Legislature to join the Nicholls' Legislature. They believe that these bribes have been accepted in some cases. P. J. Kennedy, an ex-Levee contractor under Gov. Warmoth, and a member of the State-house Legislature, is indicated by some as the agent employed.

POSITION OF THE GOVERNMENT.

PROBABLE EARLY RECOGNITION OF THE LAWFUL GOVERNMENT BY THE PRESIDENT—HOPES OF THE DEMOCRATS OF OBVIATING THE NECESSITY FOR INTERVENTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—There is very little doubt entertained that the President must, as soon as he receives the formal requisition from the Louisiana Legislature, decide to recognize Mr. Packard as Governor. The facts will first, of course, be carefully examined, and Judge Taft will be very careful that any action taken shall square with the law. The Democrats anticipate such a recognition, and have hoped that by some arrangement among the local politicians they would be able to prevent any Federal interference between the rival Governments.

THE MOB ABOUT THE STATE-HOUSE IN NEW-ORLEANS ORDERED OFF BY THE UNITED STATES OFFICERS—THE QUESTION OF RECOGNITION STILL PENDING.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Secretary of War and the President were in consultation about noon to-day upon the subject of telegraphic information received here officially from New-Orleans through military and other sources, and it was decided to send a telegram to the military commander at that post, giving the exact position of the General Government in the matter. Accordingly, the following was telegraphed from this city:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Jan. 10.

Gen. C. C. Augur, New-Orleans, La.:

It is reported that the State-house in New-Orleans is surrounded by a mob. If this is so, notify all persons to disperse, and compel compliance with your order. It is the determination of the President to see that the Legislature is not molested. When he has full knowledge of all the facts in the premises he will decide which should be recognized.

J. D. CAMERON, Secretary of War.

HEAD-QUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, La., Jan. 9, 1877.

(Received at Washington 4:20 P. M.)

To Hon. J. D. Cameron, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

The armed bodies are the new Police and armed posse acting under orders of the Nicholls Government. They have substantially possession of the city except the State-house. The Arsenal and Supreme Court are reported to have surrendered to them. I have declined to interfere on either side until there is a violent breach of the peace. My orders simply authorize me to prevent violence and bloodshed; none has, as yet, occurred. Will communicate your dispatch to Mr. Nicholls.

C. C. AUGUR, Brigadier General Commanding.

HEAD-QUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 9.

[Received at Washington 5:06 P. M.]

To Hon. J. D. Cameron, Secretary of War, Washington:

Have just received assurances from Gen Nicholls that the armed forces under his orders will be disbanded at once, and that he had given strict orders that no disturbances should occur. State-house not disturbed.

C. C. AUGUR, Brigadier General Commanding.

The subjects before the Cabinet, yesterday, that were referred to the Attorney General, referring to a decision as to which is the legal Legislature in Louisiana, are still before the Department of Justice. It is believed that the President will be advised by Judge Taft, within a very short time, but that he will not act in the premises until action by the entire Cabinet is had on the subject. The Attorney General has been very reticent thus far upon the tenor of any advice officially given to him, or as to the impressions which govern him in his consideration of the matter. The greatest interest is felt in all quarters here, and nowhere is it greater than among officers of the Army for the preservation of peace in New-Orleans. At the War Department the impression is positive that the military authorities are fully able to carry out the orders of the Government, and fully sustain the position of the President.

Representatives Gibson, Ellis, and Levy, Democrats, of the Louisiana delegation, called on the President to-day to ascertain whether any interference was contemplated by him looking to a recognition of the rival Governments in that State. The Secretary of War and the Attorney General were present at the interview. The substance of the President's reply was to the effect that he would not, in the absence of all the facts before him, issue any order recognizing either Government or any of their respective departments. The President attached no importance to the fact that one Legislature occupied the Capitol and the other St. Patrick's Hall, and he assured the delegation that the troops would be employed only for the purpose of suppressing violence, preserving the public peace, and preventing collisions. The delegation express themselves perfectly satisfied with the interview.

CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATIONS.

VIEWS OF A DEMOCRATIC MEMBER OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE—INTIMIDATION AND MURDER FOR POLITICAL REASONS CLEARLY SHOWN—THE ACTION OF THE RETURNING BOARD WARRANTED BY THE TESTIMONY AND THE LAW.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Mr. Crapo, of the House, committed to investigate the Louisiana election, has just returned from the field of the committee's labor, and was in his seat to-day. Hardly was his return generally known before the rumor was circulated that he had come back convinced of the fair and honest election of the Democratic ticket in Louisiana, and would join with his Democratic associates in a report to that effect. This rumor Mr. Crapo emphatically contradicts. On the contrary, it may be said that if he should render judgment upon his present information he would decide unhesitatingly in favor of the Republican ticket. During the greater part of the time spent by committee in the State, Mr. Crapo has served on the sub-committee, the other members of which were McMahon and Ross, specially charged with the investigation of Ouachita Parish and its vicinity. For a week, however, he sat with the full committee in New-Orleans, examining the action of the Returning Board, and upon the question of the fairness and honesty of that action his opinion will be received with great interest. On this point Mr. Crapo expresses his belief that the testimony adduced before the board was sufficient, if believed, to justify their finding. He adds that much testimony has been taken by the Congressional committees which was not produced before the Returning Board, and which, in his opinion, renders it doubtful whether certain polls excluded by the Returning Board ought to have been thrown out. These polls, however, if counted, would not change the result, the number of votes being small.

The failure of the board to fill the vacancy, which the law directs should be filled by a Democrat, he regards as very unfortunate for the Republican side, and it is quite plain that he does not consider the explanation of that failure to be satisfactory. As to the result of the investigation by the sub-committee in Ouachita Parish, Mr. Crapo entertains no doubt that the Republican vote was materially reduced by intimidation. By the murder of Dr. Dinkgrave, on the 31st of August, the Republicans of Ouachita, nearly all of them negroes, were deprived of their chief leader and organizer, and although the Democrats endeavored to show that the murder was the sequel to a fatal quarrel which took place six or seven years ago, yet the negroes throughout the parish regarded it as the beginning of a war upon them, and the effect was precisely what it would have been had Dinkgrave been killed for the avowed purpose of intimidation. He thinks there is some reason to distrust the story of Eliza Pinkston, though it was firmly believed by Capt. Hale, the army officer commanding at Monroe, and by the officials at New-Orleans. The record of murders and assaults, however, is such as to leave no doubt of the fact of atrocious violence toward the blacks. Mr. Crapo has a list of seven murders and thirteen assaults, all of them upon black Republicans, according to the testimony before the sub-committee in Ouachita.

The national issue, Mr. Crapo observed, seems to be secondary with the Louisiana people, the main struggle being over the State Government. The white people bitterly hate Kellogg, Packard, and their associates, and do not care so much to elect Tilden as to overthrow the detested local Government. This intense dislike of the local Government is not, he thinks, altogether without good reason. They earnestly desire Tilden's success, however, believing that it would put an end to the Republican State Government.

THE REVOLT ENGINEERED FROM WASHINGTON BY DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Representatives Ellis, Levy, and Gibson, of Louisiana, after their interview with the President to-day, telegraphed as follows:

To Francis T. Nicholls, Governor of Louisiana:

We have seen the President, Taft, and Cameron together here. We are assured the Federal Government will not now interfere or recognize Packard's Government, or any of its departments. Cameron telegraphs Augur to disperse any mob threatening the State-house. The President will not recognize either government. Both stand as before him, and regards the occupation of the State-house by one in the same light as the occupation of the Court-house by the other government, and will keep hands off unless a collision occurs. We advise no attack on State-house; maintenance of present position, and delay in the election of a long term Senator.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMITTEES.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 10.—The Senate Committee to-day resumed its examination into the East Feliciana election. Six colored men testified that they were intimidated, and were forced through fear to vote the Democratic ticket. Supervisor Anderson testified to the general intimidation of colored voters, and detailed an attempt to assassinate him. He said his protest to the returns was made in New-Orleans because he dared not make it there.

The Senate Sub-committee continued the examination into the election at East Baton Rouge to-day. The witnesses examined to-day were for the Democrats.

United States Supervisor Guy Samuels testified that he heard nothing of bull-dozing for seven or eight months previous to the election; he said that he belonged to a Democratic club which had 70 or 80 colored members.

A. T. Young, Granville Pierce, Paul Daigre, and G. Casinat, the two last-named colored, testified to a peaceful election and no intimidation, while Lewis Morgan, colored, testified to general intimidation, interruption of Republican meetings, and that he had been shot at several times.

The principal witness examined by the House Committee to-day was W. L. Catlin, of New-Orleans, Chief Clerk of the Republican Committee on Registration, the substance of whose testimony was that he brought to the registration was correct and according to law. He got a copy of the registration from the State-house and sent out 29,000 sewing-machine circulars. He did not know whether any Republicans were stricken off, but believed 15,000 illegal votes were polled at the last election. He thought most of those registered fraudulently were Democrats. He had seen repeating, some voting four times.

William R. Williams, colored, testified: Was a Deputy United States Marshal at poll No. 5, Ninth Ward, New-Orleans; on the evening of the election Alfred Bourges, Republican candidate for Sheriff, asked him how the election was going, and on his replying "Democratic," Bourges told him he [witness] must enter a protest to the vote of that poll, as it would help the ward, but witness declined to do so, as the election was fair.

The House sub-committee heard the testimony of several witnesses to the effect that the election in the Parish of St. Landry was devoid of intimidation.

Several witnesses from Plaquemine Parish testified that they had heard of the intimidation of colored Republicans, but did not personally know of any.

Mr. Milan, (colored,) a candidate for the Legislature, admitted that he had told negroes in his speeches that if they voted the Democratic ticket they would be re-enslaved.

A number of witnesses from the Parishes of Lafourche, Iberia, and Franklin also testified to a peaceable election.

Mr. Handy Madeley, (colored,) testified that because he refused to preach political sermons his speeches that if they voted the Democratic ticket they would be re-enslaved.

At the evening session of the House committee John Butler and J. C. Wise, of Rapides Parish, testified to the bad character of J. Madison Wells, and that he would not be believed on oath in the parish on any question in which he was concerned.

E. B. Wyble, a lawyer of New-Orleans, testified to the conservative tone of Nicholls' canvass, and said that the colored people were dissatisfied with the State Government for not having schools.

PRESIDENT ORTON ARRESTED.

HE IS OFFICIALLY NOTIFIED OF BEING IN CONTEMPT OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—HIS DEPARTURE FOR WASHINGTON TO-DAY.

Yesterday afternoon, while Mr. Orton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, was in his office, he was visited by a Deputy Sergeant at Arms who, on being shown into Mr. Orton's presence, produced a writ, which he proceeded to read. It was an official notification of his being in contempt of the House of Representatives, and after having read it the deputy formally placed Mr. Orton under arrest. Mr. Orton ordered a copy of the writ to be made, which was sent to his counsel, after which he said that he would accompany the Deputy Sergeant at Arms to Washington this morning by the Limited Express train. Mr. Orton declined to converse about the subject of his arrest or the cause of it, saying he could not with propriety say what he would do before he had appeared before the bar of the House.

THE VICE PRESIDENT-ELECT.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 10.—Hon. William A. Wheeler arrived here to-day, and met Gov. Hayes at dinner this evening.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

EARLY ACTION BY THE SENATE ON THE SOUTH CAROLINA, FLORIDA, AND LOUISIANA ELECTIONS—THE COMMITTEE ON THE POWERS OF THE HOUSE—A PROPOSITION FROM THE SENATE COMMITTEE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Senator Morton will to-morrow, or very soon, offer a resolution in the Senate declaring that the States of Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina having voted for President and Vice President, and the result having been determined and declared through the properly constituted authorities of those States, there is no power in the State courts, nor in Congress, nor in any other tribunal whatever to reverse or change the result as thus determined. The language of the resolution is not quoted, but the substance will be nearly as above.

There is some talk of increasing the number of the committee of the House appointed to take into consideration, specially, the constitutional prerogatives of that body. The committee now consists of four Democrats and three Republicans, and they cannot agree upon any proposition. Moreover, the Democrats are said to be afraid of one of their own men. The proposition which the committee was intended to report is that the House has the right and power to reject the Electoral vote of a State without the concurrence of the Senate. When it appears, as is predicted it will, that this proposal cannot be reported from the present committee, it will be found that there are arduous labors to perform and that more members are needed for work; and when the additional appointments are made there will be no longer room left for doubt as to the steadfastness of a Democratic majority.

The Senate Committee on the Electoral Vote has agreed upon a proposition, and embodied it in the form of a bill, which has been sent to the committee of the House on the same subject. The only point of the Senate bill which can be certainly stated is that when there is only one Electoral vote returned from a State and objection is made to counting it, the concurrence of both Houses of Congress shall be necessary to sustain the objection and reject the vote. The question of dispute in the committee would seem to be as to what shall be done in case there are two returns from a State, and, in that case, which shall be counted. The position has been taken by some Senators that the concurrent action of both houses should be necessary to determine which should be counted. According to such a provision, if the House should vote to count one return and the Senate should vote to count the other, neither return could be counted. It would be absurd to enact a statute which should enable any party to defeat an election by the people, by simply placing a bogus set of returns in the hands of the Vice President, as, for example, has been done from Florida, South Carolina, and Louisiana. What the Senate proposes to do in the case of two returns is very closely guarded and kept a secret. It is probable that the details of the Morton bill of last session have been in the main adopted by the committee.

The House Committee on Counting the Electoral Votes did not receive the proposition of the Senate to-day, the Senate not having been able to have their action engrossed in time. The House committee met to-night, and were in session until near midnight. Several propositions were discussed, but nothing was determined. The committee will meet again at 1 o'clock to-morrow, when the action of the Senate committee will be presented, together with the Senate committee's invitation for a joint conference.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.

NO NEW DEVELOPMENTS—GEN. LOGAN'S CHANCES—MR. WASHBURNE'S OVER-ZEALOUS FRIENDS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 10.—No new developments in the Senatorial contest were made to-day. The Democratic Conference Committee have opened negotiations with the Independents, but it is not probable that they will unite upon any one for several days, and it would not be astonishing if they never united. Gen. Logan's position is unchanged, except that the four bolters are weakening under the strong pressure brought to bear upon them by their constituents. Gen. Logan will probably have the Republican strength of 100 votes solid, requiring only three more to elect him. By organizing the bolt, Mr. Washburne's friends have destroyed whatever chances he had. It is believed that Judge David Davids will not consent to run.

MASSACHUSETTS SENATORSHIP.

PRESIDENT SEELYE WILL ACCEPT UNDER CERTAIN CONDITIONS—HIS OPPONENTS—MR. BOUTWELL'S CHANCES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 10.—The friends of President Seelye, of Amherst College, who favor his election to the United States Senate, claim to have direct authority from him that he will accept the Senatorship if it comes to him spontaneously, but that he positively refuses to take any part in the canvass in his behalf. This will give confidence to his friends to work for him, but it is very doubtful whether the different elements can unite strongly enough to carry the election. He has decided opponents both among the Hoar men and the Democrats, the latter not liking him on party grounds. The Custom-house is not as pronounced for Boutwell as has been thought, and it is possible that his support there will fall him after the first few ballots.

THE NEW-JERSEY SPEAKERSHIP.

FRUITLESS EFFORTS TO ORGANIZE THE LOWER HOUSE YESTERDAY—WHY THE DEMOCRATS DID NOT ATTEND TUESDAY'S MEETING—THREE BALLOTS FOR SPEAKER TAKEN—A TIE VOTE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1877.

Up to 4 o'clock this afternoon the efforts to organize the lower house of the Legislature have proved abortive. The houses met at 10 o'clock, the usual hour. Business was confined in the Senate to the reception of four bills, and then an adjournment was taken to 3 o'clock, and then again to 8 o'clock in the evening. One of the bills introduced makes it usury to demand more than 6 per cent. interest on loans. Another authorizes the alteration of the Soldiers' Children's Home in Trenton for use as a deaf and dumb asylum, at an expenditure not to exceed $5,000; a third is for the purchase by the City of Paterson of water works, and the fourth is a local bill of no special interest. The members of the House assembled at 10 o'clock, all being in their seats. They were sworn in by Mr. Foster, Clerk of the last House. Mr. Bergen, to guard against surprise by either party, moved that 31 votes shall be required to elect the officers. Mr. Griggs moved to lay the motion on the table, but was defeated by a vote of 37 to 23, seven Republicans voting with the Democrats against it. Mr. Griggs then withdrew his opposition, and the motion was unanimously agreed to. Mr. Bergen's motion, made immediately afterward, that the House proceed to organize, was adopted without any show of opposition. Hon. Alden G. Scovel was nominated on the Republican side by Mr. Drake, of Essex, and on behalf of the Democrats, Mr. Bergen nominated Rudolph F. Rabe. The two ballots taken showed a tie for the candidates, and the House adjourned till 3 o'clock. Just before the time for the reassembling of the body, the Republicans went into caucus. It had been understood at noon that an organization would be effected at 3 o'clock, the basis being that the Democrats should have the Speakership and the Republicans the Clerkship. Consequently, when, after the caucus had risen, it became rumored that the Republicans had agreed to take the Clerkship, and Reading Clerkship, and Engrossing Clerkship, and Sergeant at Arms in exchange for the Speakership, the Assistant Sergeants at Arms and the Journal Clerk, it was readily believed. The House, had, however, scarcely been called to order before Mr. Howell, Republican, of Essex, moved a further adjournment till 8 o'clock in the evening. The Democrats and seven Republicans, as in the morning, voted together, and carried the motion. Mr. Howell is one of those who have been counted on all along by the Democrats as willing to bolt the Republican caucus, if necessary, to consummate the combination by which Mr. Rabe expects to reach the Speaker's chair.

The caucus of the Republicans sat till after 6 o'clock. Considerable discussion brought out the fact that a number of members of the caucus are in favor of organizing upon some basis or other. The Conference Committee have heretofore been directed to demand the Speakership from the Republicans. It is stated to-night that the caucus directed the Conference Committee to use their own judgment in the matter. This cannot be regarded as a recedure from the demand for the Speakership. The Republican committee will probably offer no compromise which does not place their candidate in the chair of the presiding officer. The committee can take no final action without first responding to the caucus, where the party demanding the Speakership is in a large majority.

The House met at 8 o'clock this evening. Immediately after the roll-call Mr. Lund moved an adjournment till Monday evening. The Democrats opposed it, and five Republicans voted with them. Three ballots were taken, resulting in 39 votes for Rabe and 30 for Scovel. A motion to adjourn till to-morrow morning was carried by a unanimous vote. Both sides are sanguine of their reaching a compromise and an organization.

There was much speculation last night both among Republicans and Democrats, as to the reason why the 30 Democrats had not attended the meeting yesterday morning. It was at first thought to indicate a design on their part to prevent an organization. The Democrats explained, however, that their caucus lasted longer than they had expected to sit, and that the desire to finish their caucus work before going into the meeting alone prevented their attendance. The Democrats themselves are much more interested in the causes which kept them away than the Republicans have been. It seems that Mr. Mackey, of Warren, one of their number, absented himself from the caucus, and that his absence was part of the reason why they did not put in an appearance at the meeting yesterday afternoon. Mr. Mackey says that he waited at the foot of the stairs, expecting them down from the Supreme Court Chamber where they caucused, to attend in the Assembly Chamber to organize. His absence was the subject of much comment among Democrats last night.

THE NEW-HAMPSHIRE REPUBLICANS

PROCEEDINGS OF THE STATE CONVENTION—NOMINATION OF BENJAMIN F. PRESCOTT FOR GOVERNOR AND GRANVILLE P. CONN FOR RAILROAD COMMISSIONER—THE RESOLUTIONS—EMPHATIC INDORSEMENT OF ACTS AND POSITION OF THE PARTY—RENOMINATION OF MR. BLAIR FOR CONGRESS.

CONCORD, Jan. 10.—The Republican State Convention was called to order in White's Opera-house at 11:30 A. M., by Hon. Daniel Hall, of Dover, and the following officers of the Convention were elected: President, Hon. Austin F. Pike, of Franklin, and one Vice President from each county; Secretaries, J. H. Kent, of Portsmouth; G. W. Fox, and O. C. Hatch. Committees on Resolutions and on Credentials were appointed.

Mr. Pike took the chair and addressed the Convention. After expressing his thanks for the honor conferred upon him, Mr. Pike remarked that at no time had it been more important that the action of the Convention should be wise and patriotic for the results of the coming election. The first one following the Presidential election would be watched with keenest interest, as indicating the current of popular opinion on the issues involved in the national contest, and as showing their verdict upon a sober second thought. The speaker made a brief comparison of the platforms of the two parties for the past twenty years, and then discussed the questions involved in the difficulties surrounding the solution of the Presidential contest, claiming that no trick, no fraud, no illegal proceedure should be a stepping-stone to the President's Republic; and while all Republicans would regret to see a graduate of Tammany inaugurated as President, it had better a thousand times be, than that the right and law should be disregarded. He argued that the settlement of the all-important question was vested in the President of the Senate and House of Representatives, and expressed the hope that whatever the result might be, if violence was attempted, an outraged people would not again permit traitors to go unhung. The address closed with a brief discussion of the alleged outrages at the South.

At the conclusion of Mr. Pike's speech, on motion of Mr. Jesse Mann, the convention proceeded to ballot for candidates for Governor, Messrs. Dow, of Exeter; Varney, of Dover; Quint, of Manchester; Tenny, of Claremont, and Cox, of Enfield, were appointed tellers.

SECOND BALLOT.

Whole number of votes, 646. Necessary to a choice, 324:

Prescott	351	Farr	48
Wallingford	51	Scattering	30
Head	166

Benjamin F. Prescott was declared to be elected, and the nomination was made unanimous.

Mr. Granville P. Conn, of Concord, was then nominated Railroad Commissioner.

Mr. Prescott delivered a short speech thanking the convention for his nomination.

The resolutions which were adopted declare:

First.—The first and paramount allegiance of citizens is to the Constitution and Government of the United States.

Second.—That the United States Government is in turn bound to maintain and protect each and every citizen in the full, free, and open exercise of every right and privilege appertaining to citizenship.

Third.—That we view with alarm and indignation the attempt by the Democratic Party of the South, unrebuked and unchecked by its Northern wing, to rob the freedmen of their franchise by intimidation, violence, and murder.

Fourth.—We condemn, as disloyal and inhuman, and fraught with the utmost peril to our institutions, the conduct of the late Presidential canvass by the Democrats of the South, in that they undertook, by processes that shame our civilization, to nullify indirectly the Constitutional amendments adopted to conserve the fruits of the victory over the rebellion, and to overturn the large majority against them in several of the Southern States.

Fifth.—We also condemn the attitude of the Democratic leaders, especially of the North, since the Presidential election, in striving to secure by illegal and violent means an advantage which does not belong to them, and by such methods to count in Samuel J. Tilden as President of the United States. The incendiary appeal and rebellious threats of Northern Democratic orators and newspapers are such as to put to shame any declarations that have thus far emanated from Southern sources, and are deserving of the severest censure and condemnation.

Sixth.—We tender our earnest sympathy and pledge our undivided support to the Republican members of Congress and to the National authorities in their endeavors to conserve peace, maintain the laws, and preserve the precedents so essential to the safety and perpetuity of republican government.

Seventh.—In Rutherford B. Hayes we have a man who is fully identified with the great principles of the Republican Party and imbued with a proper appreciation of its past services, who is fitted by ability and experience in public affairs for the responsibilities of the high office of President of the United States, and whose name and career are guarantees of an administration of the Government in the interests of all the people upon principles of honest economy, intelligence, and fidelity to public trusts.

Eighth.—It is a matter of especial congratulation that in this trying hour of the nation's experience we have in the Presidential chair the great chieftain and distinguished civilian, Ulysses S. Grant; invincible upon the field of battle, he has proved himself equally courageous and wise in administering the affairs of the Government, and upon his patriotism, honesty, and courage the hearts of the loyal people of the land rely now as ever with unabanging faith and confidence.

Ninth.—We welcome all evidences of a disposition on the part of those lately in arms against the Government to accept in good faith and entirety the reconstruction policy of the nation, and we pledge to all such our sympathy and aid in their efforts at building up the waste places of their section, cementing anew the bonds of union, harmony, and brotherhood.

Tenth.—Inasmuch as a stable currency is an essential factor in the prosperity of any Government, we reiterate our conviction that the nation's pecuniary obligations should be paid in coin, and that the resumption of specie payments in 1879 ought to be redeemed.

The remaining resolutions refer to local issues.

After appointing a State Central Committee the Convention adjourned.

Hon. Henry W. Blair, of Plymouth, has been unanimously renominated to Congress by the Republicans of the Third Congressional District.

THE STATE CANALS.

MEETING OF THE STATE CONVENTION OF BOATMEN—THE SUBJECT OF MOTIVE POWER UNDER DISCUSSION—VARIOUS PLANS PROPOSED.

SYRACUSE, Jan. 10.—The State Convention of the forwarders, boatmen, and others interested in the canals of the State, reassembled in the Syracuse House to-day, President Fisher of Rochester, in the chair. The following State Central Committee was appointed: Lewis Castle, of Buffalo; Christopher Schwinger, of Tonowanda; Hiram Benedict, of Lockport; P. J. Myers, of Rochester; B. F. Taber, of Ithaca; John Leighton, of Syracuse; B. C. Frost, of Oswego; Hiram Foxgrove, of Phœnix; William E. Witten, of Durhamville; A. E. Culver, of Utica; C. K. Finney, of West Troy; C. E. Davis, of Whitehall; and A. R. Gray, of New-York. Hon. C. E. Davis, of Whitehall, was made President of the above committee, and Hiram Benedict, of Lockport, Secretary.

The subject of motive power was then discussed. Mr. Porter, of Wisconsin, advocated the plan of driving piles on the berme bank of the canal, and laying thereon a T rail. By this system only 10 per cent. of the power was lost, and by the cable system 25 per cent. was lost. Mr. Porter said all they wanted was the right to lay their rail, as proposed, through the Erie Canal, interfering with no other systems whatever, and putting no one to any expense save themselves. If they could get permission to do this they would guarantee to carry grain from Chicago to New-York for 8 cents per bushel. This would at once place the canal ahead of all competition in the carrying trade.

Mr. R. W. Bissell, of Lockport, urged the convention to recommend to the Legislature a petition to give the company the privilege desired, and he made a motion to that effect. The Belgian system of towing boats had its representative in Mr. Emerson Foote, of New-York, who sent in a series of resolutions which he wished the convention to adopt, recommending that system for State use.

Mr. Clark, of New-York, urged that the Belgian system had the right already from the Legislature to test its contrivance on the canal, and hence the resolutions were entirely unnecessary. The trail-boat system could come on the canal at any time and use its boats. All he asked was to allow the new Stevenson invention to be tested at no expense to any one save its proprietor.

R. W. Bissell offered an amendment to his resolution, which recommended the Legislature, if in accordance with the interests of the State, to give any and all inventions the right to test their powers on the canal, but in no way to obstruct the present mode of towing. The amendment was adopted.

The committee of five reported this evening in favor of organizing in the City of Buffalo five commission-houses, under the management of one President, one Secretary, and one Treasurer, and a Board of Directors chosen from five sections of the State. The report was adopted, and the following Directors were elected: President, Jefferson Collins, West Troy; Vice President, William Postlander, Ithaca; Treasurer, James L. Bread, Phœnix; Secretaries, S. H. Finn, Lockport; William E. Witter, Durhamville; C. C. Meyer, Rochester. A resolution was adopted approving of the use of the Belgian cable-towing system as the most practicable use of steam yet demonstrated, and recommending its introduction upon the entire length of the canal. The convention then adjourned sine die.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

THE CORONER'S INQUEST—EXAMINATION OF THE MASTER CARPENTER CONCLUDED—THE "PRESIDENT'S BRIDGE."

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 10.—The Coroner's Jury assembled at 10:45 o'clock this forenoon, and adjourned at 2 o'clock this afternoon. The examination of Mr. A. L. Rogers, master carpenter of the Erie division of the road, was concluded. There seems to be a slight disposition manifested to shirk responsibility among the officials of the road. Mr. Rogers testified yesterday that he had sometimes inspected the bridge, but did not consider it his duty to do so, while Mr. Reid, the inspector of bridges for the entire line of the road, testified that he depended largely upon Mr. Rogers' report. To-day Mr. Rogers testified that he heard Mr. Collins say, before the bridge was rem till after the beginning of a new Administration. But the subject of a Democratic disorganization in the South has been raised with startling distinctness, and impresses strongly the leading politicians of both parties. It continues to be discussed, and will be a prominent topic here for many weeks to come, and until it shall appear that the prospective movement has no vitality left in it. It is worth while, then, to inquire carefully concerning the causes which could produce a division of the white party in the South, concerning the manner in which these causes may become operative, and also the great good that would follow to the whole nation from a breaking-up of the sectional division of national political parties.

THE BASIS AND THE MOTIVE OF DIVISION.

The division of political parties by geographical and sectional limits has been deemed from the foundation of the Government the greatest danger that could threaten the Republic. A "solid South" has been sought by no party save the Democratic, and even Democrats complain of the evils of a union of one class of voters in the South—the negroes—in favor of the Republican Party. They demand a division of the colored vote. Republicans desire a division of the white vote. Either position by itself is wholly partisan, for every Democrat knows that a reinforcement of the solid white vote by a considerable number of negroes would insure his party the control of every Southern State. On the other hand, the union of any considerable part of the white vote with the unbroken colored vote would make several States securely Republican. But there is this difference, that the Republican may desire the division of the white vote for patriotic as well as partisan reasons, for he knows that such a division is the first and necessary step toward a division of the colored vote. Before sectionalism can be destroyed, the distinction of races politically must be broken down, and the negroes can never vote otherwise than in their own race interests till the whites cease to act together in politics simply because they are white. Whoever, therefore, Republican or Democrat, wishes to see "the color line" broken, the Mason and Dixon's line in politics blotted out, the people of the South, black and white, voting on one side or another of public questions because of an honest difference of opinion concerning those questions, and not because of race prejudice, must look for the fulfillment of such a hope through a political division of white voters, which can be the only useful beginning of the great political movement.

Such a division cannot be made by force; it cannot be arranged by a political trade. Hayes could no more secure the support of a Southern party by promising and dispensing patronage among them, than he could gain over a faction of Northern Democrats by the same means. There never was a more stupid political canard than the story that propositions from Lamar and others had been made and considered, or that any assurances could be given. The winning over of a few leaders would be of little value. The movement must be of the people who engage in it, and they must be impelled by a motive which shall act strongly upon a great many minds in the same way. There must be a deep underlying principle, or if not a principle, at least a powerful cause. There exists such a cause or motive, and when once understood it must act powerfully. There is also a natural basis, or rather a boundary line, for the party division.

This motive, I am sorry to admit, is not such as to satisfy either the sentimental patriot or the professional office-holder. It is, indeed, a very selfish motive, and for that reason all the more powerful. It is the hope, the ambition, of white people of the South to control their local and State Governments. It is stimulated by party jealousies among the Southern whites, that took root near half a century ago with the organization of the Whig Party; which grew and multiplied till the nomination of Fremont and the dissolution of the Whigs; which still existed when Douglas and Breckinridge were voted for, and when secession was determined upon; and which, though apparently destroyed by the war, still lives in the breasts of men who had become of age to vote at the breaking out of the war. It has been said that no man over 40 ever changes an opinion which he entertained at that age, and it may be well believed that every man of the South who voted for gallant Harry Clay in 1844 still has the o'd feeling toward those with whom he contended at that time. The same class of men who voted for Clay generally opposed secession, and from this class Douglas received all of the small vote returned for him in the Southern States, and Bell and Everett, and "the Constitutional Union," received the remainder of the vote for Clay in 1844, Taylor in 1848, and Scott in 1852.

The old Whig vote is then a basis of Democratic division in the South, and the direct motive is furnished by their undoubted power—by giving a hearty support to the Administration of President Hayes, and thus forming a coalition with the colored vote—to gain political control of their States against the more dangerous element of whites. Of this motive more will be said hereafter. The basis of such a political movement is worth full examination. It will surprise most men under 35, or even 40 years of age, in short all who did not participate actively in the last canvass before the disbanding of the Whig Party, to know the extent of political division that existed in the Southern States before the abolition of slavery became a distinct party issue. Without attempting to give detailed statistics in this letter, it will be easy to show the important facts sufficiently. The greatest contest of the Whig Party was made in 1844, with Clay as the candidate, who had been voted for as a candidate just 20 years before, when as yet the name Whig had been applied to no political party in this country. The Whig Party existed 10 years after the contest for Clay, and four years later it elected its candidate Taylor, but its ranks in the South began to be broken by the anti-slavery agitation. In 1844 the Democrats were in a minority in Kentucky, North Carolina, and Tennessee. Their majorities were in round numbers only 6,000 in Virginia, 2,000 in Georgia, 11,000 in Alabama, 6,000 in Mississippi, and 10,000 in Arkansas. In Louisiana it was 699, and this small majority was produced by Slidell sending roughs from New-Orleans by boat to repeat at Plaquemine. The State was then given to Polk, and the infamous Plaquemine frauds were the first ever attempted in a Presidential election. For some time it was supposed the result of the Presidential election would turn upon the vote of Louisiana, till finally the State of New-York was unexpectedly found to have voted for Polk. In the States of Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Louisiana, Missouri, and Arkansas the vote for Polk was 372,473 and for Clay 345,422. Prior to the war the Electors in South Carolina were always chosen by the Legislature. It will be seen that the Southern vote of thirty years ago was divided between the two parties with singular closeness, and but for the sectional institution of slavery no sectional party could have ever arisen and long endured. A generation of men have passed away since the final blow to the Presidential aspirations of gallant Harry Clay was struck by his defeat in 1844. The men now living who voted for him then must be at least 53 years old, and they constitute, of course, but a small part of the present voting population of the South. But wherever they are found they are men of influence, and generally men of character.

VOTE OF THE SOUTH IN 1860.

The Whig Party did not grow, or at least but slightly, in the South after 1844; but its influence was felt, and was in some degree the cause of the Democratic break in the Charleston Convention of 1860 and the nomination of two Democratic candidates for the Presidency in that year, though the party organization was already destroyed. The Democratic vote in the South for Douglas and Johnson was made up, in its personnel, of the old Whig voters, who gave their adhesion to Douglas' doctrine of "Squatter Sovereignty." In the ten States heretofore named Douglas received 156,169, of which upward of 58,000 were from Missouri and 25,000 from Kentucky. The Douglas vote in the South can to-day, I believe, be confidently depended on to resist measures of force and of revolution in behalf of Tilden. But the number is not great. That larger element of moderate Southern Democrats is found among the old Whigs who voted for Bell and Everett. The vote for Bell was almost entirely the old Whig vote, and the war was not begun by the will or wish of this class, though most of them were at last drawn into the vortex of the dreadful storm. The line of demarcation between the Breckinridge Democrats on the one hand and the Douglas Democrats and the Bell and Everett or Constitutional Union men on the other, was as strongly drawn as party lines can well be. Let us see, then, how the white Southern vote was divided as late as 1860. It will be found that a similar division new would make an end of the sectionalism of the party. The figures are so interesting and important as to deserve a presentation in detail in the following table:

	Douglas.	Bell.	Breckinridge.
Alabama	13,651	27,875	48,831
Arkansas	5,227	20,094	28,733
Florida	367	5,437	8 543
Georgia	11,590	42,886	51.889
Kentucky	25,651	66,058	53,143

Two of the States in this table were not admitted into the Union till after the election of 1844. They are Florida and Texas, both admitted in 1845. In the 12 States the united vote of Douglas and Bell was 626,885, and greater than the Breckinridge vote by more than 100,000. Sixteen years have passed—years crowded with great actions and grand changes. The young men who voted for the first time in 1860 are new 37 or 38 years old. They became impressed at once by the solidifying influences of the war, and are nearly all, doubtless, Democrats of the Breckinridge type. Old political contests have no place in their recollection, and no influence on their minds. All young men who have since become voters have been under similar influences, and are generally hopeless adherents of the extreme wing of the party. Sixteen years has taken away thousands of those who voted for Bell and Douglas. How many of that class of Democrats remain in the South cannot be computed without laborious examination of vital statistics and life tables. But it is evident that there must be 200,000 or 300,000 at least, and quite enough of them to form the basis of a powerful party in the Southern States.

There is thus shown to be the basis of a party division of the Southern white vote and the motive for it. How, then, might it be brought about? It has been shown that the Northern Democratic talk of war had almost precipitated it. The preference of a large number of Southern Democrats for the inauguration of Hayes rather than a doubtful armed conflict for Tilden, it forced to an expression this Winter, would have created the division immediately. But as that cause of speedy action seems to have passed, the movement must be looked for further in the future. Suppose the pretended expectation of the Democrats that Tilden will be declared elected should be realized. In that case the Democratic Party is at once a unit, and will remain so unless the unity is destroyed by Tilden's own partisan mismanagement. Many Democrats fear he would break up the party, but that is a mere shadow. But if Hayes is inaugurated the situation will be very different. A large faction of Democrats may be expected to continue a violent and unreasonable opposition. This faction will include all the Northern wing of the party and the "last ditchers" of the South. This would be the great opportunity for the moderate Southern men to assert themselves, particularly if the farce of a pretended inauguration of Tilden should be presented. It would not be a very large white party of the South that would hold the key of the situation. By giving their support to Hayes—honestly acknowledging his election—they would become a portion of the Administration party. Acting with the colored voters they would soon lead them, and in conjunction with them control the Governments of several States—certainly of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, and possibly of Virginia, Tennessee, and Kentucky.

It is easy to see that the causes of a Southern division are most likely to be made operative and endowed with vitality by the election of Hayes. There could be no trade about it. The affair would be entirely in the control of the Southern men. It is hardly to be supposed that any Republican President would attempt to drive away that support, though there are some prominent Republicans, I believe, who do not desire it, who feel troubled on account of the prospect, and would regard such a movement as a dangerous blow at the Republican Party. I do not think this view finds much sympathy, but do not care to enter upon a discussion of it further than to present the fact. There are those, on the other hand, who think such a division of the Southern vote is of greater importance to the country than even the existence of the Republican Party, though they cannot see how that would be imperiled by a few recruits. Such a movement in the South would, I think, be in harmony with Gov. Hayes' letter of acceptance, and would receive his sympathy and support. But, of course, I have no means of interpreting his views, and till he himself chooses to speak further, the situation must be judged by his letter of acceptance. But I think he had some such solution of the Southern difficulties in mind when he wrote the following:

"A division of political parties, resting merely upon sectional lines, is always unfortunate and may be disastrous. * * * The moral and national prosperity of the Southern States can be most effectually advanced by a hearty and generous recognition of the rights of all by all—a recognition without reserve or exception. With such a recognition fully accorded, it will be practicable to promote, by the influences of all legitimate agencies of the General Government, the efforts of the people of those States to obtain for themselves the blessing of honest and capable local Government. If elected, I shall consider it not only my duty, but it will be my ardent desire, to labor for the attainment of this end."

SOME OBJECTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This letter is already too long, and any considerable discussion of the good to flow from a partition of the Southern vote must be omitted. Indeed this branch of the subject hardly needs consideration, one would suppose, for it would seem that no one could dispute that to secure this end would be the crowning glory of the Republican Party. But there are those who make objection. It seems hardly proper at this time to give a personal turn to the subject. The first and most urgent objection is, that a Southern support of Hayes' Administration, if encouraged and aided by him, would introduce into the party a new and uncertain element, with special demands, which must be met at the risk of party destruction; that the support would be given for a purpose, and when the end was achieved the allies would desert, and destroy the party organization. Those who raise this kind of an objection seem to think the party would be like the blacksmith in the fable, who took home the frozen viper and warmed it into life and power for harm to those of his own household. This objection is met by a consideration of the condition in which the white supporters of Hayes would find themselves. They would not be able to maintain themselves without a struggle. They must keep the colored vote by preventing negroes from being "bull-dezed." They would need the support, morally, and in all proper ways, of a strong national Administration. They would be compelled to work heartily in conjunction with the Administration in all respects, and self-interest would bind them to the national party that sustained them. Besides, it must not be forgotten that the class from which alone much is to be expected comprise the best and truest men of the South, who are uncomfortable in their present political associations, and are rather desirous for a change. The old Republicans who are still fighting for the protection and elevation of the negro would find such an aid worth seeking.

There is another class of objections which must be mentioned. They come from the Southern Republican politicians. They complain that they have borne the brunt of the battle now these many years, and they do not think the party should encourage any movement or policy which shall lessen their political control. In other words, they do not want to encounter any new risk to a continuance in office-holding. This objection can be, and is urged in a very plausible manner. There is this to be said about it. There have been two modes of Republican suffering in the South. There are those who have suffered as Senators and Representatives. Governors and judicial officers, tax-gatherers and revenue agents. There are also those who have suffered for voting the Republican ticket without reward. Should not the latter class be considered also? I have in mind a Representative from a Southern State who has been in Congress two terms. He has been elected and "returned" for the third time as a Republican. He fears the Democrats will threw him out of his seat. It is announced that he is preparing a speech, in which he will claim that the election officers who declared himself elected committed a fraud in giving his State to the Hayes Electors. There is not the slightest reason for such action except self-interest. Now, it seems to me, the party has suffered more for this man than he has suffered for the party. Some discrimination would of course be necessary in the recognition of individual members of the party, and there is no ground to believe that any useful man would be lost overboard while the freight was shifting, so to speak. Every honest and able Republican of the South would sustain himself and be amply recognized under the new conditions.

The whole subject is a constant theme of earnest talk in Washington, and will continue to be till there is a marked change of some kind in the political prospects. I but echo the sentiments of the great majority of the Republican leaders, including the wisest and best of them, I believe, in saying they feel that there has been since the war no such promising situation, no occasion so laden with possibilities of re-cementing the Union, of restoring the unity and strength of patriotic feeling throughout the land, and of destroying forever the last remnant of sectional prejudice as a political power, and an element of national disintegration. THE NEW TURKISH CONSTITUTION.

OFFICIAL PROCLAMATION—THE GRAND CEREMONIAL—SCENE IN STAMBOUL.

The Pera correspondent of the London Telegraph writes under date Dec. 24: "Yesterday the new Constitution of Turkey was publicly proclaimed to the population of Stamboul. A stranger scene than that which was witnessed on this grand historical occasion was never seen in the capital of Islamism. Characteristic of the nation, the ceremonial observed was a curious commingling of Oriental simplicity and magnificence. As the hour approached at which it was understood that the Government of Turkey would be changed from an autocratic to a democratic rule, the narrow streets which lead to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at the Sublime Porte became thronged with a motley crowd. Ascending the hilly avenues which rise from the bridge of boats, threading their way between vehicles which rapidly drove in the direction of the old Seraglio, were people of almost every nationality under the sun. Circassians in their long coats and fez caps, Mohammedan women covered with their yashmacks, negroes, Turks in fezzes and Turks in turbans, Greeks, Armenians, Arabs, Franks, all filled the footways and thronged the roads. They squatted on the steps and under the doors of the houses, and clustered in the ancient Osman rulers; they filled the windows of the quaint shops and houses which abut upon the Porte; they climbed on the ruins which the great fire of 1863 left behind, stood thickly on the mounds of earth where the sacred pigeons of the Porte usually feed, and they thronged the great irregular square or court-yard in front of the windows of the Foreign Bureau. Here, also, there were large numbers of carriages massed, drawn by splendidly caparisoned horses, belonging to the great dignitaries of State and the leaders of the Moslem nation. Such a crowd as was here assembled has, in truth, never been looked upon before. All kinds of costumes, all ranks of society, were gathered here. Priests and dancing dervishes, beggars and wealthy Osmanli, soldiers, women, and children were in the throng, while in the carriages which I have mentioned were many of the richer Mohammedan ladies, heavily veiled and grandly dressed.

The Porte is a large building, having a great number of windows, facing the square in which the crowd thus waited; and at about the centre a kind of loggia was fixed, hung with rich scarlet draperies, and emblazoned with the crescent and star. This overlooked the great mass of the people in the old Seraglio, and from it could be seen not only the greater part of Stamboul itself, but the Bosphorus, the shores of Asia, and even the Sea of Marmora. The day was hazy and damp—else the panorama was of the grandest. More than that, it was full of suggestiveness to those to whom was intrusted the duty of proclaiming the new Constitution of Turkey. Presently troops began to file into the court-yard, and line its sides, the military bands also came and commenced to play Turkish national airs. At length, at 1 o'clock (à la France) approached, a loud fanfare of trumpets announced the arrival of the Sultan's Secretary, who, riding on horseback, and accompanied by a splendid escort, bore the Imperial firman, which was inclosed in a magnificent envelope of satin and velvet, richly embroidered with gold, and studded with diamonds and pearls.

Awaiting the arrival of this great State document was the Grand Visier, who, standing in the loggia in sight of the people, took the envelope, kissed it, pressed it to his forehead, and afterward handed it to other great officials, who repeated the ceremony, significant of obedience. In a loud voice Midhat Pasha then read to the assembled crowd the terms of the new Constitution, the heads of which have already been telegraped to you. At this moment I was admitted through the courtesy of his Excellency Blacque Bey to the loggia itself, and thus was enabled to see more easily and completely the proceedings which followed. On the platform thus temporarily provided were all the great civil and military dignitaries of Turkey, the great ecclesiastical chiefs, and the naval officers. Sumptuous costumes in every conceivable variety were on every side, from that of the Sheik-ul-islam, who wore a white mantle embroidered with gold and a white turban wreathed with cloth of gold, to that of the Jewish Rabbi, who was attired in a blue turban embroidered with silver, and those of the Armenian priests who bore the curious head-gear of their nationality, and the still stranger veils. Of the decorations, too, it is impossible to speak, they were so numerous, but I noticed that nearly all wore either the broad red ribbon of the Medjidie or the green one of the Osmanli.

A little while elapsed after the formal reception of the Firman which was to confer a new constitution upon the nation, and then the Imam of the Porte came forward, and in a grand sonorous voice recited ten prayers. In the pauses thus offered all appeared to kneel, touching their arms simultaneously, while the bands joined in the strange chant, and gave even greater volume to the deeper amens with which the crowd responded. At length there came a prayer for the Sultan, which, couched in Arabic, supplicated long life and health for Abdul Hamid; and this being received with loud and enthusiastic cheers, the bands struck up a lively national air once more, while the guns of the batteries firing announced to Constantinople that the Constitution had been proclaimed. A general salute followed, and then the crowd dispersed, for the rain was falling heavily. As night came on the public buildings of the Capital were illuminated in honor of the event, and a grand torchlight procession went to the palace of the Sultan. Everywhere the populace seemed enthusiastic; bands played, lights were burned, and Stamboul, with its scores of minarets and domes, presented a magnificent appearance. Only one thing tended to mar the brilliancy of the scene—the heavy rain which fell, and which assisted in great measure the effect of the strange gathering of costumes and faces which assembled on this grand historical occasion."

LOVE'S ICY TEST.

From the Detroit Free Press.

The other evening as a patient policeman was pacing his beat on Howard street a young man passed him and ran up a flight of stone steps and rang the bell. The officer heard the door open, a young lady's voice sing out, and he said to himself:

"'Tis love's young dream."

He was just moving on when another young man approached, looked up at the house, and in a sheepish way asked the officer if he had seen any one go in. He was informed of what had occurred a moment before, and he gasped:

"It was that sneaking chap from Cass avenue."

He walked on, and the officer walked, but 10 minutes later the young man climbed the stone steps with a pail of water in his hand and emptied its contents over every stone. He was sitting on the horse-block opposite as the officer came back, meaning to stay there until his plan enfolded or until he froze to death. He didn't freeze. In about 10 minutes the door opposite opened, two voices were heard in a muffled tone, and then the young man from Cass avenue came down the steps on his ear, his elbow, his shoulder-blade, his heel, or on most any other part of the human make-up. He struck the sidewalk, shot across it to the gutter, and came to a standstill with his head in the snow. There was a peal of laughter from the house as the door shut, and the watcher on the horse-block chuckled and remarked:

"That heartless laugh was not uttered by a woman who loves—I'm hanky!"

Five minutes later he carefully crawled up the icy steps, and the good policeman heard him cordially greeted, and mused:

"Well, if there ain't more'n seventeen different ways of finding out if a girl loves you!"

SHIP-BUILDING IN MAINE.

Returns of ship-building tonnage in Maine for the year 1876, made from official sources, show the total value of tonnage built, estimating the cost at $50 per ton, to be $3,676,667. The largest amount of tonnage built has been in the Bath district, and the smallest amount has been in the Saco district. The Bath district also shows the largest increase, and the Bangor district the largest decrease. The total amount of tonnage built in the State in 1876 was 73,573 34-100, a decrease of 1,487 11-100 as compared with 1875, when the total amount of tonnage was 75,060 45-100, and a decrease of 48,975 40-100 as compared with 1874, when the total amount of tonnage built was 122,548 74-100. The aggregate number of vessels built in 1876 was 138, embracing 31 ships, 22 barks, 4 barkentines, and the remainder smaller vessels. In 1875 there were built 153 vessels, embracing 29 ships, 19 barks, 8 barkentines, and the remainder smaller vessels. In 1874 there were built 253 vessels, embracing 31 ships, 36 barks, 11 barkentines, and the remainder smaller vessels. The prospects are that a larger amount of tonnage will be built the present year than last year.

LAW REPORTS.

THE ROLLWAGEN ESTATE.

THE HEIRS AND THE SUPPOSED WIDOW OF THE LATE FREDERICK ROLLWAGEN IN COURT—LITIGATING OVER THE OWNERSHIP OF TWENTY-FIVE HOUSES.

The case of Louis P. Rollwagen against Magdalena Hermann, otherwise called Magdalena Rollwagen, and others, was brought before Judge Lawrence in Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday, on a demurrer to the complaint. The suit is one of those growing out of the difficulties attending the attempted disposition of the estate of Frederick Rollwagen, who died in October, 1873, leaving a large amount of property, including many parcels of real estate. The deceased, for some time prior to his death, was in a condition of great mental and physical weakness, and is said to have been entirely under the control of his housekeeper, Magdalena Hermann, who would not allow any of his relatives to visit him. After his death she produced what purported to be his will, by which he gave her nearly all of his property, and claimed that she had been married to him. This will was declared null and void after a protracted litigation. The present action was then begun by the eldest surviving son of Frederick Rollwagen, to partition the real estate left by the deceased, consisting of about 25 houses in this City. In such an action, all the heirs and relatives of the deceased, as well as those having an interest in the property, must be made parties. As the heirs, &c., denied, however, that Magdalena Hermann had been married to the deceased, the following clause was inserted in the complaint: "That the said defendant, Magdalena Hermann, otherwise called Magdalena Rollwagen, of full age, claims to be the widow of Frederick Rollwagen, deceased, and entitled to dower in said real estate; that said defendant, Hermann, is not the lawful widow of said Frederick Rollwagen, deceased, and was never lawfully married to him." To this the alleged widow demurred, claiming that the question whether she was the lawful widow of the deceased or not could not be tried in an action for the partition of real estate. The plaintiff's counsel argued that as Magdalena Hermann claimed to be the widow, she must be made a party to the action. Were this not done, as she had 20 years in which to bring suit for her dower in the property, and as no one could compel her to sue, there would be a cloud on the title of the real estate for 20 years, if she lived as long. The question whether she is or is not the widow of the late Frederick Rollwagen could be sent for trial to a jury before the Judge of the action. Judge Lawrence, after hearing the arguments, took the papers, reserving his decision. George F. Langbein and Henry L. Clinton appeared for the plaintiff, and William Henry Arnoux and Ritch & Woodford for the defendant, Hermann.

SUIT FOR THE RECOVERY OF A PICTURE.

Chance visitors, as well as the regular court habitués, were rather astonished in going into Part II. of the Supreme Court yesterday and finding placed against one of the walls a huge picture of Metamora, an Indian chieftain, arrayed in all the panoply of war paint, plumes, and the other accessories of a well-regulated red man's toilet. The picture was the subject of dispute in an action brought by Edward H. Hotchkiss against Robert E. Kelly and others, and tried before Judge Van Brunt and a jury yesterday. The suit was to recover $2,500, the value of the painting referred to, the plaintiff claiming that the defendants had seized and wrongfully converted the picture. In answer the defendants alleged there had been no conversion of the picture, but that it had been seized under a chattel mortgage. The defendants moved to dismiss the complaint, on the ground that there was no allegation that the defendants had possession of the picture, nor of any fact upon which conversion could be predicated. Judge Van Brunt said he thought the complaint defective in that respect. The plaintiff's counsel then offered to amend, but Mr. Frederick Coudert, who represented the defendants, opposed the motion, saying they were not only willing but anxious to give up the painting, which was very expensive to keep, and they had never wished to retain it. They would now give up the picture and pay the costs of the suit. They would even pay the carriage hire any part of the City if they could only be rid of it. The counsel said his clients had not slept since they had the picture. He added: "Talk of having an elephant on your hands! It is nothing compared with having a 'Metamora.'" Judge Van Brunt finally put the case off for the term, so that a motion may be made in Chambers to amend the complaint.

A SPORTING MAN'S BUSINESS.

A. T. Stewart in his lifetime leased Niblo's Garden to Charles Thorne, Sr., John F. Chamberlin, the sporting man, becoming the lessee's surety. Thorne not paying the rent, Chamberlin was sued and a judgment recovered for over $27,000. The judgment was returned unsatisfied, and an order was then obtained for the examination of Mr. Chamberlin in supplementary proceedings. The examination was begun yesterday in the Court of Common Pleas. Mr. Chamberlin, in response to questions put by John D. Townsend, the counsel for the Stewart estate, said he had no place of business now. He admitted having become security for the payment of the rent. He recollected that the rent was to be paid weekly, but recollected nothing further about the lease. He did not think that at the time of becoming surety he was worth the amount of money for which he became surety. Mr. Chamberlin was then questioned as to some of the details of his business. It appeared that he carried on a part of business at Washington during the Winter, and at Long Branch in Summer. The business at Washington was a losing one. He did not know as to whether it paid at Long Branch or not. He said: "We had two branches, one at the beach and the other in the country. On one we always lost money and on the other we sometimes made money. We always lost money on the restaurant."

SOUTH CAROLINA BONDS.

Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, signed the formal order denying a motion to compel the plaintiffs in the suit of Lysander D. Childs and John P. Southern against William E. Everett and others to file security for costs. The plaintiffs allege that in April, 1871, they entered into an agreement with the defendants for the purchase, from time to time, of South Carolina bonds. They say that about $150,000 in money was put into the project, and that a large amount of bonds were purchased. These bonds, after having been pledged to various banks to secure advances, were finally sold at a loss. The plaintiffs claim that Everett received the money arising from the sale of the bonds, and refused to account for it. The defendant Everett, in answer, says that he had no partnership with the plaintiffs, but bought South Carolina bonds on his own account. The agreement referred to by the plaintiffs, he says, is void, as against public policy. The ground of its nullity, as alleged, is that by it the parties were to influence the South Carolina Legislature into passing certain measures which would appreciate the value of the bonds. Rodman & Adams appear for the plaintiffs, and Grimball & Rives for the defendant Everett.

AFTER TWENTY YEARS.

A case which is really extraordinary in many respects was made the subject of a decision by Judge Speir in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday. The action in question was brought by one Louis Bamberger against George Hibbard, and in it the plaintiff obtained a judgment against the defendant for $401 75. This judgment was docketed on March 12, 1856. The defendant afterward made a motion to vacate the judgment, and subsequently the matter was referred to a Referee. The latter made his report on Sept. 10, 1872, finding the judgment to be a good and valid one. More delays ensued, and it was not until last month that the matter was brought before the court. In the meantime Hibbard had died and was succeeded by his widow and executrix. The latter was served with notice of a motion by the plaintiff to confirm the Referees' report and for leave to issue execution on the judgment. Judge Speir rendered a decision, yesterday, in which he confirms the Referees report, but denies the motion for leave to issue execution, holding that the plaintiff must enforce his judgment against the representatives of the deceased in the manner prescribed by law.

DAMAGES FOR SELLING EXEMPT PROPERTY.

The case of James Hall against John P. Corrigan was tried before Judge Van Hoesen and a jury in Part I. of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. This action was brought against the defendant to recover damages for trespass in taking and selling under execution $50 worth of working tools belonging to the plaintiff, which were exempt by law from execution. On the trial it appeared that James Brierly, a brother-in-law of the defendant, made confession of judment to the defendant, in the name of the firm of which he and plaintiff were partners, without the plaintiff's knowledge or consent. This judgment was afterward set aside. It further appeared that the brother-in-law was present when the property was taken by the Sheriff from plaintiff's residence in Brooklyn, and also when it was sold, and he afterward took part in selling it again. A verdict of $300 was given for the plaintiff, to which the Court added an extra allowance of five per cent. Royal S. Crane appeared for the plaintiff, and John T. Sweeny and Michael Nolan represented the defendant.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The following were the proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States to-day:

No. 653.—The Board of County Commissioners of the County of Marion, plaintiff in error, vs. Aaron Clark.—This cause was submitted on printed arguments by Mr. A. L. Williams, of counsel for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Alfred Ennis, for the defendant in error, under the twentieth rule.

No. 154.—George W. Bowen, appellant, vs. Nelson Chase et al.—The argument of this cause was commenced by Mr. James O. Carter, of counsel for the appellees, and concluded by Mr. L. S. Chatfield, for the appellant.

No. 18.—George W. Bowen, plaintiff in error, vs. Nelson Chase.—Passed for the present.

No. 155.—The Mutual Life Insurance Company of New-York, appellant, vs. J. Morrison Harris, assignee, &c.—The argument of this cause was commenced by E. O. Henckley, of counsel for the appellant, and continued by J. M. Harris, for the appellee.

Adjourned till to-morrow.

COURT NOTES.

The examination of William B. Duncan was resumed yesterday before Register Ketchum, but nothing of importance was elicited.

In the suit of James Driscoll against the Mayor, &c., the jury, in Part III. of the Supreme Court, yesterday rendered a verdict of $1,000 in favor of the plaintiff.

A decision was rendered by Judge Blatchford yesterday in the United States District Court in the case of Samuel C. Boehs, in bankruptcy, dismissing the application to revoke a discharge given.

The will of the late Charles R. Lohman, husband of Mme. Restelle, was offered for probate yesterday in the Surrogate's Court. The will is dated July 15, 1862. The estate, which is a very large one, is mostly left to his wife.

In the United States Circuit Court yesterday, Judge Benedict denied the motion for a new trial in the case of George Jones, convicted of perjury, and sentenced the accused to 13 months' imprisonment in the Kings County Penitentiary.

A sealed verdict was rendered yesterday in the suit of Catherine L. Flynn, otherwise Catherine L. Wells, against ex-Sheriff Conner, in which there were some disclosures relative to some of the parties concerned in the Boylston Bank robbery.

In the trial of the Emma Mine suit yesterday in the United States Circuit Court, the entire day was occupied in the cross-examination of the witness James E. Lyon by Mr. Beach, and will be continued this morning. The testimony was net of general importance.

John Smith, a laborer, who broke into the butcher shop of George Saunders, No. 170 Waverley place, on New Year's morning, and stole eight turkeys, was convicted in the Court of General Sessions yesterday. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced Smith to four years in the State Prison.

Hugo Schultz, a respectable-looking young man, charged with stealing a gold watch and chain valued at $300 from Daniel Ahern, of No. 137 East Eighth street, pleaded guilty yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Gildersleeve sent him to the State Prison for two years.

Julius Max Borchardt recovered a judgment for $1,500 in a suit brought by him against the United States Fire Insurance Company and tried before Judge Sedgwick and a jury in the Superior Court yesterday. The action was brought to recover $3,650 on a fire policy. The defense was that his answers given to the Fire Marshal were incorrect.

Kate Reilly, a dishonest domestic, and her confederate, Francis Murray, were jointly charged before Judge Gildersleeve yesterday with stealing about $200 worth of clothing, furniture, and property of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene A. Post, of Fifty-first street and Broadway, in whose employ the woman was. Both were convicted. Murray was sent to State Prison for two years and six months and the woman for two years.

The divorce case of James M. Heatherton against Mary J. Heatherton was before Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday. In this suit the plaintiff was ordered to pay alimony to the defendant. The latter obtained an order yesterday to compel her husband to assign to a Receiver, as security for the payment of the alimony, his suit against Thomas Hastings, and his interest in the contract for the plumbing of the new Post Office.

The case of Read against Livingston was brought up before Judge Speir in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday, but was adjourned until to-day. It appears that the defendant put up a livery stable in Fifty-third street, near Fifth avenue. There are in this neighborhood many fine buildings, costing from $50,000 to $100,000 each, and the proprietors of these costly residences object to the close proximity of the stable, "with all that that implies." The plaintiff owns a building adjoining the stable, and seeks to prevent the defendant from using his building as a livery stable. She claims that the adjoining property is depreciated in value thereby.

Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday granted a motion allowing the defendants in the case of Bigler against the Mayor, &c., to amend their answer. The action was brought to recover damages on a contract for supplying lumber to the Dock Department. At Trial Term the plaintiff recovered a judgment for over $70,000. This was reversed by the General Term. The amendment proposed is to insert in the answer a general denial of the plaintiff's claim, and an allegation of the illegality of his contract in not containing a statement of the quantities required. The amendment is allowed only on payment of all the costs up to date.

The case of Grace Arons against Solomon Fisher was brought before Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday. The plaintiff was a servant in the employ of the defendant. Having a claim of $11 against her mistress she brought an action in the Eighth District Court, under the "Servant Girl act." Judge Gedney allowed her $14 50 as costs in addition to the judgment for the $11, thus bringing the total judgment up to over $25. On this judgment the defendant was arrested, but the application for her release by writ of habeas corpus to Judge Donohue yesterday, and he discharged her, holding that the costs in the case were excessive.

The trial of the suit of Patten against the New-York Elevated Railroad Company was begun before Judge Joseph F. Daly in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. The details of this action have been given heretofore in THE TIMES, when it was argued on the motion for a temporary injunction. The plaintiff seeks a permanent injunction to restrain the defendants from building a switch or turn-out on his premises in Greenwich street, and also seeks damages for trespass. At the trial yesterday the old deeds, charters, &c., published hitherto, were put in evidence. Henry A. Cram and Charles Jones appear for the plaintiff and E. C. Delavan for the defendants.

AN EXCHANGE OF REAL ESTATE.

The case of Adam Cambeis against Solomon Kats was brought to trial before Judge Van Vorst and a jury in Part I. of the Supreme Court yesterday. It appears that on Jan. 5, 1874, Cambeis agreed to sell the defendant the property at No. 435 East Eighteenth street for $14,500. Of this amount $500 were paid on the spot, $4,000 were to have been paid on the delivery of the deed, and $10,000 were to be given by the delivery of certain New-Jersey property valued by the defendant at $12,000, which was mortgaged for $2,000. The plaintiff sues to recover the $4,000 which he claims was never paid him. The defendant claims that he paid the money to one Philip E. Smith, at the plaintiff's request, for the payment of judgments and liens against the property. The plaintiff, however, insists that Smith was the defendant's agent. Counsel for the plaintiff claimed, yesterday, that there was a conspiracy between the defendant and Smith for the purpose of cheating the plaintiff out of the $4,000. The counsel also stated that the New-Jersey property, which had been valued at $12,000, and was mortgaged for $2,000, was worth so little that the plaintiff had abandoned it to the mortgagee. Judge Van Vorst, in charging the jury, called their attention to the only point involved, which was as to whether Smith was the agent of both parties, or merely of the defendant. The jury, failing to agree, were locked up for the night.

THE FERRY CONSPIRACY CASE.

The trial of Jacob A. Van Valkenburg, ticket collector, and George W. West, ferry master at the Cortlandt Street Ferry, charged with being concerned in an extensive conspiracy to defraud the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, was resumed before Judge Sutherland yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Mr. Charles W. Brooke, counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, examined a large number of witnesses from among the employes of the company, who testified in the manner of distributing and collecting ferry tickets. William N. Plattner, formerly a ticket collector in the employ of the company, then took the stand, and swore that on Aug. 1 he had conveyed 95 tickets from Van Valkenburg to West, who resold them and divided the proceeds between himself and his accomplice. The five tickets retained by him he marked and delivered to Mr. Gwinner, Auditor of the company. Plattner admitted that he had been one of the dishonest employes, and understood the entire conspiracy to defraud the company. The case will be continued to-day.

NOT GUILTY OF PERJURY.

At the opening of Part I. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Judge Gildersleeve charged the jury in the case of Evan P. Thomas, on trial for perjury, in having sworn falsely as to his losses by a fire on Nov. 15, 1874. His Honor clearly reviewed the evidence, and directed the attention of the jury to their duty in the matter. He alluded to the heinousness of the crime with which the prisoner stood charged, and warned them against allowing their repugnance to such an offense to prejudice their judgment against the accused. Their verdict should be based entirely upon the evidence, otherwise it would not be a true one. The jury after an absence of three hours returned a verdict of not guilty, and Thomas was thereupon discharged.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

GOETHE'S WEST-EASTERLY DIVAN. Translated, with introduction and notes, by JOHN WEISS. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1877.

SAPPHO. A tragedy in five acts, by FRANZ GRILLPARZER. Translated by ELLEN FROTHINGHAM. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1876.

We have two pretty little volumes here that bespeak the interest in German literature which has been steadily growing in this country for many years. Both appear in modest form, although both are the results of a long acquaintance with the language. John Weiss has attempted the most difficult of feats in translating the Western poems founded on hints from Eastern writers, which Goethe collected together under the broad title of West-Oestliche Divan, the latter word representing a number of poems like the word "anthology," or bouquet of verse. Not that the poems of this singular collection are particularly abstruse; they are not so difficult as the second part of Faust, for instance, because, as Goethe himself says in his explanatory notes, he purposely chose the most homely language to bring before the German public of the beginning of this century those unusual thoughts and similes which he found in the Persian poets. But it is this very homeliness and idiomatic cast of expression that puts a translater to his trumps. There is an atmosphere of quiet good nature, a mighty ease and self-confidence, very often a playfulness, about the Divan that requires the most delicate hand to reproduce. Perhaps it is expecting impossibilities to look for this trait in a translation. Mr. Weiss' is certainly the best hand that has yet been laid upon the work, and although we have no doubt that a year or two hence he will see a thousand spots where revision is needed, we ought to be thankful that it is he who has done the first rough quarrying. Considering that it is a first edition, the translations are close enough to satisfy any one who does not read the original; those who do will hardly read the books except out of curiosity.

As an example of Mr. Weiss' lapses from exactness—probably owing to the demands of the rhyme and rhythm—we will note the fourth stanza on page eight—

"Her shawl beneath does not demur,
I sit, the flower-commender,
She knows well what belongs to her
Is blithe to me and tender."

where the first two lines have no sense, and do not convey the original at all. Goethe says, "I sing the flowers down (off) from her shawl." At the same time this will serve to show with what extraordinary difficulties Mr. Weiss has had to contend.

The next poem appears to be at fault as to the meaning:

Hardest a poem is to cover
One never puts a bushel over.

Here the words in italics should mean "unless one" puts a bushel over. In fact Mr. Weiss shows a lack of skill in arranging words in a line which would be discreditable to him were he a professed poet. On page 32 we are not sure that he has not improved on the original for the most part. "Hint" is a little jerky, but some of the poems in Goethe's Divan are jerky:

HINT.

"Yet they are right whom I upbraid;
There needs no argument be made
That just the word alone is stale.
Speech is a fan; the sticks between
A pair of glances must be seen;
The fan is but a handsome veil;
Behind it is the face concealed,
And yet the maiden is revealed,
Since chiefest grace she has—her eye,
Lightens to mine a clear reply."

It is a little book full of instruction and delight to those who have powerful mental digestions and do not fear to wrestle with the meaning of a poem. We sincerely trust that it will find enough readers to warrant a second edition, thoroughly revised by the same competent hand.

Miss Frothingham has had experience as a translator from the German, and her new effort, Grillparzer's Sappho, attests it. It is very well done. Much easier as a task than Goethe's Divan, the tragedy will also find a far wider public. There is some coldness about it when compared with tragedies by the greatest men, but it is lovely, and in parts decidedly stirring. Grillparzer incorporated a good deal of Greek poetry, literally translated, into various of his works, and in this we have the largest of the scanty fragments that have reached us under the name of Sappho.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW. Boston: J. R. Osgood & Co.

The North American intends to turn over a new leaf this year, like many other periodicals. Instead of a quarterly review, it is to appear every two months, like its New-York competitor The International. For the new plans a new set of editors are responsible, the old arrangement having come to an end owing to difficulties between the executive and legislative departments of the office. The January-February installment is supported by six writers already known in their various departments, namely, Messrs. Dana, Whipple, Gryzanowski, Nadal, Fiske, and Godkin. Richard Wagner's Theories of Music is handled by Mr. Gryzanowski in a style which shows his mastery of the subject, but which leaves something to be desired in respect to lightness and clearness. This is all the more to be regretted from the fact that the essay is exceedingly able and interesting, going deep into a subject about which every one is talking. But the abstruse terms and expressions made use of may prevent the article from reaching as wide a circle as it deserves. Mr. Gryzanowski is neither an anti-Wagner nor a pro-Wagner critic, but seeks to define the real merits of the German poet, composer, and thinker, without yielding to the excessive assumptions made by the champions of the music of the future. In the following article Mr. E. S. Nadal strives to fix the position of Bret Harte in literature, and, as is usual with Mr. Nadal's work, we are not sure whether he is successful or not. We are only aware that we come upon the choicest bits of thought as we read along, in very much the same manner as we remember enjoying his Impressions of Social Life in London. We begin with thinking him vague and a little timid, when suddenly a phrase occurs which shows that the subject has been digested in a mind, peculiar perhaps, but of no mean capacity, and moreover not afraid to speak out what it thinks. Mr. Nadal has the rare faculty which the French express by the word causer, to which our nearest word is "chat," but without the derogatory sense we attribute to that expression. He is never brilliant, but shines with a quiet inner light that some people enjoy more than anything else. Upon Bret Harte comes "Darwinism," treated by Prof. John Fiske, of Harvard. A paean of triumph is sung upon the success of the theory, and its general outlines are again laid down. "The Eastern Question" exhibits Mr. Godkin at his best. He appears to have traveled in Turkey, and seen the working together of Turks and Christians with his own eyes. He draws a parallel between the timid Christians, made nerveless by centuries of oppression, and our Southern negroes, who dare not avail themselves of the legal protection afforded them by Government. His article is instructive, interesting, and able. The remedy proposed for Turkish lawlessness is to police the country until the rising Christian generation, uncowed by the despotism of individual Mohammedans, shall be strong enough to maintain its rights. The leading article of this number is political, furnished by Mr. R. H. Dana, Jr., while the worn-out subject, Beaumarchais Unveiled, is again served up, this time by Mr. E. P. Whipple. The list, therefore, presents politics—foreign and domestic—literature—foreign and domestic—science, and music.

LITERARY NOTES.

—Ginn & Heath, Boston, are about to publish another of Rev. Henry N. Hudson's textbooks for reading. This time the selections will be confined to Addison and Goldsmith.

—The National Temperance Society, No. 58 Reade street, in this City, have in press The Brewer's Fortune, by Miss M. D. Chillis, and are about to publish The Wife's Engagement Ring, by the well-known story-writer, T. S. Arthur.

—E. Steiger has in press Kiddle & Schem's Cyclopædia of Education. The work deals with the entire range of educational subjects, and has for its contributors men of acknowledged ability and information in educational matters.

—Lee & Shepard are soon to publish an important treatise, by Prof. A. E. Dolbear, of Tufts College, on The Art of Projecting. It is a manual of experimentation in physics, chemistry, and natural history, with the porte lumiere and magic lantern, and will contain numerous illustrations.

—The new poet, John W. Chadwick, contributes an article on "The Basis of Morals" in the January Unitarian Review, a monthly journal of theology and literature, representing the New-England Unitarians and published in Boston. Dr. George E. Ellis furnishes a paper on "Scaling the Meeting-House," and Elizabeth B. Peabody some delightful "Reminiscences of Dr. Channing" for the same number.

—A new novel, by Mrs. Alexander, called The Heritage of Langdale, will be immediately published, under special arrangement with the author, by Henry Holt & Co. The forthcoming book on Russia, by D. Mackin Wallace, which Mr. Ralston, the highest English authority, says, in the Athenæum, he believes "will prove the best ever written about Russia," will soon be published by Henry Holt & Co.

—Messrs. Scribner, Armstrong & Co. intend to publish very soon an abridged edition of the Life of Charles Kingsley, written by his wife. It will be about half the size of the English edition, and will retain the fac-simile of his original manuscript of "The Three Fishers," as well as a portrait and several wood-cuts. The purpose is to furnish a less expensive book than the two-volume English edition, but to give all the most important facts and objects of curious interest to be found in the larger work.

—Clergymen and laymen of an investigating turn of mind are promised during the coming month a new volume of Lange's Commentaries, from the same house of publishers. It is on Chronicles. The serial which has been running through Scribner's Monthly under the title of "That Lass O' Lowrie's" is to be issued in book form. As it appears in installments, it is a work of very strong dramatic interest, and finds abundant favor with magazine readers.

—Of new editions of English works, the Messrs. Scribner, Armstrong & Co. are about to issue volume third of Stanley's Jewish Church and Stanley's Life of Dr. Arnold. Biography will be further supplied in the new Life of Norman MacLeod, which is to consist of two volumes in one. This edition is the only authorized republication of the English work printed from duplicate plates. All the pen-and-ink sketches by Dr. McLeod will accompany the text in fac-simile.

—The Library Table for January, published by Henry L. Hinton & Co., No. 744 Broadway, is an excellent number of a little sheet which not only furnishes reviews of many recent books from the pens of our best critics, but gives much information about books and authors and current periodical literature which is very convenient to have at hand. It is published at a dollar a year, and stands midway between the Publishers' Weekly and the reading public. It is only a year old and is a growing periodical.

—D. Appleton & Co. are to publish Two Lilies, by Miss Kavanagh, in their "Library of Fiction" in a few weeks. They have concluded to use Miss Mather's Cherry Ripe as a serial in Appletons' Journal, and will begin to print it in the February number. Mr. Junius Henri Browne's paper in Appletons' Journal for February is entitled "The Men who Fascinate Women." The illustrated articles are "Our Winter Birds," and "Ruben's Land." Nora Perry, of Providence, is one of the story-tellers.

—Mr. Warren F. Draper, of Andover, Mass., has reprinted from the Bibliotheca Sacra, and will publish early in January, a new work by Rev. Dr. Thomas Hill, with the title, A Statement of the Natural Sources of Theology. It is, to some extent, a discussion of their validity, and of modern skeptical objections. An article is to be added on the first chapter of Genesis, and the work as a whole is one which will carry weight with thinking men. Another work when Mr. Draper has just reprinted from the third London edition is Canon Sorowne's The Book of Psalms, a new translation with introductions and notes explanatory and critical.

—The February number of Scribner's Monthly will contain a little paper by a new writer who ventures into print with a subject of great charm to musical people. It is called "Traditional Music of the French Pyrenees." Miss Sturgis has only a few words to say, and these rather timid, about the picturesque inhabitants of the Béarnais, but she also gives us the music and words of three or four genuine songs of the people, such as probably no one else could furnish. Although both music and words are simple in the extreme, there is delightful freshness and naïveté in all of them. That which the conscripts sing as they march away from their native villages—the "Adieu to Navarre"—has wonderful pathos.

—Many tributes have been paid to Theodore Parker's memory, and his religious writings still have a fair circulation in this country and in England. His Discourses on Religion is now in its fourth edition, and loving friends have taken the occasion of a new issue to edit the work and prepare it for a wider circulation. Mr. W. C. Gannett has prepared an analysis of its contents; Mr. Frothingham has written a preface, in which he traces Mr. Parker's religious influence upon this generation; and the lady who was the companion of his literary labors, Miss Hannah E. Stevenson, has furnished a biographical sketch which, in the portraiture of personal character, leaves nothing to be desired. Altogether no pleasanter memorial of Mr. Parker has yet been given to the public.

— No land is safe from Jules Verne, nor does the sea, nor even the moon, escape his active imagination and ready pen. Messrs. Scribner, Armstrong & Co. will shortly publish his latest bright venture in the shape of Michael Strogoff; or, The Courier of the Czar, a book whose name explains that Russia has been called upon to furnish her quota to the fame of Jules Verne. This will be a "timely" volume during the presence in our waters of the Russian fleet. The English version will contain the original illustrations engraved after designs by Ferat. Bound up with it will appear The Mutineers, a story of Mexican life by the same author, which invades the American Continent and plays the rôle of pendent to the Russian story. With Mexico in civil war on the south and Russia fighting Turkey across the water, we will have in these tales two character sketches, full of adventure, which treat of the two nations on which public attention is fixed.

—The Penn Monthly for January will contain several articles of exceptional interest. One is by Dr. Ely Vande Warker on "Pauperism and its Allied Offenses," treating the questions from their physiological and psychological points of view, and touching upon trampism and the social evil. Another is the first of three popular and practical lectures, recently delivered under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art, on "Art Industries," by Dr. Christopher Dresser, of London, author of The Principles of Decorative Design. Another, entitled "Phonetic Spelling," is a review of the movement now being made to improve our orthography. There is also a paper by Rev. Charles G. Ames, "Wisdom in Charity," in which he discusses the proper methods of systematically dispensing charity, and gives some account of the Philadelphia relief societies; and Prof. Robert Ellis Thompson contributes an interesting article on "The Library of the University of Pennsylvania," with many anecdotes of the noted men who have been connected with it.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION....Jan. 10.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate Mr. Boutwell presented resolutions of the Boston Board of Trade asking Congress to provide for a commission to meet commissioners from other counties to consider the expediency of remonetizing silver, and authorizing the President to invite foreign nations to appoint similar commissioners to fix the relative value of gold and silver. It was referred to the Finance Committee. The House bill to correct errors in the Revised Statues was considered without final action.

In the House, the bill to repeal so much of the act of Dec. 17, 1872, as requires the construction of a pivot-draw in any bridge to be erected over the Ohio between Covington and Cincinnati, was discussed and rejected by a vote of 74 to 133. The Senate joint resolution authorizing the appointment of commissioners to attend an international conference on the relative value of gold and silver came up, and the discussion consumed the morning hour without action. The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being the amendment reducing the compensation of foreign Ministers. No action was reached.

SENATE.

SILVER AND GOLD.

Mr. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, presented resolutions of the Boston Board of Trade, asking Congress to provide by law for the appointment of a commission to meet Commissioners from other countries and consider the expediency of remonetising silver coin, and authorizing the President to invite foreign nations to appoint similar Commissioners for the purpose of fixing the value of silver in relation to gold coin, and until such international convention on the subject silver shall not be made a legal tender for any sum above $10.

Mr. BOUTWELL, in presenting the petition, said he desired to make a brief statement as to the character of the petitioners and the subject to which the petition related. He was justified in saying that the Boston Board of Trade had among its members many gentlemen who had made the subject of money a study. They were concerned, naturally, in individual credit and public honor. He concurred in the views of the memorialists, but as the subject was now in the hands of a committee of the Senate, he did not propose to enter into any discussion of it.

Mr. BOGY, of Missouri, said, while he concurred with the Senator from Massachusetts as to the standing of the petitioners, he thought there were some remarkable statements in the petition. The law, as it stood to-day, recognized silver coin as well as gold in the payment of debts due the Government. He did not think it would be any violation of the public faith to pay public obligations in silver coin.

Mr. BOUTWELL said the petitioners had stated nothing that was in conflict with the view of the Senator from Missouri. They only desired to present to Congress the views which they entertained touching the expediency of issuing silver money in this country until an understanding should be had with other countries.

Mr. SHERMAN said the Senate had already passed a bill providing for an international commission to adjust and arrange the relative value of gold and silver. It had also passed a bill authorizing a convention between the United States and Great Britain to fix a common unit of value. These bills had been sent to the House, and would no doubt be passed.

The petition was then referred to the Committee on Finance.

MEXICAN CLAIMS REPORT.

Mr. INGALLS, of Kansas, submitted a resolution requesting the Secretary of State to transmit to the Senate the report of the Commissioners to adjust claims between the citizens of the United States and Mexico, under the Conventions of 1863, 1871, and 1876.

Mr. CONKLING, of New-York, moved to amend so as to call upon the President for the report, and to insert the usual words after "transmit to the Senate," "if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interest." Agreed to, and the resolution as amended was passed.

THE TESTIMONY IN THE SOUTHERN ELECTIONS.

Mr. MORTON, of Indiana, submitted a resolution to print 500 additional copies of the testimony taken before the Committee on Privileges and Elections regarding the late Presidential election in Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina, and in regard to the casting of the Electoral vote in the State of Oregon.

Mr. BOGY, of Missouri, said he was not aware that the testimony had yet been reported to the Senate.

Mr. MORTON replied that it had not, but the Senate had ordered it to be printed. A portion of it was now in the hands of the Public Printer, and if extra copies were to be printed, they should be ordered now before the type was distributed.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

REVISION OF THE STATUTES.

The Senate then resumed consideration of the unfinished business, being the House bill to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, explained that the bill proposed no new legislation. It was simply to correct errors in the Revised Statutes, many of them of a verbal character, and make those statutes agree with the law as originally passed. The law was then read by paragraphs, and the various corrections explained by Mr. Boutwell.

THE OLD DISTRICT JAIL.

Pending discussion, Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Conference Committee on the bill authorising the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the old District Jail building from Judiciary square, made a report, which was agreed to, and the bill passed.

THE HOUSE CONTINGENT FUND.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported, with amendments, the House bill making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the contingent fund of the House of Representatives and for other purposes. Placed on the calendar.

The Senate then, at 4 o'clock, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the bill authorizing the formation of a mixed commission to inquire and report as to the future naval policy of the United States. Made special order for the 23d inst.

BRIDGING THE OHIO AT CINCINNATI.

The House then resumed the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being a bill to repeal so much of the act of Dec. 17, 1872, as provides for a pivot draw in any bridge to be erected across the Ohio River between Covington and Cincinnati.

Mr. SAYLER opposed the bill, arguing that the law of 1872 had been passed after a long struggle to establish its principles after careful consideration on the part of the House, and after a most careful investigation on the part of the Committee on Commerce, and that its principles should not now be departed from. The only possible purpose which this bill could subserve was to save a small amount of money to a bridge company. There was nothing else in it. He declared the Ohio River with its navigation unimpeded and protected under the law of 1872 was worth more to the City of Cincinnati than all the railroads put together.

Mr. DURHAM, of Kentucky, favored the bill, saying that it was not a question of how much money would be saved to the Bridge Company, but it was a question of the delay and danger which always attended draw-bridges. The true theory of the opposition to the bill was that a great monopoly existed between the Cities of Covington and Cincinnati in the form of a wire suspension bridge. He felt authorized to say that 90 per cent. of the inhabitants of Cincinnati demanded that this bill should pass.

Mr. PIERCE, of Massachusetts, argued against the bill as one for which there was no necessity. The projectors of the new bridge had now the full, cast authority to construct it if they complied with the law of 1872 on the subject.

Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, expressed the hope that the question would not be considered as one merely between the cities of Cincinnati and Covington. It was really a question of the free navigation of the Ohio River. The law of 1872 had been the result of long consideration, not only on the part of Congress but on the part of the Engineer Corps of the Army. It was a matter of vital moment that the navigation of the Ohio River should not be obstructed. The river was the poor man's highway, and was incapable of being made the subject of monopoly. He would not be faithfully representing the interests of his constituents if he did not object to the proposed changes in the law of 1872.

Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, closed the debate by an argument in support of the bill.

The House then proceeded to vote on the passage of the bill, and it was rejected—yeas 74, nays 133.

RELATIVE VALUE OF GOLD AND SILVER.

The House then, as the regular order of business, took up the Senate joint resolution authorizing the President to appoint Commissioners to attend an international conference on the subject of the relative value of gold and silver.

Mr. SEELYE, of Massachusetts, spoke in favor of the bill.

Mr. FORT, of Illinois, opposed the bill, saying that this was one of the measures to rule silver out of the currency of the country, and that everything that looked toward acknowledging that silver was not money was acknowledging that all debts must be paid in gold, and for one he was unwilling to concede that.

Mr. CHITTENDEN, of New-York, advocated the measure. He spoke of the bill for the coinage of silver dollars, recently passed by the House, as a measure which was acted on pêle mêle, with scarcely an hour for debate, as if the House understood the whole question; that here was a perfectly reasonable, cautious, and statesmanlike proposition from the Senate, with which the great commercial powers of the world were in harmony. He did not understand how men of ordinary intelligence and sagacity could come here and pass on a question from blind prejudice on blind ignorance. He appealed to the common sense of the House to treat this question with manly respect.

Mr. BLAND, of Missouri, opposed the bill as one that had been got up for the purpose of delay in the remonetisation of silver. After the Silver Commission appointed by Congress should have reported, Congress would be asked to wait for the results of this proposed international conference. He was in favor of this Government taking a step first; act on its own responsibility, and then ask other nations to agree to that action. He hoped that Congress would act independently of other nations. This country had had enough of foreign dictation on the subject. It was dictation under which silver was demonetized some years ago.

Mr. O'BRIEN, of Maryland, thought it was the part of wisdom to invite a discussion which would throw light on a question on which it was agreed that there was no person able to speak with any authority. There were different opinions in regard to the propriety of making silver a standard of value. He sent to the Clerk's desk and had read a letter from Mr. Lindermann, Director of the Mint, to the effect that an international conference was indispensable in order to establish a uniform ratio of value between gold and silver.

Mr. HEWITT, of New-York, expressed his surprise that the opposition to this measure was coming from the same quarter that the advocacy of the remonetization of silver came from. They seemed to think that the pending measure was antagonistic to the plan of making silver coin a legal tender. On the contrary, if silver was again to be made a legal tender it was indispensable that there should be an agreement among the leading commercial nations of the world in order that that quality on the part of silver might be permanent, and that there might be a ratio of convertibility established between gold and silver.

Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, opposed the bill, saying that the relative value of gold and silver was controlled by the commercial interests of the country, and that, therefore, there was no necessity for a commission. All that was needed was to recognize both gold and silver as the money of the country, and the relative value of each would be regulated.

Mr. KASSON, of Iowa, advocated the measure, and asked whether the House was disposed to assert that there was no interest in the world connected with the question of gold and silver except that which was limited to the jurisdiction of the United States. The question could not be separated from the action of other Governments, because if other Governments demonetized silver a glut of silver would be thrown into the United States as would prostrate values for years. He quoted Mr. Cernucchi as stating that the safety of the bi-metallic currency depended on the co-operation of European nations.

Mr. MONROE, of Ohio, said that though he was an advocate of a double standard of value, and had voted for the restoration of the silver dollar, he would vote for the present bill, as he thought the commission which it sought to appoint would report favorably on the restoration of silver as the money of the country.

Mr. GARFIELD, of Ohio, expressed himself in favor of the measure, and referred the members to the information contained in the very valuable letter from Minister Washburne to the State Department, stating the case as now argued in the French Assembly. He asked that the letter be printed in the Record.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, opposed the measure as one in the interest of the bondholders. He was convinced that it was the result of a conspiracy between the bondholders of this and other countries against silver.

THE CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The morning hour expired without action on the bill, and the House then, at 4 o'clock, went into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. Caulfield, of Illinois, in the chair,) on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, the pending question being on the amendment offered last Saturday by Mr. Holman, of Indiana, reducing the compensation of foreign Ministers. The discussion in the committee rose without action on the amendment, and the House, at 4:30 P. M., adjourned.

THE PEERS OF SCOTLAND.

From the Scotsman, Dec. 23.

The Peers of Scotland assembled yesterday in Holyrood Palace to elect two of their number to sit in the House of Lords in room of the late Marquis of Tweeddale and Earl of Leven and Melville. Before the business of the day was entered upon, attention was called to the fact that Mr. Goodeve-Erskine, claimant to the Earldom of Mar, was sitting at the table as a Peer. The Lord Clerk-Register having stated that, in view of the recent decision of the House of Lords, he could not recognise this gentleman except as a commoner, it was moved by Lord Elphinstone and seconded by Lord Saltoun, that he be requested to leave the table, whereupon Mr. Goodeve-Erskine insisted that the decision in question only established the Earl of Kellie's right to an Earldom of Mar created in 1565, whereas it was a much older cordom that he held—himself as representing. After a good deal of discussion, in the course of which Mr. Goodeve-Erskine expressed himself as unwilling to ruffle the feelings of noble Peers by insisting on close proximity, the question of where he should sit was compromised by his drawing back a little from the table. When it was later stage of the proceedings he claimed to answer for the title of Mar, the Lord Clerk-Register refused to recognize him in that capacity, and declined to receive a protest he handed in because it bore the signature in question. Protests were also lodged as to the precedency of the Earl of Mar and Kellie, and against the recognition as Peers of the Earl of Eglinton and the Earl of Breadalbane. The result of the voting was announced to be that the Earl of Mar and Kellie and Lord Balfour, of Burleigh, were elected representative Peers. The only other Peer proposed was Lord Forthwick, and for him only three votes were given.

ACTORS AND ACTRESSES SWINDLED.

At Clerkenwell Police Court recently a number of ladies and gentlemen, professional and amateur actors, applied for advice under the following circumstances. They stated that they saw an advertisement in the public press, of which the following is a copy: "Stage.—A manager of a first-class provincial theatre has an opening for amateurs; ladies and gentlemen can at once receive good salaries; also first violin to lead, second violin, cornet, flute, and harpist. professionals. Manager, No. 278 Gray's-inn-road, W. C." In consequence of that they went to that address, and were engaged by Mr. G. Gaston Dantree and his manager, Mr. H. J. Dantree, to attend a rehearsal at the King's-cross Theatre on Tuesday last, and to open at the Woolwich Theatre next week. The salaries were stated as from £2 to £5 per week, the engagement being for three months, it being stated that the company would go to several provincial towns. The advertiser stated that he had scenery of the value of £300, and was the lessee of several provincial theatres. To insure the attendance of those who were engaged he took from them sums varying from £1 10s. to £2. On their presenting themselves for the rehearsal at the King's-cross Theatre, they were surprised to find that, though Mr. Dantree was known there, nothing was known of his whereabouts. As they considered they had been done out of their money, they had to ask the court for advice as to what they should do. The magistrate said that it was a matter for the Police to inquire into, and the applicants went to the station and made their complaint.

THE MINNESOTA DEMOCRATS.

The Minneapolis Tribune of the 4th inst. says: "A caucus held in St. Paul last night by the Democratic members of the Legislature resulted in a resolution that Congress should be invoked by millions of petitions to settle the Presidential muddle; that the President of the Senate should not be allowed to count anybody in or out, and that both houses should agree upon a plan for getting the country out of its troubles. The action of the caucus, so far as we have been able to ascertain, appears to have been temperate and judicious, and the fact that the Democratic members of the Legislature have come far voted for all the Republican caucus nominees, evinces an uncommon desire on their part to promote harmony and good will. Some of the nervous and apprehensive Republicans have come to the conclusion that all this brotherly love and gentle calm forebodes a coming storm that shall sacrifice Windom and every other good thing that cometh out of the Republican councils, but we are impressed by no such apprehension. The Democracy of Minnesota have a commendable respect for the 24,000 majority which resulted from the election of last Fall; and their leaders are, besides, a little more sensible than the average. That's all."

GUN-COTTON FOR SIGNALLING PURPOSES.

Gun-cotton, says the Pall Mall Gazette, is about to be utilized for signalling purposes by the Trinity House. On a point at the north-west of Heligeland, 105 feet above the level of high water, a fog signal has been established. When the weather is foggy an explosion of gun-cotton will take place every 15 minutes, making a report similar to that of a gun. If this experiment answers, gun-cotton will no doubt be henceforth extensively used for coast warnings; and, considering the number of naval disasters which have lately occurred owing to errors in reckoning or some other unaccountable cause, it is almost time that some attempt should be made on a new system to warn navigators against the dangers incurred by "hugging the coast" in foggy weather.

ALARM AT A FUNERAL.

The Rochester Express of Monday evening says: "Yesterday afternoon, at the funeral services of Miss Martha Volk, one of the Ashtabula victims, an accident of a serious nature came near happening. The gallery at the east end of the German Evangelical Church was packed to its utmost capacity. All at once, a slight noise was heard overhead, followed by a space of two inches appearing at one of the columns, which supports the gallery. A rush was made for the stairs, only about two feet wide, and the crowd below having heard the confusion also rushed for the doors, the whole mass meeting in a tremendous jam at the lower hall. Several gentlemen entreated the crowd to be slow, but all to no avail. After a few minutes order was restored, and the service went on."

REBELS IN RUSSIA.

It is stated from St. Petersburg that on the 18th of December a demonstration against the Russian Government was made outside the Kasan Church. Toward the close of the service several young men, apparently students, accompanied by young women, entered the building and behaved in an unseemly manner. When the service was over they assembled outside the church, and one of the young men made a speech, gave cheers for liberty, and finally waved a red flag. The others cheered, and then began to attack the Police. The public, however, interfered, and a number of arrests were

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 10—P. M.

While business on the Stock Exchange today was fairly active, the market was of that character known in street parlance as "ragged," some stocks being weak, while others, on the contrary, exhibited marked strength. Prominent among the latter was Western Union, which, opening at 72⅞, advanced with occasional fluctuations to 73⅝, and closed at the highest point of the day. The report that a strong pool are buying this stock, and intend to put it to much higher figures, is an open secret, and, indeed, the common property of Wall street; but perhaps the almost universal dissemination of this point constitutes an element of weakness in the speculation as likely to lead skeptical folk to believe that the engineers of such a movement are exhibiting a rather suspicious generosity in taking the general public into their confidence. Lake Shore, which in point of activity came next to Western Union, was weak in the forenoon, declining from 54¼ to 53½, but later recovering to the opening figure. The weakness of the stock in the early dealings was in a measure due to apprehensions

The labors of the Joint Committee on the Counting of the Electoral Vote can hardly be said to mature, though the impossibility of agreement is becoming rather more apparent. The Senate branch of the committee is said to have agreed on a plan which has been submitted to their colleagues from the House. Its essential features are, as yet, in doubt. It provides, however, that when but one set of certificates are returned from a State, and when the counting of the vote thus certified is objected to, the concurrence of both houses shall be necessary to sustain the objection. How conflicting certificates from the same State are to be dealt with does not appear. The Democrats in the House are, meanwhile, becoming doubtful of the fealty of one of their Representatives on the committee, and are talking about overruling the weak—or honest—brother by the introduction of partisans of a less scrupulous type. Their theory is that the House has the right to reject the Electoral vote of a State without the concurrence of the Senate, and, as nothing less will satisfy them, the deliberations of the joint committee would seem to be somewhat of a waste of time.

Mr. SLOAN has made very fair selections for the membership of the Assembly Committees. The list gives evidence neither of caprice, favoritism, nor pre-election bargains. It is probably the best that could be done by an honest and disinterested man compelled to deal with mixed material and conflicting interests. The leading committees are mainly composed of strong and respectable men, who may be trusted to prefer their public duty to the interests either of political cliques or of grasping corporations. The exceptional standard of character and ability which has been secured on the Committee on Cities is an earnest that the interests of New-York tax-payers will be safer in its hands than they were in the hands of its immediate predecessor.

The Tennessee Democrats have adhered to the extreme policy which guides the counsels of their party. They have rebuked the moderation of Senator KEY, whom the Governor appointed to fill the place of ANDREW JOHNSON; they have elected for the long term ISHAM G. HARRIS, who as Governor of the State basely betrayed it at the beginning of the war, and whose whole course was that of a malignant rebel. It may be remembered that his nomination as Elector at Large, in the Presidential campaign, revived a record of his disloyalty so peculiarly disgraceful that he was induced to withdraw from the field. Too infamous for a Presidential Elector, he is nevertheless good enough, in Democratic estimation, for the United States Senate, and thither he goes, to expound the Constitution and the principles that should regulate the government of the Union.

"Independent" journalists agree with Democrats in interpreting the events at New-Orleans as evidence of the "real feebleness" of the Republican Government of the State. They are nothing of the kind. They prove simply that the Louisiana Democrats, having failed in their attempts to carry the State by a system of intimidation and violence, have concentrated their forces in New-Orleans, and have succeded by brute force in acquiring temporary occupancy of certain offices, State and local. No man doubts that Gov. CHAMBERLAIN has behind him a majority of the citizens of South Carolina, yet, left to himself, he would have been powerless as against WADE HAMPTON'S organized "clubs." So it is with Gov. PACKARD. His title to the office he holds depends not upon the command of an armed force capable of vindicating his right at the point of the bayonet, but upon the vote of the State; and it is in no degree impaired by the fact that his adversaries have been enabled by the possession of arms and the advantages of military discipline to obtain control within the city. If the electoral verdict of a State may be reversed by a partisan coup d'état, our ideas of republican government need readjustment.

There is now a prospect of getting at the truth in regard to the bankrupt Continental Life Insurance Company, its condition, its management, and the intrigues that have been carried on to profit by the misfortunes of its policy-holders. It is impossible to doubt that the original proceedings by which the affairs of the company were transferred to a Receiver, appointed at the instance of a single shareholder, were intended, primarily, to avert thorough investigation, and in the next place, to facilitate the sinister schemes of parties who did not appear in court. We may now hope to have a genuine investigation in the interest of the policy-holders and the public. The public are concerned only because there are matters connected with the business and the alliances of the Continental which should be dragged to light. The policy-holders have something more tangible at stake. So far, under the Receiver, they have been ignored, and being in almost total ignorance of the position of their own funds, they have been exposed to influences that are neither scrupulous nor disinterested. Now let us have the whole truth.

The memorial of the Board of Trade of Boston, which was presented to the Senate yesterday by Mr. BOUTWELL, very properly asks for an International Convention to consider the question of "remonetizing" silver. It is not at all impossible that such a convention might be acceded to by the European countries. France is in trouble concerning her silver, which is yet a legal tender, but which she has been obliged to stop coining. England has been greatly disturbed by the effect of the changes in the value of silver upon her Indian trade. Germany, though not likely to do anything which would unsettle the public mind regarding the policy she has now definitely adopted—to use gold as the only commercial legal tender—might, nevertheless, take part in the discussion of a subject so vitally interesting to her. Austria, Russia, and Italy suffer from paper money too much to be of great importance in this connection, and Holland and Belgium would doubtless enter the convention if England and France did. But whether the convention be practicable or not, any step toward making silver a legal tender here would be a leap in the dark, with a gulf of ruin as the probable end.

The Grand Jury now in session have very properly taken cognizance of the Bennett-May duel and of the actors in that serio-comic transaction. Their proceedings have been brought to public attention by the contumacy of a witness—Dr. CHARLES PHELPS—who refused to answer certain questions touching his knowledge of the now famous encounter. Dr. PHELPS was committed to the custody of the Sheriff pending his attainment of a more communicative frame of mind, but will be brought before Judge DONOHUE to-day on a writ of habeas corpus. The Doctor's defense is that the questions propounded to him in the Grand Jury room tended to show "that he was cognizant of some alleged crime which had occurred out of the jurisdiction of the court," and that his refusal to answer was justified by the privilege of being excused from testifying to matters which might criminate himself. It will probably be found that the law affords all the protection which Dr. PHELPS can, under the circumstances, expect or demand, and that investigation into the lawless proceedings of the Bennett-May set of brawlers will not be baffled in this fashion.

THE TALK OF "COMPROMISE."

It would, perhaps, be asking too much of them, but it would certainly be satisfactory to the country if the people who are constantly urging a "compromise" regarding the Presidency would explain what they mean. It is so extremely easy to use high-sounding words, with an air of impartiality and even magnanimity about them, that a great many persons are indulging in that practice now, without knowing or trying to know what they are talking about. The Republicans, says one, should be "conciliatory;" they should be ready to "make concessions." This sounds well, and it costs nothing. If any Republican should deny it, he would be accused of being narrow and bitter and extreme. But if a request were made to define this language, and any one using it were called upon to say distinctly how the Republicans should show their conciliatory disposition, and precisely what concessions they should make, it would be found either that no answer could be made, or else that the answer practically amounts to this: that Mr. TILDEN should have the Presidency to which he has not been elected. This is so plain, and has been shown so often, that it is not unfair to infer that those who now talk of compromise do so only in the interest of Mr. TILDEN, and do not expect anything to come of it except Mr. TILDEN'S unqualified success.

As a matter of fact, we are not aware of anything which the responsible leaders and representatives of the Republican Party were fairly required to do to prove their desire for a just settlement of the Presidential dispute, that they have failed to do. There was only one question actually involved from the first, and that was which candidate had a majority of the Electors chosen according to the laws of the several States. That Mr. HAYES has a majority of the Electors no one now seriously disputes. It is objected, however, that in Louisiana, and possibly in Florida, the Republican Electors were not legally chosen. Each branch of Congress is now investigating that subject. We do not know that any man of sense objects to the Senate's doing so. It could not very well do otherwise. The House hurried off its committees without asking the co-operation of the Senate, and the Senate could not well consent to take the result of the House investigations alone. It was bound to inform itself in the premises by its own instrumentalities, and it is doing so. Meanwhile a Republican in the House proposed a committee from each branch of Congress to consider an agreement as to the mode of counting the votes, and such committees are now in session. What more could the Republicans have done? What more can they in decency be asked to do? Nothing.

But it is objected that some prominent Republicans are "giving out" that Mr. HAYES is elected and will be inaugurated "forcibly if need be." Such utterances are not common among Republicans, though they are occasionally made. The most that can be said against them is that they are unnecessary. They are certainly not unnatural, in view of the systematic vaporing which some prominent Democrats think it becoming to keep up.

As the Republicans have, up to the present time, done everything that was required of them by law or justice, so they will continue to do. They have entered with sincerity upon an attempt to come to an agreement with the Democrats as to the part to be taken by the respective houses in the counting of the vote. There is no doubt that if such an agreement is arrived at the whole party will legally abide by it whatever its consequences may be. But it need not be expected that if no agreement is reached, the Republicans in the Senate will incontinently surrender all their rights, and ask meekly to be led under the yoke by the Democrats. The Constitution confides to them certain powers, and imposes on them certain duties. What is the extent of each they will inquire with candor and conclude with fairness and moderation. But, having come to a conclusion, they will not hesitate to do whatever they believe they are required by the fundamental law to do. On the Senators lies a peculiar responsibility. They are not, as the members of the House are, the lingering representatives of a phase of popular feeling which has already passed away. They are not, as the Executive is, a mere instrument for carrying out the law as interpreted to them by others. They are the chosen representatives of the States, members of a body which does not lose its continuity, and which, by its tenure, by its numbers, and by its intimate relations with all departments of the Government, is enabled and required to act as a conservative force in our national life. It is peculiarly the business of the Senate to see that the precautions which the Constitution has provided against any confusion in the administration, any interruption of the operation of the Government, shall not fail of their purpose. And this is not a matter for trade and dicker with pretenders to the Presidency, under however specious a guise it may be presented. It is a matter to be governed solely by law, temperately and impartially interpreted, but firmly and energetically executed.

A NATIONAL TAX ON IMMIGRATION.

The bill purporting "to regulate immigration," which Mr. Cox asks the House of Representatives to adopt, is really a bill to restore as a national impost the head-money tax, which, when collected under New-York law, was declared by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional. The proceedings before the House Committee on Commerce developed the fact that support of the measure is confined to the New-York Commissioners of Emigration, to whose extravagant expenditures the judicial decision put a sudden stop; while very decided opposition proceeded from the Executive Council of the National Board of Trade, and from representatives of the Boards of Trade of Boston, Portland, Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago, and Milwaukee. Resolutions against head-money taxes on immigrants, passed by the Indianapolis Convention of 1870, and by the Baltimore Convention of 1871, were also laid before the committee. The contest is, therefore, in effect, between the advocates of a broad national policy on the subject of immigration, and the friends of the sinister policy on which the treatment of immigrants at this port has rested; and it is one in which the true interests of New-York are identified with those who resist the demands of the New-York Commissioners. The latter desire to secure for their own purposes a revenue out of all proportion to any service they render the immigrants, and they have no support outside the class of partisans who are worthily represented by Messrs. HEWITT and COX.

There was always something obnoxious in the idea of collecting money for the emigrant landing at and passing through a seaboard city. In the West the tax was especially unpopular, and it was frequently made an occasion of complaint against New-York. The condemnation of it pronounced by the Supreme Court was necessarily limited, in direct terms, to the operation of the State law. Mr. Justice MILLER, in delivering the opinion, expressed objections to the principle of a capitation tax under whatever authority it be levied. "No just rule," he remarked, "can make the citizen of France, landing from an English vessel on our shore, liable for the support of an English or Irish pauper who lands at the same time from an English vessel." The question was before the Supreme Court in another form in 1848, and one of the Judges then declared a tax of this nature to be in violation of the treaty obligations of the United States with foreign powers. It is therefore probable that the enactment of Mr. Cox's measure, or any measure akin in principle to it, would be followed by proceedings designed to test the constitutionality of the tax, and to determine, once for always, the legitimacy of the policy from which it would derive its sanction.

But we do not believe that Mr. Cox's skill or Mr. HEWITT'S influence will give to the New-York Emigration Commissioners the command of a source of revenue which is burdensome to the emigrants and the steam-ship companies, and which naturally tends to alienate from this port a very important branch of passenger traffic. The House committee has so far yielded to the opponents of the tax as to agree to its reduction from $2—the amount proposed by Mr. Cox—to $1 50. The concession is a tribute to public opinion, but it is not enough. As a matter of principle, a capitation tax is indefensible; as a matter of expediency, it is unwise. This country invites immigration, and several of the States strive energetically to promote it. Why, then, meet the immigrant with a tax for the privilege of landing on American soil? Why subject him, if he land at New-York, to the vexatious machinery of Castle Garden, and the tender mercies of a commission that exists more for partisan than public uses? If the State wish for a continuance of the nuisance, let the State pay its cost. If the National Government must deal with the subject of immigration at all, let it take into its own hands the management at the various ports, and provide out of ordinary income for the maintenance of the requisite agencies; to invite immigration and then to tax the immigrants—to extend a nominal welcome to all comers, and then to impose upon every new comer an obligation to prove that he is neither a pauper nor a thief, as Mr. Cox's bill clearly does—is as ungenerous as it is impolitic. The Democratic members from New-York will doubtless sustain the bill, in obedience to Mr. HEWITT'S orders; but the country generally only needs to be informed of its provisions to protest against its passage.

A MISTAKEN POLICY.

The recent drowning of the Shinnecock Indians on board the wreck of the Circassian has nearly extirpated what was once a large and powerful tribe. Years ago the Shinnecocks became Christianized and civilized, and have ever since steadily melted away. In like manner, the civilized Montauk Indians, who dwell in the extreme eastern part of Long Island, have dwindled to a mere score of feeble and inoffensive farmers. The American savage does not seem capable of withstanding the enervating influences of civilization, and loses his energy and his hold on existence as soon as he lays aside his barbarism. The fierce Sioux, and the wild Huntington savages are still vigorous and formidable, but the peaceful Shinnecocks and Montauks and Cattaraugus Indians are doomed to speedy extinction.

The Huntington savages, who are still as fierce and bloodthirsty as were the aborigines who massacred the feeble colonists of the last century, do not attract much attention from the public, for the reason that they keep within the bounds of their reservation. Indeed, the greater part of the people of this City are unaware that on the northern shore of Long Island, and within fifty miles of the City, there still dwells a wild and ferocious tribe of savages. Though nominally subject to the laws of the State of New-York, the Huntington savages are practically independent. Within the boundaries of Huntington our laws are totally disregarded. The tribe appears to recognize to some extent the authority of its leading medicine man, and probably professes a nominal allegiance to its chiefs, but the influence of these men does not reach the dignity of government, and interposes no real check upon the anarchy which prevails. The Huntingtonian is virtually a law unto himself, and does what seems evil, and therefore meritorious, in his own eyes. On the few occasions when the State authorities have attempted to execute State laws in the Huntington reservation, uniform failure has followed, and it is now the accepted policy of our Legislature and courts to permit the tribe to follow its own inclinations so long as no outrages are committed upon the neighboring civilized settlers.

It is only about three years ago that the Huntington savages murdered one of their number in circumstances of peculiar atrocity. The victim had shown an inclination toward civilization, and was accused of having written poetry. For this, and probably other reasons, he had earned the hatred of the fiercer members of the tribe, and he was therefore put to death with the same cruel ceremonies which are practiced by the Indians of the Plains. He was fantastically dressed, exposed to the hootings of the squaws, tortured with heated pitch, and cruelly mutilated. Had this act been perpetrated anywhere except in the Huntington reservation, the law would have been swift to avenge the murdered man; but, although two or three of the chiefs and one of the medicine men were arrested, they were finally liberated—possibly because it was thought bad policy to discourage the Huntingtonians from thinning out their numbers by mutual slaughter.

It must not be supposed that no efforts have been made to Christianize these barbarians. They have shown, however, a hostility to the good missionaries who have gone among them which has been exceedingly discouraging. Within the last month, certain earnest Methodists have been holding prayer-meetings on the reservation, and striving to touch the hard hearts of the savages. Whether those Methodists were missionaries sent forth by the Home Missionary Society, or whether they were converted Huntingtonians, is not definitely known. In either case they were certainly brave men, who deserved the respect of really brave savages. Nevertheless, they were treated with a malignant hostility which, indeed, stopped short of murder, but which must have bitterly pained their pious hearts. The young braves of the tribe entered the wigwam in which the prayer-meetings were held smoking their pipes and wearing their war paint. They interrupted the speakers with insulting remarks in their harsh native tongue. They pulled the bonnets from frightened women, and toyed with their hair as though they were about to reap it with the scalping-knife. Even some of the native women vied with their savage kinsmen and lovers in converting a religious meeting into a scene of barbarous riot. As yet the missionaries have not been mutilated or murdered, but that their lives are in daily peril no one who knows the ruthless character of the Huntingtonians can for a moment doubt.

It is clearly a mistaken policy which thus permits a chronic state of anarchy in the Huntington reservation. The Huntingtonians should be made to submit to our laws, and should be treated precisely as other inhabitants of the Commonwealth are treated. The wilder savages should be disarmed and kept in order by a strong military force, while those who show any aptitude for civilization should be provided with teachers, and protected from the hostility of their ignorant and brutal neighbors. If these savages have latterly been more turbulent than ever, it is undoubtedly because the failure to punish the murderers of the Huntington poet led them to believe that the Government is afraid of them. Now that the campaign against SITTING BULL is ended, Gen. CROOK might be sent to teach the Huntingtonians a lesson. If they cannot be kept in order on their present reservation, they should be sent to the Indian Territory, their tribal organization should be broken up, and they should be scattered among the Creeks, Choctaws, and Cherokees. Otherwise they will some day break out from the Huntington reservation, and carry tar, feathers, and slaughter among the helpless residents of Syosset, Woodbury, and other frontier towns.

ANOTHER DRAMATIC FAILURE.

Considering the extent of the preliminary advertisement of the affair, it must be confessed that Mr. TILDEN'S "uprising of the people" on Jan. 8 was a ruinous failure. If any smart dramatic agent—Mr. BOUCICAULT, for instance—had given so much preparation and so little performance, he would be drummed out of the profession. It is as though the town had been for months placarded with announcements of a great combination circus, and had been finally entertained with the performances of two or three trick mules. Gen. JACKSON fought the battle of New-Orleans on Jan. 8, and as he is in some sort a Democratic hero, the modern Democracy consider that day a Democratic holiday. So, although neither JACKSON nor the modern Democracy would be willing to recognize each other if the old hero were alive, the 8th was fixed upon as the day for the "uprising of the people." There was busy note of preparation, and an attentive listener could hear the clatter of the machinists behind the curtain. A careless scene-shifter occasionally let fall a sheet of patent thunder, or was struck by a streak of Jersey lightning, before the show began. It was to be a great day for TILDEN and Reform. The spectacle had been prepared at great expense, and an army of supernumeraries had been engaged from the vast multitude of people who "would like a nice little place without much work in it." Never was there such a flat failure. The people utterly refused to rise. The band played and the trick mules cavorted, but there was neither applause nor enthusiasm. The sheet-iron thunder rattled, and two or three Ohio Copperheads bounced up and down until they were weary. But there was no response.

There is no means of knowing what might have been the result of this demonstration, as it was intended to be called, if it had had the field to itself. If there had been a dearth of news, and people were feeling bored with a prevailing dullness, the great Tilden show of the 8th might have stood some chance. But farce always draws better than tragedy; and while the mock tragedians were dressing for the play, a party of comedians were attracting popular attention by their performances on the Delaware and Maryland line. What fatality could have induced the managers of the Bennett-May combination troupe to fix on Jan. 8 as their date of début? We do not believe that this was accidental. It was the result of a deep-laid plan to spoil Mr. TILDEN'S stage thunder and ruin his play. If PENDLETON, BEDLE, DURBIN WARD, and the rest could have had the field to themselves, they might have at least been heard of afterward. But on that disastrous day, when the curtain went up and the band began to play, everybody was asking about the duel. It does not matter that the duel was not much of a duel. It was real enough until the truth came out, and when it did come, it was too late to save the Tilden tragedy. "Was the man hit? And if so, where?" were the questions of the hour. We can imagine poor Mr. BEDLE, over in New-Jersey, trying to deliver himself of his ponderous views on the subject of counting the Electoral vote, while some eager listener broke in with, "Oh, tell us which man got the best of it." What is the use of talking chop-logic to a community that is more interested in knowing the details of a fight (which was not at all a fight) than in the details of DAVID DUDLEY FIELD'S argument? To be sure, people rushed for the newspapers on the morning of the 9th, but they did not look for "the great uprising." They had forgotten all about it. Even Mr. TILDEN, who, according to the Express, is "full of a certain subject," must have unloosened his waistband and read the account of the duel. For a moment, let us hope, he forgot his own private woes in the contemplation of those of other men.

Nevertheless, when the great Democratic Reformer roused himself to the situation he must have been disgusted. His grand drama had failed because people were busy talking about something else. Even the enthusiastic reports circulated at the Liberty Street Bureau, were crowded out of the Democratic newspapers by accounts of "the great duel." It was in vain that Mr. JOHN G. THOMPSON offered to disguise his hundred thousand office-seekers in shirts of mail as deputy sergeants at arms. It was in vain that cut-and-dried resolutions were read over the heads of the listless Democracy. Their eyes were with their thoughts, and they were far away on the Delaware line. We do not credit the report that Mr. TILDEN, when he heard that the duel was to take place on the 8th, wrote to one of the principals imploring him to put it off one day. It is very certain that such a request would have been acceded to with alacrity. If Mr. TILDEN had only asked it, the duel would have been postponed indefinitely—and "glad to oblige you" thrown into the bargain. But the ex-Governor has missed his chance. Jan. 8 comes but once a year, and it is useless for him to attempt another great uprising of the people.

NOTES FROM AUSTRALIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 10.—The Pacific Mail chartered steam-ship Zealandia, from Sydney via. Auckland and Honolulu, arrived here to-day, bringing the British mails. The Sydney Herald says the notorious slaver, the brig Carl, was wrecked at Bluff Harbor, South Australia. The South Australian Register says that a contract has been entered into with the Ketterland India Steam Navigation Company for the establisment of a mail service between Port Adelaide, Port Darwin, and Batavia, the South Australian and Java Government to pay an annual subsidy. The shipment of California salmon ova has resulted in a complete success. New discoveries of argentiferous lodes are reported.

ELECTION OF RAILROAD DIRECTORS.

NEW-HAVEN, Jan. 10.—At the annual meeting of the New-York, New-Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, held here to-day, the old Board of Directors was re-elected, with the exception that the name of William H. Vanderbilt takes the place of Cornelius Vanderbilt, deceased. The following is the ticket: William D. Bishop, Edward M. Reed, Wilson G. Hunt, George N. Miller, Chester W. Chapin, A. R. Van Nest, Henry C. Robinson, E. H. Trowbridge, Nathaniel Wheeler, C. M. Pond, Augustus Schell, George H. Watrous, W. H. Vanderbilt.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET.

PORT ROYAL, Jan. 10.—The Russian corvette Bogatin, 2,100 tons, Capt. Chafreff, 315 men, has arrived here. She will coal to-morrow and proceed to Hampton Roads.

WASHINGTON.

DANGER ON THE TEXAS BORDER.

THE CONDITION OF AFFAIRS ALONG THE RIO GRANDE—DESPERADOES AND OUTLAWS READY TO PLUNDER—THE GOVERNMENT APPEALED TO FOR PROTECTION—AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN HELD AS A HOSTAGE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Government is again in frequent receipt of information of a most disorderly and dangerous condition of affairs along the Rio Grande, caused by the violent acts of Mexican outlaws. It seems that they are plundering and pillaging at will again, and preventing the execution of the revenue laws, and keeping up a reign of terror all along the Texas border. A letter received to-day at the Treasury Department from S. A. Slade, Special Deputy Collector of Customs at El Paso, Texas, making application for guards to protect the Government property at that place, says: "Northern Mexico is now in a state of revolution and anarchy, filled with desperadoes and outlaws only waiting an opportunity for general plunder. The absence of troops here will embolden them, and leave us at their mercy on the one side and the Indians on the other. Col. Andrews is now at Presidio del Norte, in this district, with 100 men and two field-pieces, for the purpose of releasing from the hands of Mexican outlaws one Miller, an American gentleman, who is held by them for ransom, the sum of $80,000 being demanded. El Paso, Mexico, just opposite us, is filled with suspicious characters, mounted and armed, flying about the country from one side of the river to the other, apparently waiting for some preconcerted method of action, and it is confidently believed that the presence of troops here has prevented them from committing depredations and open acts of violence." The same letter states that the Collector at El Paso has gone to Presidio del Norte to give such instructions and take such precautions for the protection of the Government's interests as the exigencies require. An incendiary pronunciamento, in Spanish, from the Mexican General, Diaz, is inclosed with the letter, and the statement made that its circulation has caused much excitement, and that all business is suspended. Ample precautions are being taken by the Government to protect the rights and interests of its citizens along the Rio Grande, in case of an actual outbreak in Mexico, and to prevent any acts of violence to the people along the border. It is believed here that there are already troops enough in the garrisons along the river to prevent any serious acts of lawlessness on the part of the Mexican banditti.

THE REVISED STATUTES.

THE HOUSE BILL UNDER CONSIDERATION IN THE SENATE—THE WORK OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE—THE NUMBER OF ACTUAL ERRORS DISCOVERED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Senate spent a long session to-day in considering the bill correcting errors and omissions in the compilation of the Revised Statutes. About two-thirds of the House bill was gone over and its propositions concurred in, and it is intended to finish the bill to-morrow. At the beginning of this Congress the Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws had before it from the departments and in letters from importers and other citizens about 2,000 supposed errors in the Revised Statutes. A careful examination was first made by the committees separately, and afterward by both committees acting jointly. It was discovered in this manner that the number of actual errors, omissions, and repetitions, was only 182. In cases where the new language used was capable of two constructions the joint committee rejected it, and inserted instead the language of the original statute. The bill passed the House last June.

THE DISQUALIFIED ELECTORS.

THE OREGON CASE—COL. W. T. PELTON TO BE SUMMONED BEFORE THE COMMITTEE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The committee examining the Oregon frauds has issued a subpœna for Col. William T. Pelton. He has not displayed that alacrity and desire for explanation which would indicate any wish to be more favorably regarded than if judged by the testimony as it now stands. The committee will be compelled in his case as well as in others to examine an unwilling witness.

GEN. FROST, OF MISSOURI, SUMMONED BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE—NO TESTIMONY TAKEN IN THE OREGON CASE.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections met this morning, and, at the suggestion of Senator Kernan, ordered that Gen. D. M. Frost, of St. Louis, be subpœnaed to appear before them to testify in relation to his [Frost's] alleged ineligibility as a Presidential Elector. Mr. Frost was chosen Presidential Elector, on the Democratic ticket, for the Third Missouri District at the late election. When the Missouri Electoral College met the Republican candidate for Elector for the Third District, Mr. Stifel, appeared and demanded that he be allowed to cast a vote for President and Vice President of the United States, as Gen. Frost, the only person who had received more votes than he, [Stifel,] for the office of Presidential Elector for the Third District, was ineligible, but he was refused. Gen. Frost is a graduate of the West Point Academy, and served in the United States Regular Army until the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, when he entered the Confederate service, and the Missouri Republicans claim that the political disabilities which Gen. Frost incurred by his service in the Confederate Army have never been removed, and therefore he was ineligible to the office of Presidential Elector. Gen. Frost was not present at the meeting of the Electoral College, and the vacancy caused by his absence was filled by the other Electors.

No testimony was taken by the committee to-day in relation to the Oregon Electoral matter. To-morrow Charles Dimon, the New-York banker, who telegraphed the $8,000 check from New-York to Oregon on the 6th of December last, will appear before the committee with his letter and account books, for the purpose of showing what correspondence and what business transactions have taken place between himself and parties in Oregon since November last. Mr. Turner, the contumacious witness, (telegraph operator,) will appear before the committee either to-morrow or Friday, for further examination.

THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE LIBRARIAN—ACCUMULATIONS OF THE PAST YEAR—NECESSARY IMPROVEMENTS FOR THE PRESERVATION OF THE COLLECTIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The annual report of the Librarian of Congress, submitted to-day to the Joint Committee on the Library, shows that the number of bound books in the library at the present time is 311,097, and of pamphlets, 100,000. There were added to the library last year 17,390 bound volumes and 8,636 pamphlets, besides an increase of the law library by 3,211 volumes—giving the law library a total of 37,727 volumes. There were also added to the library 2,445 maps and charts. The additions to the library during the past year have been more than usually important, embracing many acquisitions of early American imprint. The business of the Copyright Department during the year shows a considerable increase of entries. The whole number of entries for the 12 months of 1876 was 14,882, against 14,197 for the preceding calendar year.

The materials for a new general catalogue of the library, and embracing over 200,000 titles, have been prepared and are ready for the press, but no appropriation has been made for the expense of printing. The importance of its immediate publication is adverted to, as it will represent the entire contents of the library up to date. The present arrangement of catalogues renders it necessary to consult 12 volumes to ascertain if any particular book is in the library. During the past year the publication of the first volume of the original historical documents relative to the French discoveries and explorations in the north-western portion of the United States and on the Mississippi has been made. The whole work will contain six octavo volumes, and will cover a vast collection of letters, official papers, and other documents in the original French, relating to discoveries and settlements under Chevalier de Lasalle, and other explorers in territory now belonging to the United States, from A. D. 1614 to 1752.

The question of most pressing importance connected with the interests of the library of Congress, referred to by the Librarian, is the providing of a suitable building to contain its rapidly-accumulating stores. After referring to his previous reports, and to the report made by the Joint Committee on the Library last session, recommending an appropriation of $150,000 for commencing the construction of a library building, Mr. Spofford says: "The whole subject is again earnestly commended to the early attention of the committee, with the single remark that the injury to books, bound newspapers, and objects of art, which are piled in unprovided with shelves or room, is constantly increasing with every addition, while the difficulties and embarrassments attending the administration of the library and the copyright business of the country within such narrow quarters are such as would not be tolerated for a single season in any first-class business-house in any city of the country. The undersigned cannot doubt that the committee will agree with him in the belief that the people of the country stand ready to sanction any wise expenditure necessary to protect and preserve these great collections of a nation's literature and art, which are intrusted to the immediate care and responsibility of the representatives of the people."

THE VENEZUELA CLAIMS.

A REHEARING ASKED FOR—REPLY OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE—THE REQUEST EARNESTLY OPPOSED.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—It appears from official documents that the Government of Venezuela some time ago expressed a desire to our own Government to have a rehearing of the cases of the claims adjudicated by the Commission and Umpire against Venezuela. It was further stated that the Venezuelan Government would treat the convention, though its limitation had expired, as if it were still in existence, and therefore a new one need not be negotiated, and would agree that a competent commission be appointed by both Governments, and that Venezuela would continue the payment of the former awards in installments, on condition that the money should not be distributed to American citizens, but held on deposit for the payment of claims hereafter to be considered just. Venezuela asked for a rehearing, not for delaying payments, but because of the fraudulent character of many of the claims, and the corrupt proceedings of the commission, and, above all, because the confidence of both countries was abused and betrayed by it. Several days ago Secretary Fish wrote to the Venezuelan Minister expressing his regret at the persistency with which the Venezuelan Government sought to avoid its accountability in the matter of the awards. It said that in the convention between the two Governments every customary and practicable precaution was taken to insure fair dealing. Not only was one of the two Commissioners a Venezuelan citizen, but the representative of the Emperor of Russia in Washington was selected the Umpire made choice for that trust of a citizen of that republic also. The adjustment of claims in the manner provided for in the convention of 1866 has hitherto been regarded as a method which, while it secures substantial justice, was the means of putting an end to irritating discussions between the two Governments, and thus strengthening their good understanding. Perhaps in no instance has such an adjustment been entirely satisfactory to both parties. If the application should now be granted it would make a precedent most inconvenient for the future, and would sooner or later either put a bar upon the settlement by the means resorted to between the United States and Venezuela of claims against foreign Governments, or would require their payment to be exacted otherwise than by peaceful adjudication.

The greater part of the claims for the proceeds of captured and abandoned cotton and other property not barred by statute were ascertained by judgments, and the recoveries of claimants thereon in the Court of Claims, from the year 1867 to 1876 inclusive, the total being $11,530,939. Most of the pending suits, brought after the time limited by statute, involve claims in the aggregate amounting to $12,000,000. Of the many other claims apparently pending no action had been taken for a long time, and therefore the Assistant Attorney-General moved to dismiss them for want of prosecution. There were 2,196 suits. The motion was granted in 1,190 cases, and 1,217 were dismissed by consent of claimants. The aggregate of claims thus disposed of was $13,138,686.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Secretary of the Treasury to-day issued the thirty-seventh call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865, May and November. The call is for $10,000,000, of which $7,000,000 are coupon bonds and $3,000,000 registered bonds. The principal and accrued interest will be paid at the Treasury on and after the 10th of April next, and the interest on the bonds will cease on that day. The following are the descriptions of the bonds:

Coupon Bonds.—$100, No. 17,001 to 21,350 inclusive; $500 No. 22,101 to 26,700 inclusive; $1,000, No. 53,301 to 62,400 inclusive. Total, $7,000,000.

Registered Bonds.—$50, No. 201 to 300 inclusive; $100, No. 3,451 to 4,500 inclusive; $500, No. 2,751 to 3,250 inclusive; $1,000, No. 10,001 to 12,000 inclusive; $5,000, No. 4,151 to 4,750 inclusive; $10,000, No. 5,151 to 5,200 inclusive. Total, $3,000,000.

The case of W. H. Ottman, who was indicted with Halleck for complicity in the $47,000 Treasury robbery in June, 1875, was called up in the Criminal Court, to-day, for a new trial, on motion of Ottman's counsel. The Judge decided that the indictment was imperfect, and the case was dismissed. But Ottman is still held, the case going to the jury for a new indictment. The defect was only in one count of the indictment, the several other counts being valid, and the District Attorney decided to send the case to the Grand Jury for a new indictment. It thus goes over to the March Term of the court.

William L. Campbell, of Colorado, to be Surveyor General for the District of Colorado, and John G. Clark, of Wisconsin, for the District of Dakota; James Lindsay, of Wisconsin, to be Register at Ironton, Missouri, and the following Postmasters: S. M. Jamison, at Reno, Nevada; J. W. Repher, at Manhattan, Kan.; H. H. Aplin, at Wenona, Mich.; Benjamin Swarzey, at Pekin, Ill.; C. E. Allen, at Lancaster, N. H., and Mary J. Rockafellow, at Mechanicsburg, Penn.

The House Committee on Pacific Railroads met to-day for the purpose of taking action on the bill in aid of the construction of a Southern transcontinental railroad, commonly known as the "Compromise Texas Pacific Railroad bill," which was reported from the Sub-committee yesterday. The full committee adopted nearly all of this report, with very few amendments, but before concluding its consideration or taking a final vote upon the proposition as a whole, the session was interrupted by the meeting of the House, and the matter went over until to

ALBANY.

THE COMMITTEES ANNOUNCED.

THE SEVERAL HOUSE COMMITTEES—THE MORE PROMINENT CHAIRMANSHIPS—LESS DISSATISFACTION THAN EVER BEFORE—SESSION OF BOTH HOUSES—A FLOOD OF NEW BILLS, REPORTS, AND PETITIONS—BETTING ON ELECTIONS AND POOL-SELLING.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1877.

There was no thin House this morning. Every member was in his seat, anxious to hear what places he had been given on the committees. The reading of the list was the first business done. The final revision had been perfected late last night, and some changes made which had set to hard guessing those who indulged in that amusement, and thrown all into a state of uncertainty. The reading occupied nearly half an hour, and as might be expected, amid profound silence. At the conclusion of the reading, Mr. Alvord, rising to a question of privilege, asked to be excused from serving as Chairman of the Committee upon Rules; but the question being put to the House, the old veteran was not excused, and that by a strong vote. Mr. Brown, of Cayuga, was excused at his own request from serving as Chairman of the Committee on Game Laws. The committees are as follows:

On Ways and Means.—Messrs. Husted of Westchester, Alvord of Onondaga, Hogeboom of Columbia, Post of Cayuga, Hayes of New-York, J. G. Graham of Orange, Cozans of New-York, Bradley of Kings, Maynard of Delaware.

On the Judiciary.—Messrs. Strahan of New-York, Hogeboom of Columbia, Hepburn of St. Lawrence, Gilbert of Franklin, Santee of Steuben, Laughlin of New-York, Ruggles of Steuben, Piper of Niagara, H. H. Rockwell of Chemung.

On Affairs of Cities.—Messrs. Fish of Putnam, Smith of Onondaga, J. S Graham of Monroe, Cowdin of New-York, Stephenson of Kings, Corsa of New-York, Mitchell of New-York, McGroarty of Kings, Tabor of Erie.

On Railroads.—Messrs. Gilbert of Franklin, S. Baldwin of Allegany, Billings of Orleans, Bowen of Clinton, Morey of Livingston, Pay of Fulton and Hamilton, O'Hare of New-York, Herrick of Albany, Moller of Westchester.

On General Laws.—Messrs. Hogeboom of Columbia, Post of Cayuga, T. A. Case of Chautauqua, Lang of St. Lawrence, Backenstose of Ontario, Peck of Oswego, Davenport of Otsego, Weiant of Rockland, Purdy of Westchester.

On Canals.—Messrs. Baker of Washington, Gallagher of Erie, Alvord of Onondaga, Sheldon of Madison, G. M. Case of Oswego, Moore of Onondaga, Spinola of New-York, Bissell of Niagara, Curran of Albany.

On Commerce and Navigation.—Messrs. Webb of Dutchess, Hayes of New-York, Gere of Tioga, Suydam of Kings, Keator of Ulster, Filkins of Rensselaer, Sloan of New-York, Shanley of Kings, Brick of Richmond.

On Insurance.—Messrs. J. G. Graham of Orange, Cowdin of New-York, Husted of Westchester, Lang of St. Lawrence, Skinner of Jefferson, Moody of Broome, Weiant of Rockland, Coulter of New-York, Floyd Jones of Queens.

On Banks.—Messrs. McKee of Herkimer, S. Baldwin of Allegany, Cowdin of New-York, E. Case of Oneida, Clapp of Essex, M. L. Baldwin of Yates, Galvin of New-York, Childs of Seneca, Rice of Lewis.

On Internal Affairs.—Messrs. Buren of Clinton, Hammond of Dutchess, Hodges of Monroe, Spicer of Jefferson, McGraw of Cortlandt, Valentine of Wayne, Nachtmann of New-York, Langner of Erie, W. L. Rockwell of Monroe.

On Affairs of Villages.—Messrs. Noyes of Saratoga, F. A. Case of Chautauqua, Billington of Madison, Brillman of Cheuango, Welsh of Delaware, Barnes of Otsego, Wemple of Montgomery, Durland of Orange, Bulner of Queens.

On Roads and Bridges.—Messrs. Gallagher of Erie, Billings of Orleans, Waddell of Warren, Potter of Washington, Corbett of Oneida, Williams of Chautauqua, Galvin of New-York, Proper of Columbia, Humphrey of Greene.

On Public Printing.—Messrs. Skinner of Jefferson, Suydam of Kings, Clark of Wyoming, Marvin of Kings, Clapp of Essex, Moore of Oneida, Holaham of New-York, Neilson of Saratoga, Sanders of Schenectady.

On Public Health.—Messrs. McFalls of St. Lawrence, Gnick of Schuyler, Hammond of Dutchess, Stephenson of Kings, King of Cattaraugus, Billington of Madison, Langner of Erie, Grady of New-York, Lougyear of Ulster.

On Charitable and Religious Societies.—Messrs. Hepburn of St. Lawrence, McKee of Herkimer, Backenstose of Ontario, Marvin of Kings, Wickes of Tompkins, Keator of Ulster, Lyon of Kings, Hamilton of Ulster, Maher of Albany.

On Public Education.—Messrs. Smith of Onondaga, Hodges of Monroe, Orr of Erie, Taylor of Genesee, Peck of Oswego, Winch of Ontario, Lyon of Kings, O'Hare of New-York, Ecclesine of New-York.

On Militia.—Messrs. Gere of Tioga, Shannon of Cattaraugus, Clark of Wyoming, Waddell of Warren, Herbst of Onondaga, Welsh of Delaware, Spinola of New-York, J. H. Brown of Schoharie, Flecke of New York.

On Claims.—Messrs. Shannon of Cattaraugus, Gnilck of Schuyler, J. S. Brown of Cayuga, F. Case of Oneida, M. L. Baldwin of Yates, Thistlethwaite of Wayne, Dillmeier of Kings, M. Healy of New-York, Crowley of Erie.

On Federal Relations.—Messrs. Lang of St. Lawrence, Baker of Washington, Fish of Putnam, Gilbert of Franklin, G. M. Case of Oswego, Cofra of New-York, J. Healey of New-York, Hamilton of Ulster, Grady of New-York.

On Privileges and Elections.—Messrs. Morey of Livingston, Husted of Westchester, Strahan of New-York, Backenstoze of Ontario, Barnes of Otsego, Cozans of New-York, W. L. Rockwell of Monroe.

Graham of Monroe, Langbein of New-York, Holaham of New-York, McGroarty of Kings, Humphrey of Greene, Keator of Ulster, Stephenson of Kings, Potter of Washington, Sanders of Schenectady, Rice of Lewis, Stone of Oneida, Gere of Tioga, Davenport of Otsego, J. S. Brown of Cayuga, Gallagher of Erie, Clark of Wyoming.

The general sentiment in respect to the committees as a whole seems to be satisfactory. Perhaps it would be more correct to say that there is less dissatisfaction than usual, for no committee list ever made up could give complete satisfaction. About two-thirds of the members desire to be made Chairmen, and if they are not, they believe that their merits have been more or less slighted. The Committee of Ways and Means, of which Mr. Husted is Chairman, as anticipated, is a strong one, including some of the best men in the House. "Honest Dan" Bradley, of Kings, finds a place on it as a just recognition of his sturdy integrity and independence of character. Mr. Strahan retains his place as Chairman of the Judiciary, a fact which caused some remark; but the Speaker was always favorably inclined to him. Judge Hogeboom also retains his place as Chairman of General Laws; Baker, of Washington, has the Canal Committee, for which he was an anxious aspirant; Mr. Fish retains the Chairmanship of Cities, which was expected. The Committees on Railroads, Insurance, and Banks are headed respectively by Mr. Gilbert, of Franklin; Mr. J. G. Graham, of Orange, and Mr. McKee, of Herkimer. These are all excellent appointments, and the committees are made up so that they are neither the servants nor the enemies of the special interests they have to deal with. They are described as "iron-clad." Mr. Post, of Cayuga, has the Chairmanship of the Committee on State Prisons. Mr. Post has made a study of the subject, has done excellent service to the State in connection with the government of the Elmira Reformatory, and is well satisfied with his appointment. The ancient Spinola turns up on the Committee on Military Affairs, and on Rules, appointments which are looked upon as a grim joke on the part of Mr. Sloan. Some of the Democrats are dissatisfied because neither New-York nor Brooklyn has a Democratic representative on the Judiciary Committee. A little unfavorable comment has been made on the virtual ignoring of Dr. Hayes. Dr. Hayes is, beyond question, one of the most talented men in the House, and on many subjects which come before it has a wider, deeper, and more accurate knowledge than any other member even pretends to have. So far as Mr. Sloan is concerned, it is universally conceded that he has made up his committee list solely in the interests of good legislation.

Under the call of counties, there was a rush of bills this morning. Mr. Husted presented, at the request of Secretary of State Bigelow, a bill appropriating the sum of $30,000 for the completion of the tabulation of the census, and explaining that unless the bill be passed before the 15th, this work would have to stop. He asked that the bill might have its third reading at once. Mr. Alvord immediately rose and objected, for he said he had been informed that the clerks who should have been employed upon the census tables, had been employed on something else. "If that is the case," said Mr. Husted, "I withdraw my request." So the bill went to the Ways and Means Committee, with instructions to report at the earliest possible time.

Mr. Neilson, of Saratoga, has a short bill to enable every female over the age of 21 years, resident of any incorporated village, and owning property liable to taxation in it, to vote upon all questions of raising money by tax in such village.

"Dan" Bradley comes up again with his bill, defeated after a hard struggle last year, to set apart for the exclusive use of canal-boats, all that part of the water adjacent to the wharves of the City of New-York, from the east side of Pier No. 2 to and including the west side of Pier No. 10 East River. The trouble with this bill.—a veteran in the Legislature—is that it touches certain privileges of the New-York Central Railroad, which company fights it successfully every year.

That fruitful source of trouble, the Morningside Park, was the subject of another bill, introduced in the Assembly. It authorizes and directs the Controller "to pay for any work, services, or materials furnished or to be furnished under any contract or contracts for improving the streets and avenues, or either of them, upon and bordering Morningside Park, by the construction of roadways, &c., which have been or may be adopted by the Department of Public Parks." The Controller is authorized to issue assessment bonds for the amounts necessary. The second section of the bill gives all the lands embraced within the park, and the streets and avenues bordering upon it, into the exclusive control of the Park Department. A similar bill has been introduced in the Senate.

Mr. Ecclesine, of New-York, signalized his advent to the Assembly this morning by offering a resolution requiring the District Attorney of New-York to report to the House the number of indictments in his office, the number untried, and the reasons why they had not been tried. As soon as the Clerk read it, Mr. Fish and Mr. Strahan were on their feet to debate the resolution, which thereby went over under the rule. The report of the Bank Superintendent, of the State Board of Charities, and some minor documents were presented to the House.

By an unfortunate disarrangement of the types in the Albany correspondence of THE TIMES to-day, Mr. Cowdin and Gen. Spinola were very ludicrously confounded. Mr. Cowdin introduced his bank-tax bill, and Gen. Spinola made another splurge in debate, besides attempting, out of order, to call up his resolution in relation to the debt of New-York. It unluckily happened that Mr. Cowdin also has a resolution pending on the same subject, which made the disarrangement referred to worse than it would otherwise have been. It is, of course, not to be supposed that Mr. Cowdin made himself a nuisance to everybody, or even an ass of himself. These remarks referred to Spinola.

The first of the list of bills which may be expected to be introduced this session, to prevent betting on elections, pool selling, &c., made its appearance to-day. Section 2, of article 2, of the State Constitution, as amended in 1874, makes the acceptance or offering of a bribe for a vote, exclusion from the right of suffrage, but nothing beyond this. The bill referred to provides in its first section that in addition to the penalties now provided by law, any person who shall be convicted of bribery or accepting a bribe, shall be adjudged guilty of a felony, and may be excluded from the right of suffrage for not less than three nor more than 10 years. The second section is aimed at pool selling, for which the penalties are sufficiently severe. Any person who voluntarily becomes interested in a bet upon the result of an election is adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and the wager is made forfeit to the county. Any person who acts as a stakeholder is guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be fined, at the discretion of the court, any sum not exceeding $500, and imprisoned for any period not exceeding one year. The third section of the bill relates to giving evidence in these cases. It will be seen that if this bill, or a similar one, becomes law, the mere act of selling a pool would work a forfeiture of the moneys to the county, subject the person who buys to the penalty of imprisonment and disfranchisement, and the stakeholder to fine and imprisonment.

SENATE.

The standing committees of the Senate were announced by Senator Robertson, and are the same as last year, with the exception that Mr. Prince is made Chairman of Commerce and Navigation, in place of Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Wagstaff and Mr. Sprague are assigned to the same places on the other committees that were held by Senator Booth, deceased, and Mr. Rogers, resigned.

Senator Wagstaff introduced a bill for the abatement of nuisances by Boards of Health in incorporated cities. It is the same bill that was before the previous Legislature, but failed to pass for lack of time in the last days of the session, and is designed more especially to reach the Hunter's Point nuisances, whose effluvia finds its way to Murray Hill. A like bill has been introduced into the House.

Senator Kennaday introduced a bill to facilitate proof in courts of this State of the existence of corporations in other States and Territories. It provides that an exemplified copy of the certificate of incorporation shall be prima facie evidence of the existence of a corporation.

The Senate held an executive session, but nothing was done beyond the confirmation of a few notaries. The Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs being absent, no report was made on the nomination of Capt. Wiley for the post of Commissary General, in place of Kilbourn Knox, but it is said that the nomination will be confirmed at the next executive session.

AMUSEMENTS.

BRIEF MENTION.

During this month only, season tickets admitting to the Aquarium will be sold at reduced rates. Students and naturalists ought to bear the fact in mind.

The twelfth annual Christmas-tide festival concert for the Orpheon Free School Fund is to be given at Chickering Hall, to-morrow evening. It will be, as heretofore, under the direction of Mr. Jerome Hopkins.

A new and original comedy from the pen of Mr. Leonard Grover will be produced in a fortnight at the Park Theatre. It is entitled "Our Boarding-house," and its success in San Francisco and in Chicago has been very marked.

The concert complimentary to Miss Thursby, reference to which has already been made in this place, occurs at Chickering Hall, this evening. Miss Thursby is to have the co-operation of Mr. Richard Hoffman, Miss Finch, and the male quartet of the English Glee Club.

The distribution of rôles in "The Lady of Lyons," to be represented at the Fifth Avenue Theatre on Saturday afternoon and evening, is as follows: Claude, Mr. Coghlan; Pauline, Miss Davenport; Col. Damas, Mr. Hardenberg; Beauséant, Mr. Henry Crisp; Glavis, Mr. Ringgold; Mme. Deschappelles, Mrs. Gilbert; the Widow Melnotte, Miss Mary Wells.

THE BENNETT-MAY DUEL.

ALL CONNECTED WITH IT AFRAID OF ARREST.

MR. BENNETT IN THE CITY, BUT NOT VISIBLE—HIS FRIENDS AND MR. MAY'S MORE RETICENT THAN EVER—THE PERSONS CONNECTED WITH THE DUEL TO BE SUMMONED BEFORE THE GRAND JURY—MR. BENNETT'S PROBABLE INTENTIONS.

Mr. Bennett was closeted at his house all day yesterday, and was visible only to his most intimate friends. To all inquiries the servants returned the stereotyped answer "not at home," and although their stories as to their employer's whereabouts during the day differed widely, on the point of his absence from the house they were unanimous and emphatic. One of them admitted that his master had been at home at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, but had gone out an hour later, he did not know whither. Other visitors were told that Mr. Bennett was at his club, and still others that he was out of town. In the evening the reception room on the ground floor was lighted, and a dim light was observed in Mr. Bennett's apartment on the second floor.

At the clubs the members were generally disinclined to talk on the subject of the duel, the committal of Dr. Phelps having evidently thrown cold water on the sentimental side of the affair. It is generally claimed that May received a slight flesh wound during the encounter, and that the failure of the combatants to puncture each other more effectually was due to the novelty of their position and the unusual distance—20 paces—between them. There seems to be little doubt that the pistols were loaded with bullets, although the fact has been recalled that a mock bullet of some easily pulverized substance has been sometimes palmed upon bloodthirsty principals by their more humane seconds. The difficulty, however, of hitting a man at a distance of 20 yards with a hair-trigger pistol, leveled and fired at the word, is considered sufficient to account for the bad marksmanship of both parties. The chief subject of discussion among the club men now is the upshot of the present legal proceedings against all the persons implicated in the affair. The rumor that Mr. Bennett intends to evade prosecution by sailing for Europe is not generally credited, although some profess to think that this will be his next move. It is thought, however, that such a course, if taken, would only cover both "duellists" with additional ridicule, and make them the "laughing-stock" of the town for a long period. It is more probable that Mr. Bennett will remain in retirement for a short time, and then appear in his usual haunts, without exciting much comment, and that any danger of prosecution will eventually "blow over." On Tuesday night and yesterday morning it was rumored that Mr. Bennett would start for Europe on the steam-ship Parthia yesterday. The report proved to be a mere canard, however. The gatekeeper at the Cunard docks stated to a TIMES reporter that the passengers of the Parthia arrived at the dock at 1 o'clock and shortly afterward, and that neither Mr. Bennett, Mr. May, nor their friends were among them. He further stated that there were no parties among the passengers unusually "muffled up," or appearing in any way to desire to avoid public recognition.

No information could be obtained at the Union Club. The members there appeared to be in a state of consternation. Many of them have been summoned to appear as witnesses before the Grand Jury, and as a consequence are mute as to what they know. It is apparently their belief that they are bound in honor not to reveal their knowledge under any circumstances, and it is likely that to-day they will emulate the conduct of Dr. Phelps before the Grand Jurors. Those members of the club whose names have not yet appeared in the newspapers were, if possible, more determined to be silent last night than their comrades. The general intention of the members with regard to furnishing information was well expressed by a relative of the May family, who said to a TIMES reporter, very courteously: "My dear Sir, I know nothing definitely; but I assure you that if I did know anything I would not tell it to you. I am now summoned before the Grand Jury, and don't like the call." Mr. Lawrence Jerome said: "I don't know anything certain about the affair, except that Mr. Bennett was in the City today. Where Mr. May is I can't tell, nor can I say that he is wounded. The fact is, the duel is over and we have given up talking about it. If I were one of the principals I would pack up my valise and go to Jersey, to remain until I got ready to deliver myself up."

No information could be procured at the residence of Dr. May. The invariable response to the query of callers was "The doctor is not in." Mr. Frederick W. May, of Baltimore, who acted as second to his cousin, was at Dr. May's house last night. As several other relatives called and remained there a long time, it is presumed there was a family council over the unfortunate occurrences of the past week, and to decide upon future action.

IMPORTANT LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

DR. CHARLES PHELPS, MR. BENNETT'S SURGEON, SUMMONED BEFORE THE GRAND JURY—HE DECLINES TO ANSWER CERTAIN QUESTIONS REGARDING THE DUEL AND IS COMMITTED FOR CONTEMPT.

A not unforeseen outcome of the Bennett-May duel was witnessed in some proceedings before Judge Gildersleeve in the Court of General Sessions yesterday, when Dr. Charles Phelps, who accompanied Mr. Bennett on his dueling trip, was committed for contempt of court in refusing to answer certain questions put to him by the Grand Jury in regard to the affair. It seems that the Grand Jury of the General Sessions had brought to their official notice the statements in regard to the duel, and were inspired with a desire to carry out the law on the subject, and teach the parties—to quote Hudibras—

"The perils that environ
The man who meddles with cold iron."

Acting with this object in view they summoned before them Dr. Phelps yesterday. This gentleman made his appearance in the Grand Jury room and was questioned by the foreman of the jury in regard to the duel. The inquiries which he declined to answer were:

Q.—From Philadelphia where did you go?

Q.—After leaving New-York on Sunday evening did you see J. G. Bennett before you saw him in Philadelphia on Monday evening?

Q.—When did you last see him?

Q.—Do you know if any hostile meeting has occurred between Mr. Bennett and Mr. May?

Q.—Did you come to Philadelphia in company with J. G. Bennett?

Q.—After leaving New-York on Sunday last, when and where did you see Mr. Bennett?

Q.—At whose request or intervention did you leave New-York on Sunday morning?

Dr. Phelps declined to answer any of these questions. The foreman of the Grand Jury thereupon called in the District Attorney, who propounded the same questions to Dr. Phelps, but with no better result. The witness was then taken before Judge Gildersleeve, to whom the questions asked of the witness were submitted for decision. Judge Gildersleeve, after careful examination, announced that the witness was bound to answer the questions, and he directed the Grand Jury to take the Doctor back to their room and repeat their interrogatories. An attorney who appeared for Dr. Phelps contended that the witness should not be compelled to answer any questions that might criminate himself, but the Judge directed the examination to proceed. In a few minutes the Grand Jury returned with Dr. Phelps, and announced that the witness still refused to answer the questions asked. Judge Gildersleeve said that in view of the action of Dr. Phelps, he had no other alternative than to order him to be committed for contempt. His Honor then directed that Dr. Phelps be taken into custody, and the witness was removed by the officers of the court. Not having been convicted of any crime, the prisoner could not be held by the officers of the court, and was therefore handed over to the custody of Deputy Sheriff McGonigal. Dr. Phelps sent immediately for A. Oakey Hall, and held a long consultation with him. Mr. Hall drew up a petition for a writ of habeas corpus and the writ itself, and went before Judge Donohue, to whom he presented the petition. Judge Donohue, after reading it, signed the writ of habeas corpus, which was made returnable in Supreme Court, Chambers, at 9 A. M. to-day. The following is the text of the petition presented to Judge Donohue:

The petition of Charles Phelps shows that he is an elector and citizen of the City and State of New-York, and is by profession a physician and surgeon, No. 117 East Nineteenth street, in this City, and that he is now committed, detained, and in custody and under arrest, by and under process from the Court of General Sessions of the Peace in and for the City and County of New-York, as he is informed; and that he is not committed or detained by virtue of any process issued by any court of the United States or by any Judge thereof, nor is he committed or detained by virtue of the final judgment or decree of any competent tribunal of civil or criminal jurisdiction, or by virtue of any execution issued upon such judgment or decree; that the cause or pretense of such imprisonment under arrest, according to the best of the knowledge and belief of your petitioner, is, that being subpœnaed to appear as a witness before the Grand Jury of this County, he attended before that body, and was asked certain questions tending to show that he was cognizant of some alleged crime which had occurred out of the jurisdiction of this court; and which question he refused to answer, wherefore he was adjudged guilty of contempt of court and by a commitment of said court for such contempt was arrested and imprisoned; that by such process he is now detained in this County by the Sheriff thereof; that petitioner is unable to annex hereto a copy of such commitment, because he was removed before a demand therefor could be made. Petitioner avers that his said imprisonment is illegal, because the Grand Jury, as appears from the face of such commitment, as he is advised by counsel and believes, had no jurisdiction to inquire into the matter as aforesaid, and because this petitioner declined and now declines to be interrogated of such matter because answers to the questions propounded by the said Grand Jury would tend to expose him to a prosecution in another State for a felony; wherefore your petitioner prays that a writ of habeas corpus may forthwith issue, directed to the Sheriff of this County, commanding him, the said Sheriff, to forthwith produce the body of petitioner before a Justice of the Supreme Court, so that the cause of the alleged illegality of the imprisonment of petitioner by the Sheriff may be forthwith inquired into.

Dated the 10th day of January, 1877.

CHARLES PHELPS,
No. 117 East Nineteenth street.

Charles Phelps, being duly sworn, doth depose and say that the facts set forth in the above petition subscribed by him are true.

CHARLES PHELPS

Sworn before me this 10th day of January, 1877.
CHARLES H. BABCOCK,
Commissioner of Deeds, New-York County.
JOHN A. FOLEY,
Attorney for Petitioner.

After the granting of the writ, Mr. Hall returned to the Sheriff's Office, where Dr. Phelps was sitting, and announced the result of the petition. Dr. Phelps conversed with his counsel for a few moments and then left the office, accompanied by a friend, and in the custody of the Deputy Sheriff, he proceeded directly to the Lotos Club, where he passed the night in charge of the Deputy Sheriff.

The committal for contempt is for 30 days, unless the person purges himself of the contempt before the expiration of that period, or is set at liberty by the decree of a competent tribunal.

BENNETT'S HOMEWARD JOURNEY.

THE DUELING PARTY STEAL AWAY FROM PHILADELPHIA AT MIDNIGHT—THEIR EFFORTS TO AVOID RECOGNITION—ARRIVAL IN NEW-YORK EARLY IN THE MORNING—THE GENTLEMEN DRIVEN TO THEIR HOMES.

Mr. Bennett and his friends arrived in New-York from Philadelphia at 5:35 o'clock yesterday morning. Having kept closely confined to his room at the Continental Hotel during Tuesday, refusing to see any one save the four or five members of his party, Mr. Bennett concluded toward evening that he would take the 7:35 train for this City, and so notified the clerk of the hotel. Subsequently, however, he changed his mind, doubtless because of the difficulty he would experience in leaving the house unobserved at an hour when the corridors and lobbies were crowded with people eager to catch a glimpse of any one connected with the recent duel. Besides, the train in question has no sleeping coach attached, is usually well patronized, and reaches New-York about 11 o'clock, an unsafe hour for a party of four or five who are endeavoring to avoid arrest. The midnight train was therefore fixed upon. Mr. Bennett and Mr. Howland Robbins, his second, when the time arrived for departure, left the hotel separately by a private door, and the others straggled out, one by one. Carriages conveyed them to the depot, where they quietly strolled in and took seats together in the gentlemen's waiting-room while Mr. Bennett's servant procured tickets for berths in the sleeping-car. "What party is this?" asked the clerk when the servant laid down a $20 bill in payment for four sections and one berth. "Oh, its a party of gentlemen," was the response. As soon as the gates were opened the "party of gentlemen" hurried into the Pullman coach, and lost no time in getting the curtains of their sleeping apartments between themselves and the outside world. Mr. Bennett occupied section No. 4, and Messrs. Carroll Livingstone, Howland Robbins and Lawrence Jerome, had secured berths near at hand. While these gentlemen were standing in the aisle encouraging the porter to renewed and more expeditious efforts in making up their beds, a voice was heard exclaiming, "Howland! Howland! when did you say we would be in New-York?" "Look here, Jim, don't call out my name in that way," said Howland, as he put his head between the curtains of section No. 4, from behind which the interrogation came. "Well, d—— it," said "Jim," "what are you calling my name for?" Before getting into his berth Mr. Robbins went to the end of the car where the servant was standing guard over half a dozen valises, hand-bags, and overcoats, and asked to see something from "Jim." His request was complied with, and the "something" turned out to be a flask of ample dimensions, the contents of which rapidly found its way down the throats of the duelists' party. When the traveling-bag was opened it disclosed to view a large pistol, which Mr. Robbins hurriedly concealed by throwing a loose piece of wearing apparel over it. The weapon was plated with silver, and in all probability was the weapon used by Mr. Bennett in the duel. The servant, on being questioned, refused at first to say anything about the meeting, but subsequently told the reporter that Mr. May fell at the first shot. "I saw him fall myself," he said. This was doubtless untrue, for this fellow was left at the depot when the party went to the ground, and therefore could not have seen the firing. On arriving at Jersey City hasty toilets were made, and the duelling party stepped aboard the Pennsylvania Duncross Street Ferry, where they were compelled to wait 20 minutes for a boat. Several conferences were held here, and Mr. Bennett was of the opinion that they ought to separate. Robbins objected, however. While waiting Mr. S. S. Cox, who had been a passenger on the same train, had a ten-minutes' conversation with Mr. Bennett. Finally the boat came, and all hands entered the gentlemen's cabin. On reaching New-York the duelists took a carriage and were driven rapidly through Desbrosses street to Canal, through Varick and Carmine streets, up Sixth avenue to Twenty-third street, thence to Fifth avenue. At the corner of Twenty-fourth street the coach stopped, and Mr. Lawrence Jerome alighted; at Twenty-seventh street Mr. Carroll Livingstone got out, and at Thirty-first street Mr. Robbins took his leave. The coach was then driven to Mr. Bennett's house, No. 425 Fifth avenue, where that gentleman alighted and entered, the door being promptly opened for his admission.

HEAVY DAMAGES CLAIMED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 10.—Dr. Hiram Gustavus Farr, who was arrested Nov. 17 at the instance of Anthony Comstock, of New-York, for sending improper circulars through the mails, to-day, in the Civil Circuit Court, filed a $25,000 damage suit against Mr. Comstock. The complainant specifies that on that date Mr. Comstock published in THE NEW-YORK TIMES that he [Farr] was arrested in conjunction with Dr. James B. McCann, and was a forger, counterfeiter, and felon, and had in his possession counterfeit plates for which the Government was looking.

THE BROOKLYN YACHT CLUB.

The annual meeting of the Brooklyn Yacht Club was held last evening at the rooms of the club, corner of Court and Montague streets, Brooklyn. P. W. Ostrander, President, occupied the chair. The Treasurer's report showed that the receipts for the year were $4,309; expenditures, $4,053 36. The club now owns 30 yachts, according to the Treasurer's report, of which 22 are schooners, 24 sloops, and 4 steamers. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

Commodore—John S. Dickerson, of schooner yacht Madeleine.
Vice Commodore—James D. Smith, of schooner yacht Estelle.
Rear Commodore—R. H. Huntley, of sloop yacht Niantic.
President—P. W. Ostrander.
Secretary and Treasurer—William T. Lee.
Assistant Secretary—George G. Dunning.
Measurer—John M. Sawyer.
Fleet Surgeon—J. G. Johnson, M. D.
Judge Advocate—John Oakey.
Trustees—Robert Dillon, W. S. Wadsworth, Charles W. Blossom, W. McElroy, and the President, Secretary, and Treasurer ex officio.

Regatta Committee—Henry W. Turner, William Bisbon and John E. Ames.

LATEST NEWS BY CABLE.

RUSSIA, SERVIA, AND TURKEY.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE CONFERENCE—PREPARATIONS FOR WAR—MOVEMENTS OF GENERALS—THE PORTE STILL INDIFFERENT.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 10.—The Turquie (newspaper) states that in consequence of Roumania's uneasiness the Porte has officially declared that the new Constitution was purely internal, not affecting the rights of a principality guaranteed by international treaties.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—A dispatch from Constantinople says: "The Marquis of Salisbury will have an interview with Midhat Pasha to-morrow." It has been remarked that Gen. Ignatieff's attitude toward the Porte has been more conciliatory the last few days. The arms taken from the Christian inhabitants of Bulgaria at the time of the insurrection are now being restored. Roumania's resolution to throw off allegiance to the Porte is understood to be contingent upon the latter attempting to enforce the application to Roumania of article seven of the new Constitution."

LONDON, Jan. 10.—A dispatch from Constantinople to the Pall Mall Gazette says: "Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian representative, in a confidential communication to Midhat Pasha on Saturday, urged the acceptance of certain points of the conference proposals, and indicated the means of evading others. He advised the acceptance of an international commission with consultative powers only. He suggested the appointment of officers of instruction instead of the establishment of a foreign gendarmerie, and the appointment of a Bulgarian instead of a European as Governor of Bulgaria. He guaranteed Russia's assent to the proposals thus modified. He denied in the course of his letter that Russia incited Servia to make war.

A dispatch from Constantinople says the Council of Ministers held to-day came to a decision relative to the course to be taken by the Turkish Plenipotentiaries at the session of the conference to-morrow. What the decision is has not yet become known. It appears certain, however, that the conference will continue sitting.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Standard's dispatch from Belgrade reports that Servia continues the work of armament. The first class of the reserve has been called out and will be stationed at Gladova and Negotin. Russia has purchased 100,000 Remington rifles for Servia. Gen. Nikitine has sent Adjutants to Radofevatz, Gladova, and Negotin to prepare plans for the march of the Russian army corps, coming via Roumania. It is considered in Belgrade that the conference has miscarried, and that a speedy declaration of war by Russia is expected.

The Post's Berlin special says the Russian Consul at Bucharest has been summoned to Kicheneff. The Post makes the following announcement very prominently: "We have reason to believe there is still some ground for not despairing of a pacific issue. Within the last few days urgent representations have been telegraphed to the Porte, which have at least secured attention."

A Belgrade dispatch to the Times says Gen. Nikitine and staff left Belgrade by steamer yesterday (Wednesday) morning. It is asserted that he has gone to St. Petersburg to report on the condition of Servia; but the correspondent considers this improbable, and suggests that the General has possibly gone to the Lower Danube in connection with some unexpected movement there. Nearly all the Russian officers and soldiers have left Servia. M. Marinovics is expected to return from St. Petersburg on Friday. It is confidently asserted that he will form a Cabinet with the avowed intention of negotiating an immediate peace. A strong party favors this idea.

The Russian Telegraphic Agency reports that the sitting of the conference to be held to-day (Thursday) is expected to be decisive.

A special dispatch from St. Petersburg to the Political Correspondence of Vienna says it is officially reported that there are only 1,451 invalids in the mobilized army of Russia and no epidemics prevail. The Berlin correspondent of the Times, reviewing the situation, concludes that Russia, to gain time, has no objection to reverting to Andrassy's note. It is doubtful how long this Turkish expedient will be effectual. Russia begins to realize that she must mobilize a larger army to coerce Turkey, not for war, but to support diplomatic action. The knowledge that her present mobilized force is insufficient has produced no pacific sentiments. Mobilization is fast extending to the east and north of the Empire. It is probable that the Russians will soon cross the Pruth. This step would not signify immediate war; it would on the contrary be taken as a means of avoiding it by frightening the Turks into compliance with Russian demands.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times considers that to-day's meeting of the Conference will be a great step in advance, as a basis will then be found in the Andrassy note, on which discussion will be possible. The postponement of the meeting from W

FERTILIZERS—Have been selling rather more freely and have been quoted generally as before.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Purchasers for the West Indies and the Provinces bought moderately to-day of suitable grades of State and Western Flour, chiefly of City Mill Extras, and desirable Winter Wheat trade extras, at very firm prices, apart from which the movements were quite limited, but at full rates. Home trade dealings were light. The limited offerings and extreme prices asked impeded business.....Sales have been reported since our last of 10,500 bbls. at all grades, including unsound Flour at $4 25@$6; Sour Flour at $4 25@$5 10; Trade Extra, 5,000 bbls., at $5 75, for shipment, and a small lot of Sour Minnesota at $6 50; very poor to fancy No. 2 at $4 20@$6; chiefly at $4 65@$5, (of which 100 bbls. choice State at $5;) prime to choice Superfine Western $5 25@$5 75; mainly at $5 50@$5 75; poor to good Extra State, $5 85@$6; good to choice do. at $6@$6 25; City Mills Extras, shipping grades, $6 90@$7, mainly at $6 70@$7 for Trade; (the latter rate for strictly choice, in new pks.,) and $6 95 for brands suited to the English trade, (of which latter 1,000 bbls. for the provincial trade;) inferior to good shipping Extra Western, $5 85@$6; good to choice do. $6@$6 25; round-hoop Ohio shipping at $5 85@$6 25; and other grades within the previous range.....Included in the sales have been 5,300 bbls. shipping Extras, of which 4,100 bbls. City Mills, 700 bbls. Minnesota, and 500 bbls. Extras; 600 bbls. do. Patent do., 875 bbls. Winter Wheat Extras, (for shipment, these mostly at $6 75 @7 10;) 300 bbls. Superfine, (in small lots,) and 400 bbls. No. 2 at the quoted rates.....Southern firm and moderately active.....Sales, 1,150 bbls., mainly Extras, within the range of $7 25@$8.....Of Rye Flour, 375 bbls. sold, in lots, chiefly at $6 75@$6 for low to good choice, and $6 90@$7 for choice up to $6 10@$6 15 for choice to very choice do; $4 65 @$5 for Pennsylvania; market somewhat brisker.....Of Corn-meal, 350 bbls. sold, in lots, including Yellow Western, at $2 90@$3; Brandywine, in bags, at $3; market unaltered.....Corn-meal, in bags, in request at $1 05@$1 45, as extremes, ₱ 100 lb.....Of the sales were 1,800 bags coarse, mostly on the basis of $1 10 for City Mills, and $1 10@$1 15 for Western; 500 bags Yellow Southern, choice, at $1 45. Buckwheat Flour in slack request, and quoted at from $3 85@$4 for fair to choice State and Pennsylvania, chiefly at $3 75@$4 ₱ 100 lbs.

GRAIN—Dealings in Spring Wheat were to a fair aggregate, mainly on export account, at rather stronger prices. The movement was checked by the advanced view of the principal holders, who were very reserved in their offerings of stock and willing to maintain rates.....Winter Wheat in moderate request and Winter Red was held firmly, but without important business..... Sales were reported to-day, of 114,000 bushels, including Amber State, a small lot, at $1 60; prime to choice Spring, in Milwaukee, at $1 30@$1 40; mainly at $1 44@$1 45, mostly at $1 44; No. 2 Chicago do. so-called, in store, 32,000 bushels, at $1 38; very choice No. 3 Milwaukee do., 12,000 bushels, at $1 33@$1 39, (of which 9,000 bushels Winter Wheat, new, mixed, in store, at $1 39); and ungraded Spring, at $1 18@$1 38, as to quality, of which 25,000 bushels at $1 18@$1 26.....Corn has been more active, mostly for former prompt shipment, and prices, during the day, for new crop, but closing generally rather lower.....Sales have been reported since our last of 81,000 bushels, including ungraded sailing vessel Mixed Western, old crop, poor to choice, within the range of 58c. as extremes, of which 6,000 bushels good Kansas, in store, with 6,000 bushels prime No. 2 Chicago, also in store, sold in one lot at 62c.; New-York, at 58c.@59c., (of which 2,000 bushels in store, 2,200 bushels, at 60c.; New-York steamer mixed at 58¾c.@58¾c., leaving off at 58¾c.; New-York no grade, about 15,000 bushels at 58c.; New-York steamer Yellow at 59c.@59½c.; new crop Mixed Western, car lots, at 59c.@60c., as to quality; Western Yellow, car lots, at 59c.@62c.; Southern White at 59c.; and Southern Yellow, from dock, at 53c.@59c.....Rye dull and irregular; old car lots of state sold, from track, at 85c.; same do. in store, at 80c.; new crop held as high as 93c.@95c.; prime Western, in store, held at the extreme rate of 90c.....Of Barley, sales reported of 10,000 bushels prime No. 2 Canada at $1 11, and 1,500 bushels Prime two-rowed State at 49c.; market firm but dull.....Malt, Peas, and Buckwheat nominally as last quoted. .....Oats ruled stronger in price, on a somewhat livelier local trade call.....Sales reported of 43,000 bushels, including White Western, at 34@35c., as to quality, and mostly at 44¾c.@47½c., White State, poor to choice, at 49c.@52c.; Mixed Western at 41c.@43c., chiefly at 41c.@44½c. for old car lots, and 43c. for 8,800 bushels prime new No. 2 Chicago; Mixed State, new No. 1 White at 51c.; New-York No. 2 White at 45½c.@46c.; New-York No. 2 at 43c.@44c; New-York No. 3 at 43¾c.; New-York No. 3 White at 43½c.@44c.; Mixed State at 44c.@51c. for poor to very choice, mainly car lots at 48c.@50c. ₱ bushel.....Feed has been in better supply and quoted easier in price, in most instances, on a moderately active movement, with 40-lb. sacks at $19@$22 chiefly at the inside quotations (500 bags) 60-lb. sacks at $20@$22; 100-lb. at $22@$25. Rye Feed at $19@$21; Sharps at $25@$27, (this grade having been extremely scarce.) .....Clover-seed has been moderately sought after, with prime to choice Western quoted within the range of 15¼c.@15½c.; strictly prime State at 16¾c. Sales reported of 600 bags Western at 15c.@15¼c.; part for shipment to Havre; and 100 bags fancy State at 17¼c. Timothy dull at $1 90.....Other Seeds in light request, quoted as before.....Bale Hay has been in fair request and quoted firm in price.....We quote shipping qualities within the range of 85c.@75c., and retailing qualities at 75c.@$1 ₱ 100 lbs.; Clover, 60c.@65c.; Salt Hay, 50c. @60c.....Straw has been inactive, including Rye Straw within the range of 60c. @85c.; Oat, 50c.@65c. ₱ 100 lb.

HIDES—Have been very dull and quoted weak, with sales generally more or less nominal. Recent sales of City Slaughter reached 7,200 lb., chiefly for export, on the basis of 10c.@10¼c., cash, for 70 to 80 lb. averages. .....Stock in Hides and Skins, 93,000 pieces, and 3,000 bales, against 145,900 Hides and 1,401 bales do. same time last year.

HOPS—Have been held more firmly, with a fairly active inquiry noted for the better qualities, in good part for export, which tends to lessen the stock of this crop of 1876, quoted at 13c.@27c. for ordinary to choice, with fancy lots quoted up to 30c.; Eastern new, 12c.@28c.; new Wisconsin at 12c.@17c.; Yearlings, 12c.@17c.; California of 1876 at 23c.@27c.; Oregon, 22c.@27c.; Olds, all growths, 4c.@8c. ₱ lb.

LATHS, LIME, AND LUMBER—Have been moderately sought after, and generally held firmly.

MOLASSES—Has been quoted firm as to values, though the general movement has been without notable animation.....We quote sole thus: Hamlock Tannage—Light, 28c.@27c. for Buenos Ayres; 26c.@ 27c. for California, and 24c.@25c. for common to thick; Heavy, 28c.@31c. for Buenos Ayres, (the latter rate for strictly prime;) 28c.@29c. for California, and 26c.@28c. for common Hide; Heavy, 28c.@30c. for Buenos Ayres; 25c.@29c. for California, and 27c. @29c. for common to choice Hide; good damaged stock, 24c. @25c.; poor do., 19c.@21c. ₱ lb.....Crop slaughter thus: Light Backs, 36c.@38c.; Middle Backs, 32c.@34½c., Light Crop, 35c.@36c.; Middle Crop, 33c.@37c.; Heavy Crop, 32c.@37c.....Texas thus: Light, 34c.@35c.; Middle and Over Crop, 34c.@35c.; Bellies, 18c.@18½c.; Rough Hamlock, 27c.@31c.; Rough Oak, 29c.@32c. ₱ lb.

MOLASSES—Trade in New Orleans has been on a restricted scale, at from 50c.@60c. for good to very choice, chiefly at 52c.@57c., and down to 40c. for very common. Market otherwise inactive; quotations about as before for foreign grades; a rise in sales of 150 bbls. Porto Rico, for refining, noted on private terms.....Syrup more sought after, and quoted up 1c. per gallon.....Sugar-house Molasses dull, at a decline of 1c. per gallon.

NAVAL STORES—Rosin has been very quiet here on the basis of $1 50@$2 60 for common to good strained ₱ 280 lb.....Tar and Pitch as last quoted.....Spirits Turpentine more in demand, with merchantable parcels for prompt delivery, quoted at the close at 40c.@ 41½c. ₱ gallon. Sales reported of 250 bbls. merchantable at 40½c., and 200 bbls. in shipping order, at 40½c.

THE MAIL ROBBERIES.

ADDITIONAL DEVELOPMENTS IN THE CASE —RECOVERY OF 22 NOTES AND CHECKS, AMOUNTING IN THE AGGREGATE TO $50,000.

New facts were developed yesterday in connection with the mail robberies reported last week. The Post Office authorities received from Mr. Irish, the Montreal Agent of Adams Express Company, the mail-bag sent to Montreal by some of the gang addressed to J. A. Thome. It proved to be a No. 2 pouch of through mail from Philadelphia to Boston, and contained about 500 letters, all of which had been opened and rifled. Upon examination, it was discovered that the checks found in the trunk of Mary Jane Collins corresponded with inclosures noticed in these letters, bringing more conclusive evidence against the persons arrested. In rifling the mail, however, many notes and checks were overlooked, 22 being found in the recovered bag, amounting in the aggregate to nearly $50,000. These and the letters returned will be forwarded as addressed as soon as possible. The checks found are as follows:

Check dated Dec. 26, 1876, of G. C. Hoag, General Agent, to Rowland Perry, $1,294 60.

Note dated Sept. 20, 1876, payable in four months, of Old Bedford Coal Company to the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, $1,743 91.

Note dated Sept. 9, 1876, payable Jan. 30, 1877, of Howard Lulling & Co. to the Philadelphia and Reading Coal Company, $2,368 61.

Note dated Sept. 9 1876, payable four months from date, of Howard Lulling & Co. to Philadelphia and Reading Coal Company, $2,246 33.

Note dated Sept. 12, 1876, payable four months from date, from W. H. Gray to Simons, Opdyke & Co., $194 23./

Note dated Sept. 19, 1876, payable four months from date, of Bangs & Horton to the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company, $12,500.

Same to same, $3.

Draft dated Dec. 23, 1876, of J. P. Morris Company to Charles W. Seabury, Treasurer Calumet & Hecla Mining Company, $9,750.

Check dated Dec. 26, 1876, of Hall & Co. to P. W. & R. R. Weed & Co., $73 38.

Check dated Dec. 22, 1876, of Wentworth & Downing to Charles Baird & Co., $242 08.

Check dated Dec. 26, 1876, of A. W. Greenleaf to Henry McKay, $2,500.

John Kelly and Mary Jane Collins, arrested for complicity in the robberies, were brought before United States Commissioner Shields yesterday for examination. Assistant United States Attorney Foster appeared for the prosecution, and R. M. Emerson for the defense. The case of Miss Collins was taken up first, and Officer Blackwood, Anthony Yonmans, Bianch Smith, and John Brown, of the Philadelphia Post Office, were examined on the part of the prosecution, when the case was adjourned until to-morrow. It is understood that James Crawford, arrested for connection with the case, has made a confession which fully explains the mystery that has attended the robberies. This cannot be made public at present.

EXTENSIVE FORGERIES REVEALED.

BOGUS CHECKS AMOUNTING TO $50,000 DRAWN ON A BOSTON BANK—THE BLANKS PRINTED IN THIS CITY.

Forged checks aggregating about $50,000 have recently been drawn on the First National Bank of Boston. On Dec. 5 a gentleman pretending to represent the Cashier of the First National Bank of Lowell called at the office of Messrs. Maverick, Stephens & Co., engravers, of this City, and said that he wished to have some check blanks printed at once. The Cashier was in a great hurry for them. He was a stranger and Mr. Maverick believed that he had made a mistake in coming to his firm. Upon looking over his books he could not find that he had ever done any work for the Lowell National Bank. He was not averse, however, to having a new customer, and showed samples of check blanks from which the stranger made a selection. He said that he had the stamped paper at his hotel and would send it down immediately, and ordered the work to be ready for him at 4 o'clock the next afternoon. The stamped papers were sent down and the printing was done at the appointed time, the number of blanks printed being 495. The man did not call, however, until 7 o'clock in the evening, after the members of the firm had gone home. He received the parcel from the errand-boy and paid for the printing. The next morning Mr. Maverick discovered that a receipted bill for the work had been left, the boy having failed to give it to the man. He therefore sent it to the Cashier of the First National Bank of Lowell in order that the bank might have a voucher for its disbursement. The Cashier sent back word that he had not ordered no checks-blanks, and asked for information. Mr. Maverick at once forwarded samples of the check-blanks which he had printed for the stranger, and here the matter dropped. Nothing was heard of the false checks until last Monday morning, when $50,000 worth of them were presented to the First National Bank of Boston. Five checks of $9,000 each were received from the First National Bank of Montgomery, Ala. A telegram had preceded them declaring them to be forgeries and asking them to be returned. Five other checks of equal amounts were received at the Clearing-house in Boston. All had the forged name of the Cashier of the Lowell Bank. The checks were sent in Alabama by persons claiming to be Massachusetts cotton buyers. The persons who first accepted them will probably be the only losers.

AN ALLEGED CONFIDENCE WOMAN.

HOW MRS. THOMAS, WIDOW OF THE "DYNAMITE FIEND," WAS DEFRAUDED.

Mrs. Cecile Thomas, the widow of Thomas the "Dynamite Fiend," became acquainted, about eighteen months ago, at the Gramercy Park Hotel, with Mrs. Louisa O'Conner, alias "Louisa Randolph," alias "Louisa Williams," a woman of culture, pleasing manners, great conversational powers, and admirable address. "Mrs. Williams" soon obtained such an influence over Mrs. Thomas as to induce her to lend her a camel's-hair shawl, worth $1,500, two diamond rings, a diamond brooch, a watch and chain set with diamonds, and a sole-leather trunk. "Mrs. Williams" excused herself for not returning the property within a reasonable period on the plea that she had "lent it to her sister." She shortly afterward removed from the Gramercy Park Hotel, and could not be found by Mrs. Thomas, who then instituted a suit against her in the Marine Court to recover the property, and obtained an order of arrest from Judge Sinnott, who fixed the amount of bail at $2,500. It was subsequently ascertained by Deputy Sheriff Frank Bollett, who was intrusted with the order of arrest, that "Mrs. Williams" had gone from the Gramercy Park Hotel to the Hoffman House, thence to Barnum's Hotel, and had finally taken board at No. 333 West Twenty-third street. The Deputy Sheriff obtained an interview with "Mrs. Williams" by a ruse—acting under the pretext that he had a letter for her from a gentleman with whom she was well acquainted—and arrested her. She then vainly endeavored to have Mr. Richard O'Gorman (with whom she claimed an acquaintance) become responsible for her appearance, in order to prevent her being taken to jail. Mr. O'Gorman denied that he knew anything about her of a favorable character. The result was that she was committed to Ludlow Street Jail.

HOW MONEY IS WASTED IN BADGES.

At a meeting of the Kings County Board of Supervisors, held yesterday, Supervisor Phelps offered a resolution instructing the Law Committee to draft a law under the provisions of which the salary and fees of all county officials, from the Sheriff down to the humblest clerk, shall be reduced. The resolution was referred to the Law Committee. The next resolution offered was passed unanimously. It was to the effect that gold badges to cost $58 each be supplied to each of the newly-elected Supervisors, and that $150 be appropriated to furnish a gold badge for the Supervisor at Large. The Chairman pro tem. will not announce the committees until to-day. After reappointing Patrick McGuire Keeper of the Morgue, Michael Clancy and John Brady Engineer and Assistant Engineer, respectively, of the Court-house, and transacting some routine business, the board adjourned.

A VESSEL ABANDONED AT SEA.

A report was made yesterday to the Maritime Exchange that an abandoned vessel, lying on her beam ends, was seen in latitude 44° north, longitude 53° west, on Dec. 3. She was of 900 or 1,000 tons burden. Her bottom was coppered, except the false keel; her rudder was unshipped and hung loosely in the trunk. No name could be seen on the vessel. In the water near her was a great quantity of light lumber, such as ship-planks, deals, scantling, and lathwood. It was supposed that this was the deck-load of the wrecked craft, as cleats were noticed on some of the planks. The material appeared to have been in the water a very short time. No sign of the crew of the vessel could be seen.

THE AMERIQUE DISASTER.

REMOVING THE CARGO BY SEA AND LAND —THE PILOT TO BE EXAMINED NEXT TUESDAY—THE QUESTION OF RESPONSIBILITY.

The work of removing the valuable cargo of the French steamer Amérique, which began Tuesday morning, was prosecuted with greater activity yesterday. When it became known that it would be impossible immediately to get the vessel off the beach, and that her cargo would be constantly imperiled so long as it remained on board, word was communicated to the Treasury Department and a request made that she should be permitted to land her cargo on the Jersey shore without invalidating her clearance papers. A reply was received by the Collector at Perth Amboy, in whose jurisdiction the accident occurred, and an arrangement was made by which it became possible to go on with the unloading without delay. Capt. Merritt, of the Coast Wrecking Company, then stretched three cables from points opposite as many hatches to the shore, and pulleys having been rigged on each of the cables, the boxes and other packages were hoisted out, run out by these cables and pulleys to the shore, and lowered into wagons on the beach. They were then taken to Seabright Station, carried to Sandy Hook, and thence brought to this City by the steamer Jesse Hoyt. At the same time lighters received loads from the seaward side of the vessel, and also brought them up the Bay. The goods arriving by way of the Southern Railroad and steamer Jesse Hoyt were taken to the stores No. 31 West street, while those from the lighters are ordered to the stores at No. 542 Washington street. Even at the most expeditious rate of speed possible under the circumstances, it will probably be two or three days before the ship can be unloaded.

The manager of the Coast Wrecking Company, Capt. Merritt, is personally superintending the work of preparing the vessel for removal from the beach. He is reported as feeling very confident of his ability to do it if the weather does not become stormy. Three heavy cables, with very large anchors, have been planted in position to work her off, and they serve to prevent her from driving further up on the sand. Yesterday the sand bad so washed up opposite the centre of the ship that it was possible to walk almost to her side without much danger of getting wet. On Tuesday next the Pilot Commissioners will examine Harry L. Wever, the pilot who boarded the Amérique on Saturday noon. There seems to be every reason for his fear that he will be "broken," notwithstanding the fact that he has always been considered an excellent pilot, and never before fell into difficulty. The pilot of the Rjukan was but a day or two ago deprived of his license because he accepted the soundings made by the officers of the ship instead of having his own, and it is now thought that the failure of the pilot to interfere with the movements of the Amérique will be construed into negligence, notwithstanding that the Captain had not resigned the steam-ship to the pilot. Wever coincided with Capt. Ponzolz in his calculations, and made no effort to change the vessel's course. The Pilot laws say that the duty of a pilot strictly is to keep a vessel in the channel-way, and conduct her safely to her anchorage or dock. The management of the vessel, whether moved by sails or steam, belongs to the master; but he takes orders from the pilot, whether to go fast or slow, if under steam, and if under canvas to make or take in sail, and he is to see that they are executed.

HEAD-MONEY ON IMMIGRANTS.

THE BILL NOT YET REPORTED—A PROPOSITION UNDER CONSIDERATION BY THE STEAM-SHIP LINES.

The House Committee on Commerce and Navigation had not last night reported the bill to reimpose the head-money tax, although it was generally expected by the agents of the steam-ship companies in this City that it would be reported favorably, with some amendments. The head-money tax, it was understood, would be reduced from $2, as asked for by the Commissioners of Emigration, to $1 50. A day or two ago it was stated in these columns that Mr. Gustav Schwab, agent for Oelrichs & Co., of the North German Lloyds Steam-ship Line, was favorable to a proposition for the steam-ship companies to take charge of Castle Garden and to pay each its proportionate share of the cost of keeping emigrants while they remained in port. Mr. Schwab was not then authorized to make this statement for all of the companies, but has since been assured that he was free to meet with the approval of the steam-ship agents. The provisions of the bill are still considered to be wrong in principle, and it is probable that in case it should be pushed through the House of Representatives an effort will be made to hold it back in the Senate.

In regard to the proposition to take charge of immigrants that it was said that in Boston the arrangements made by the Cunard Company for the reception and treatment of immigrants, from the time of their landing until they were forwarded to their destination, have left nothing to be done for them by the State or city authorities. Upon landing, the immigrants are housed and fed at the company's charge, until they leave the wharves. Westbound passengers take their departure by railroad cars, starting from the wharves, where they are also ticketed to their destinations and have their foreign money exchanged. Interpreters, speaking the different European languages, are kept in the company's service to communicate with immigrants on their arrival. In a word, everything is done in Boston by the Cunard Company that is done in New-York by the Commissioners of Emigration.

AN ICE GORGE IN THE NARROWS.

Great masses of ice moved down the North River into the upper bay yesterday morning. Incoming vessels made way against them, however, until they entered the Narrows and choked the passage. At 10 o'clock the Norwegian brig Avance, British brig Oliver Cutts, the German bark Henry, and the brig Frau, of the same nationality, on their way to this City, encountered the ice off Tompkinsville, Staten Island, and were carried by it back to Stapleton, where they anchored, and by means of extra cables and other devices withstood the floe. They could not, however, make their way up the Bay until afternoon. The ice moved out of the Narrows until it met the stationary mass in the Horseshoe. Then the floe was backed, and at noon a gorge formed at the outlet of the Narrows, between Fort Wadsworth and Hamilton. This gorge extended almost the entire length of the Narrows, and a fleet of vessels was held fast by it. The health officer at Quarantine was unable for several hours to board the vessels. Among the craft delayed in the floe were the steamers San Jacinto and Albemarle and the barks Rachel and W. W. Thomas. None of them were much damaged. The gorge continued until about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when the flood-tide broke it up.

LICENSES FOR VARIOUS OCCUPATIONS.

Marshal John Tyler Kelly, who has charge of License Bureau in the City Hall, presented to Mayor Ely yesterday a report of the business of his office during the past year.

The report states that 20,422 licenses were issued during the year, and that the fees received from the same, together with the revenue from fines, amounted to $65,473 25. The licenses granted were as follows: Eight dummy-engines (of the Hudson River Railroad Company) at $50 each; 7,041 double and single trucks, from $1 to $5 each; 1,100 coaches, including hacks, at $5 each; 594 cabs, at $3 each; 2,209 public venders, at $5 each; 329 kindling-wood venders, at $2 50 each; 528 coal venders, at $2 50 each; 1,019 carmen at $1 each; 812 dirt carts, at $1 each; 293 second-hand clothing dealers, at $25 each; 88 pawnbrokers, at $50 each; 212 junk shops, at $20 each; 72 junk-boats, at $20 each; 1,700 junk-carts, at $10 each; 73 intelligence offices, at $25 each; 59 emigrant boarding-houses, at $10 each; 1,708 express wagons, at $5 each; 90 steam-boat runners, at $25 each; stages of the Madison Avenue, Fifth Avenue, and Twenty-third Street Lines, the only stages now running, $20 each. Licenses were also issued for every car of the Sixth and Ninth Avenue Railroad Companies, at $50 each.

THE SEAWANHAKA BOAT CLUB.

The annual meeting of the Seawanhaka Boat Club, of Brooklyn, was held last evening, Mr. Robert H. Orr in the chair. The report of the Treasurer showed that the club was at present in a sound financial condition, and after the transaction of some unimportant routine business, the following officers for the ensuing year were elected: President, Frederick A. Fox; First Vice President, Daniel A. Moran; Second Vice President, James F. Hendernagle; Treasurer, William A. Kelly; Secretary, William H. Goodnow; Captain, Robert H. Orr; Lieutenant, John M. Ranken; Investigating Committee, A. Harris, Jr., J. Moller, T. McFarland; Board of Trustees, W. Wilson, C. Searles, C. D. Jones, A. W. Fisk, J. M. Ranken.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Yesterday morning Messrs. T. A. Cree and G. A. Hall set out on their tour of Christian visitation among the young men of the South. They act under direction of the International Young Men's Christian Association Committee. The tour contemplated extends from Virginia to Texas. Thirty-six places will be visited, the first being Petersburg, Va., where the State Young Men's Christian Association Convention of Virginia will be held on Friday, 12th inst. Seven similar conventions have been arranged for at the South upon the line of their route.

THE BANKS OF NEW-YORK.

THEIR PRESENT STANDING.

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT ELLIS—CONDITION OF THE BANKS AS COMPARED WITH LAST YEAR—RECOMMENDATIONS ON THE SUBJECT OF LEGISLATION.

The report of Superintendent Ellis states that 84 banks organized under the general banking law of the State reported to the department Sept. 30, 1875. The same number reported at the close of the last fiscal year. Four new banks were established during the year, and four banks were closed. All of these went into liquidation and passed beyond the jurisdiction of the department. Under present laws the Superintendent has no cognizance, officially, of the transactions in respect to a banking association after it ceases to exercise its functions as a bank. Ten trust, loan, or mortgage companies also reported July 1, 1876. The New-York Guaranty and Indemnity Company has reduced its capital to $750,000, which is invested in real estate now leased. The company terminated its financial operations in other ways, and consequently no longer reports to the Superintendent.

The following summaries of the quarterly reports of all the banks, made upon the days respectively named, show the condition of the banks at the close of each of the last two fiscal years:

There were received and destroyed in the department during the last year, $1,409 in State bank notes; $293 were bills of associated banks, and $1,116 were those issued by incorporated banks. The amount of circulating notes canceled during the year is $113,238.

The great majority of State bills now sent to the department for redemption are not redeemable, because the period fixed by law for redemption has expired.

The aggregate circulation of State banks outstanding on the 30th of September, 1876, was $735,-968 50. The total amount Sept. 30, 1875, was $849,-226 50; the reduction in the sum being $113,238. The decrease during the year in secured circulation is $59,745. The decrease in unsecured bills, which was issued by incorporated banks, is $63,494. The secured circulation outstanding Sept. 30, 1875, was $167,783. The unsecured circulation at the same date was $568,205 50.

The Superintendent held in trust Sept. 30, 1876, $1,380,425 07. Of these, $23,900 were bonds and mortgages; cash, $105,725 07; stocks, $1,250,800. The amount deposited by banks is $580,046 09, and by trust and loan companies, $830,378 98. The total decrease in the securities during the last year was $2,962 37.

Under the act of 1873 (chap. 585) 14 of the old incorporated banks have either closed or are now closing their circulation accounts; another has closed its accounts under a special law. There still remain 15 more of the same class of banks, whose representatives yet fail to act under the law of 1873.

The Legislature of 1875 passed an act (chap. 564) providing that building, mutual loan and accumulating fund associations should report annually to the Superintendent of the Banking Department; and, further, that such companies should be examined once in two years by a person appointed by the Superintendent. The act is crude and incomplete. There is no provision in it for the assessment of the associations to pay the expenses which may be incurred in the execution of the law. No appropriation was made for that purpose. It is not proper or practicable for the Superintendent to expend the funds raised for meeting expenses on account of other corporations, by the assessment of such corporations, where there is no provision for the reimbursement of such expenditures by a tax upon the building and loan associations reporting to the department. Upward of 200 of these associations reported last year. Either the act of 1875 should be repealed or provision should be made by the amendment of the law to raise the requisite money to give efficiency and facility to the execution of its provisions, so far as they call for the supervision of the associations by the Superintendent.

A similar condition also exists in respect to the safe-deposit companies, which was created by a law (chap. 613) passed in 1875. The same necessity exists for action by the Legislature in respect to these corporations as in the case of the building associations.

1. That the banking laws be codified, reduced, and amended, so as to insure brevity, simplicity, and symmetry in them.

2. That the responsibility of stockholders in banks for the debts of the banks be precisely defined by law.

3. That the assumption and use of corporate titles by private bankers be prohibited.

4. That the laws which provide for the taxation of bank capital be made more clear in their terms, and be so framed that banks shall not be inequitably and excessively taxed in comparison with other property of equal value.

The long-continued depression of business has tended to discourage the formation of new banks. Capital has sought permanent investments rather than active employment in trade. The wants of the community for banking facilities have been amply supplied, and the present outlook for an increase in the number of banks in the State is not flattering. Capital, ever watchful of its own interests, will not be wanting for banking purposes whenever a revival of trade shall warrant its profitable use. With a final settlement of the pending political problem, and a clearly-defined national policy in regard to a speedy resumption of specie payment, we may look for a healthy and lasting improvement in business activities. Until then, the cloud of fear and doubt which has hung over the business community for the last three years will not be lifted, and commerce, now palsied, will look in vain for real and permanent prosperity.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

RE-ELECTION OF PRESIDENT WOOD AND CLERK LAWRENCE D. KIERNAN—APPOINTMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEES FOR 1877.

The Board of Education held its first meeting of the new year yesterday, President Wood in the chair. The election for President for the ensuing year, which took place immediately after the convening of the board, resulted in the re-election of Commissioner Wood by a vote of 18 to 1, the latter being cast for Commissioner Halsted. In thanking the board for the honor again conferred upon him, President Wood referred with particular warmth to the "discourteous manner in which the board had been treated by the Board of Apportionment" in the latter's "reckless" reduction of the Budget of the Board of Education for 1877 without any previous intimation to or consultation with the Commissioners. This reduction of $335,352, he said, would prevent the providing of additional school accommodations so much needed in the upper wards of the City, and cripple other equally necessary improvements. The compulsory law, said the President, in conclusion, save send children to school or they will be imprisoned, but the Board of Apportionment, without vouchsafing any reason for its action, declares that necessary accommodations shall not be provided for the children, and, as far as it is concerned, that they may be either imprisoned or allowed to wander in the streets and grow up thieves and vagabonds. The address was ordered to be printed in full and referred to the proper committee. Elections for Clerk and Auditor for the ensuing year resulted in the re-election of Lawrence D. Kiernan and John Davenport to fill the respective offices. The clerk next read a communication from the Board of Apportionment, notifying the Commissioners of the amounts appropriated for educational purposes during the year. At the conclusion of the reading, Commissioner West offered a resolution providing that the special committee of nine, known as the Committee on Salaries and Economy, be revived and intrusted with the duty of considering the financial condition of the board, and of recommending such measures as shall meet the exigencies of the case without detriment to the public schools. The resolution was unanimously adopted. The meeting adjourned after the announcement by the President of the following standing committees for the ensuing year:

Finance—Commissioners Dowd, Kelly, Schell, Vermilye, and Beardsley.

Auditing—Commissioners Baker, Goulding, Traud, West, and Watson.

Sites and New Schools—Commissioners Vanderpool, Cohen, Westmore, Wilkins, and Traud.

Course of Studies and School Books—Commissioners Wilkins, Wheeler, Place, Haseltine, and Baker.

Normal College—Commissioners Kane, Halsted, Schell, Place, and Walker.

Evening Schools—Commissioners Haseltine, Schell, Place, Wilkins, and Kane.

Colored Schools—Commissioners Watson, Dowd, West, Westmore, and Cohen.

Warming and Ventilation—Commissioners Traud, Vanderpool, Goulding, Wheeler, and Kelly.

By-laws, Election, and Qualifications—Commissioners West, Beardsley, Baker, Haseltine, and Walker.

Nautical School—Commissioners Westmore, Traud, Dowd, Watson, and Kane.

Special Committee, Salaries, and Economy—Commissioners Kelly, Halstead, Schell, Cohen, Wilkins, Vanderpool, Vermilye, Haseltine, and Kane.

A RABID CAT.

TWO YOUNG MEN BITTEN IN THIRD AVENUE —A CASE OF ILL-REQUITED KINDNESS.

In the month of February, 1875, a working man was tried in the Court of Special Sessions on a charge of cruelty to a cat, preferred by one of Mr. Henry Bergh's officers. The officer swore that he saw the man seize the cat in the street and tie a handkerchief around its neck, and then kill it by striking its head against the curb or sidewalk. The man stoutly protested his innocence, and said that as he was passing along the street the cat sprang at him and attempted to bite him, and that the handkerchief spoken of by his accuser was already tied about the cat's neck. Failing to bite him in the first attack, the man said the cat sprang at him again, and he was compelled, in self-defense, to seize the animal and kill it. The scratches on his hands, he said, were received while obtaining a proper hold on the handkerchief in order to enable him to effect his purpose. The Justices on the Bench, considering the testimony against the prisoner to be conclusive, sentenced him to three months' imprisonment in the Penitentiary on Blackwell's Island. The affair provoked considerable discussion on the part of the press and the public, many persons thinking the sentence too severe, and others being inclined to believe the man's story. Others, again, approved the sentence, on the ground that it was a clear case of cruelty, as it was ridiculous to suppose that a cat would attack a man without provocation. The man, however, served his term of imprisonment on the Island and the matter was dropped. Those who believed that the accused was innocent, will find matter that will tend to confirm them in their belief in the following case, which came under the observation of a TIMES reporter yesterday.

Mr. Samuel Richardson, a young gentleman employed in the office of Mr. James H. Rutter, General Freight Agent of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, was badly bitten in the hand by a cat on the night of the 1st inst. About 9:30 o'clock on the night in question, while sitting with his mother and sisters in their rooms on the second floor of the house No. 230 East Thirty-fourth street, they heard a cat crying, as it suffering from cold, and Mr. Richardson, actuated by a spirit of kindness that would have done justice to Mr. Bergh himself, went out to its relief. Descending the staircase which leads to their apartments, and which is built on the outside of the house, he arrived at the entrance and found that the cat was behind the door which was open and pushed back, inward, nearly as far as it would go. With the intention of reassuring the animal, and inducing it to go entire with him, where it would find both food and shelter, he stooped, and placing his hand near the opening between the door and the wall, gently called, "Pussy! Pussy!" The call was answered, but the reply was far from satisfactory, for the cat sprang at the friendly hand extended to it, and seized it between its teeth, at the same time inserting its claws in his wrist. In an agony of pain Mr. Richardson withdrew his hand, with the cat clinging to it, and in order to release himself was compelled to tear the animal away by main force, the teeth lacerating his flesh very badly. So soon as he was free he new wisely sought to drag the cat without loss of time and had the wounds thoroughly cauterized. At present he is doing well, although the wounds are still painful. The next morning the same cat was found in the plumbing establishment of Mr. John F. Finn, No. 501 Third avenue, and his apprentice, Robert Dickey, a lad of about 16, approached it and attempted to pat it on the head. To that moment it was to all appearances perfectly gentle, but he had hardly touched it when the animal sprang at his hand in the same manner it had done at Mr. Richardson's, and fastened its teeth in his thumb, one of them going through the nail. The boy made violent efforts to shake it off, but not being able to do so, he seized the cat by the throat and choked it until it let go its hold. He then threw it on the floor, and, not having the fear of Mr. Bergh before his eyes, caught up a large wooden snow-shovel that lay near, and beat it to death. He also had his wounds cauterized, and is now doing well.

In conclusion, it may not be out of place to remark that the case of 1875 and the one just cited both occurred in very cold weather, and that as far as could be ascertained both animals were "pariah," or homeless cats.

SIMULTANEOUS WEATHER REPORTS.

Secretary of the Navy Robeson has, at the request of Secretary of War Cameron, formally assured the latter of the fullest co-operation of the Navy Department with the War Department in the work of carrying out the one daily simultaneous meteorological observation—now made with the co-operation of so many nations on land—as fully as possible at sea and around the world. The order of the Secretary of the Navy is dated Dec. 25, and requires that on every naval vessel, and at every naval station, wherever they may be, an observation, in storm or sunshine, one meteorological observation shall be taken and recorded daily at the precise instant—7.35 A. M., Washington mean time. The record of these observations is to form part of the record of the United States Bulletin of International Meteorological Observations, and the greatest care and promptitude are enjoined in preparing it.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The Christmas Festival of the Italian School will be held this evening in the new building, No. 156 Leonard street.

The Park Commissioners yesterday adopted a resolution reducing the pay of the laborers of the department from $2 to $1 60 per day.

Mr. Willis S. Paine, Receiver of the Bond Street Savings Bank, has paid to date the first dividend of 55 per cent., the sum of $462,845 44.

John Hafner, aged 48, of No. 48 Allen street, died at his residence yesterday from the effects of a fracture of the skull, received by falling from a truck four months ago.

At the regular meeting of the Board of Aldermen to-day, the President will appoint a committee of five to inquire into the necessity of securing an ample supply of Croton water for this City.

Owing to the dirty condition of the streets of the City, the Fire Commissioners have been compelled to furnish extra horses to the different engine companies, in order to prevent delay in arriving at fires.

A sale of goods condemned for failure to claim and pay the duties due upon them in the Custom-house was held yesterday in the auction-house of John H. Draper & Co., No. 112 Pearl street. The sale was smaller than those formerly held, the entire proceeds amounting to but $7,000.

A collision of Second Avenue cars occurred last evening, at Thirty-eighth street, resulting in painfully bruising the head of a passenger named Edward Meister, of No. 410 Sixth street, who was cared for at Bellevue Hospital. Alonzo Edwards, conductor of one of the cars, was slightly injured.

An aged man, whose name is supposed to have been Patrick Grimes, was found in a dying condition yesterday under the stoop of No. 125 East Eleventh street. He was removed to the Seventeenth Precinct Station-house, and died there a few minutes afterward. He was homeless and friendless and utterly destitute.

The Charity Ball of 1877 will take place at the Academy of Music on Thursday, Feb. 1. The arrangements are being completed to make it an unusually brilliant affair. A full list of the managers, from whom tickets can be had, will be published in these columns in the course of a few days. The boxes are in charge of Mrs. Edward Cooper, No. 8 Lexington avenue.

BROOKLYN.

Chief Engineer John Y. Culyer announced good skating at Prospect Park yesterday.

It cost $11,214 63 to maintain Prospect Park during December, 1876. A large part of this sum was expended in building a house for skaters, and removing the snow from the ponds.

The Brooklyn Elevated Railroad Company has withdrawn its application to the Common Council for permission to build a road on the De Kalb avenue route. The protest of the property-owners against the road received the support of the Mayor.

The inquest into the circumstances attending the death of the victims of the Brooklyn Theatre fire, was continued last evening. Several witnesses were examined, but not a single new fact was elicited. The taking of testimony will be concluded next Friday.

A little boy named James Murray, was brought before Justice Walsh yesterday morning, on a charge of stealing a box of crackers. The boy's sister, a pale girl with a hunger-pinched face, pleaded for the release of her brother. She said that neither the prisoner nor herself had tasted food in 24 hours. Justice Walsh discharged the boy and gave the girl $2 to buy food.

Edward Hogan, a laborer, residing at No. 40 Atlantic avenue, was committed by Justice Walsh yesterday to await the result of injuries inflicted with a club on Ellen O'Shea and Catherine Keenan. Mrs. O'Shea and Mrs. Keenan were being entertained by Mrs. Hogan when the latter reached home on Tuesday night. Hogan broke up the party, and assaulted all three women. His wife escaped without injury, but her visitors were seriously hurt. Mrs. Keenan had her left arm broken in two places and several of her ribs fractured by Hogan's club. Mrs. O'Shea received a severe scalp wound and several painful bruises.

NEW-JERSEY.

George Holmes, a brakeman on an Erie Railway freight train, fell from the roof of a car in the yard at Jersey City, yesterday, and was seriously injured.

John Madden, the man who was struck by a locomotive on the Pennsylvania Railroad on Tuesday near the Hackensack Bridge, died of his injuries yesterday.

The friends of Rodman Price, Jr., deny the allegations made against him to the effect that he recently disappeared from Weehawken to avoid payment of certain notes alleged to have been issued by him.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE LOUISIANA WHITE LEAGUERS.

THE REVOLUTIONISTS QUIET, BUT IN FULL SWAY IN NEW-ORLEANS EXCEPT IN THE STATE-HOUSE—SEIZURE OF THE RECORDER'S AND REGISTER'S OFFICES — NO CHOICE OF A SHORT TERM SENATOR—TWO REPUBLICAN MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE CAPTURED BY THE DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 11.—Affairs in this city have not greatly changed since yesterday. The State Government of Louisiana is confined to the State-house. Peace is kept in the city, but really there is no law and no Government for neutrals. The quietness is as a cessation of hostilities between two armies. Persons on the streets look suspiciously at each other, places of amusement are deserted, and there is no heart for business.

The Supreme Court is still debarred entrance to the court-room. Yesterday the Recorder of Mortgages and the Register of Conveyances were kept from their offices by the White League patrol, and no business could be transacted at these offices. A number of notaries protested against the interruption of business and the unwarranted closing of the Mortgage Office, and applied to Mr. Nicholls for relief. That gentleman appointed the so-called ex-Gov. John McEnery Recorder of Mortgages, in place of Gen. Frank J. Herron, and to-day Mr. McEnery broke open the doors of the office, in presence of about 200 armed men on the streets, and installed himself as Recorder of Mortgages for the Parish of Orleans.

The House and Senate at the State-house met again in joint session to-day, a quorum being present, and proceeded to again vote for United States Senator for the short term. Mr. Pinchback received 30 votes, a gain of four over yesterday, and Antoine received 21 votes, a loss of one from his vote of yesterday. The joint session then adjourned without electing a Senator.

Judge Alfred Shaw, of the Superior Civil Court, commissioned by Gov. Kellogg for a court created by the present Legislature, opened court to-day, although he had received the injunction of a Democratic Judge, issuing from a District Court, not to do so. The Democrats recognize the validity of Kellogg's commission, but deny the authority of the Legislature to create the court over which Judge Shaw presides, or to do any other binding act of lawmaking.

In all ways there is clashing of the legal and pretended powers, with no near prospect of getting out of the mud. A Presidential order to reinstate the Supreme Court and restore its records would greatly help the matter, without passing judgment upon the claims of the two Governors. Business men are uncertain and know not what to do. A large class say: "Give us any Government that will abide and endure."

Two members of the Legislature elected as Republicans went over to the Democratic side, to-day, and were sworn in at Odd-fellows Hall. If money can avail, others may follow. A New-York hackman cannot be more solicitous for passengers than are the Democratic Sergeants at Arms of the Nicholls' Legislature; so that the Republican members dare not venture out for fear of being arrested and used as quorum makers in the wrong House. And yet all is quiet.

FURTHER DETAILS OF OPERATIONS IN NEW-ORLEANS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 11.—There was no change in the situation this morning, and the orders of General Augur virtually forbidding any aggressive moments by either party will doubtless prevent any collision. All eyes are turned to Washington, watching events there. Gov. Packard has commissioned A. S. Badger, Major General of the Louisiana State National Guard, and ordered him to organize the first division to-day. The Republican in summing up the situation this morning admits that if force is to decide the question of supremacy the Republicans are powerless against their opponents, who, it says, are fully organized, equipped and trained in the use of arms.

In an interview with Gen. Augur this morning a Times reporter reports him as saying that he thought the muddle here would be quietly and peaceably settled, and that he would not interfere except in case of riot and bloodshed, or in the event of any attempt being made to prevent the Legislature from pursuing its duties. This last signified either the Democratic or Republican Legislature, as afterward explained. He had heard nothing of the increase in the Police force, and did not deem it of any moment.

Capt. McGloin's Company of Nicholls' White Leaguers took possession of the offices of the Recorder of Mortgages and Register of Conveyances, on Chartres street, installing John McEnery, who received an appointment from Nicholls to the office of Recorder of Mortgages. This person is the late pretender to the Governorship.

Both Gov. Packard and Mr. Nicholls are besieged by applicants for office and their political friends, rendering access to them exceedingly difficult. A crowd of some 200, nearly all colored men, is around the State-house.

The Republican Legislature had one ballot for United States Senator this afternoon, resulting as follows: Pinchback, 30; Antoine, 21; Lewis, 13; Beattie, 12; Anderson, 4, and scattering, 6. The Senate is still without a quorum. One member of the House came in to-day, and that body still has a quorum. Pinchback's friends claim he is master of the Senatorial situation. No disturbances are reported to-day. Antoine's friends assert that Pinchback spirited away the four absent Republican Senators, who are on Lake Pontchartrain fishing, and that they will not return except to secure Pichback's election to the United States Senate. It is doubtful whether an election for Senator will take place to-day, even if a quorum of the joint assembly can be had, which is exceedingly doubtful, as it is understood to be the policy of some members to prevent an election until the solution of the present difficulties in regard to the State Government is arrived at.

Two Republican members of the House, Mr. Barrett, of Rapides, and Mr. Kennedy, of St. Charles, were reported as having withdrawn from that body, and given their reasons therefor in speeches.

In an interview to-day Gov. Packard stated he intended to retake the Supreme Court building, but that he would proceed under the forms of law and would avoid a conflict which would remain as a cause of bitterness after the recognition of his Government, which event he regarded as certain. Col. Casey returned to-day and denies that he has Senatorial aspirations; that the first he knew of his name being connected with the contest was learned here to-day. The bolting members of the Legislature had another ballot for United States Senator to-day without result. The four Senators who left the State-house are said to be at Pinchback's residence to-night, with a guard of Nicholls' Police around the house at their request, to prevent their capture by the Sergeant at Arms.

THE INVESTIGATIONS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 11.—The House Committee to-day examined Attorney General Hunt, whose evidence was substantially the same as his affidavit in Senator Sherman's report. He stated that he believed he was fairly elected or he would not act for a moment, and that he had ceased to act since the seizure of the Supreme Court. Brevet Brig. Gen. Brookes also repeated his testimony as given before the Returning Board and Senate Committee.

Mr. Jewett, Commissioner of the United States Circuit Court, testified as to the "sewing-machine" circulars for which he was responsible, and said it was not done to deprive any one of his vote who was entitled to vote; the total number of erasures from the registration in New-Orleans during the last election was, colored, 3,368; white, 7,738; he said the election in this city was quiet and peaceable; he explained the famous circular to Supervisors, which has been frequently referred to before the various committees, by saying the majorities the Supervisors were urged to send in, were the legitimate Republican majorities; witness had also compiled a statement for the Republican Committee, showing the number of colored and white voters in the State, which was made from the census returns to the State Register, which did not show the color of the voters; witness made this showing by dissecting the families.

Before the Senate Committee to-day the examination of Judge Lyons was resumed in regard to East Feliciana; during which he stated that the colored Republicans there had nominated Democrats for the Legislature, because they thought they were better men than their own; he also testified to the bad character of John Gair; witness said he believed negro suffrage was necessary as a protection to the colored people.

James M. Doyle testified to the pacific and conservative tone of Nicholls' and Wiltz's speeches in the canvass.

Judge McVeigh corroborated Judge Lyons' statements in regard to the campaign in that parish.

The consideration of East Baton Rouge Parish was continued by the Senate sub-committee. George Tanner (colored) testified to the general intimidation of colored voters and several whippings, one of which he witnessed, the victim being Mrs. Holme; he was present at the hanging of Babe Mathews (John Gair's sister) in Clinton; she was taken from the jail by white men, one of whom offered a prayer for her after it was decided by vote to hang her; she was then hanged.

John McVille (colored) testified to general intimidation and violence in the parish.

Eliza Pinkston was examined. She had a handkerchief about her head, and walked with difficulty. Her testimony was substantially the same as that already published but she stated that her husband was a firm Republican, and had been threatened because he left a Democratic meeting before it was over, and that he attended a Republican meeting the night before he was killed; and that after the killing of Henry, and while she was hiding, she had been assured of protection if she would say it was black men who had killed Henry and wounded her. She will be cross-examined to-morrow.

Dr. C. B. White, a resident of New-Orleans, testified to numerous wounds, twelve in all, which Eliza Pinkston's body showed when she reached the city. Most of them had cicatrized and were superficial. Her wounds in themselves were not immediately dangerous at that time, but her condition was one of nervous prostration.

GOV. WILLIAMS ENLISTING TROOPS.

THE INDIANA MILITIA TO BE PLACED ON A WAR FOOTING—THE POWERS OF THE GOVERNOR—SIGNIFICANCE OF HIS ACTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 11.—It is reported on good authority that Gov. Williams has declared his intention of putting the State Militia of Indiana at once on an efficient war footing. Officers are to be appointed to traverse the state, enlist men and muster volunteers into the legion. The force will be organized and armed and put in condition to be called into active service at a moment's warning. The Governor has the power of appointing all field officers above Major, and is himself Commander in Chief. The laws of the State provide that the legion can be called into active service whenever the Governor declares by proclamation that there is war, invasion, insurrection, or public danger, or when any one of these is threatened or anticipated. This measure, if carried out promptly, will put Gov. Williams in command of a formidable force. Whether it has any especial significance at the present juncture is a question about which there may be a difference of opinion.

THE OHIO REPUBLICANS.

EFFECT OF THE DEMOCRATIC PERFORMANCES OF THE 8TH TO STRENGTHEN THEIR OPPONENTS—VICE PRESIDENT ELECT WHEELER'S VISIT—INTRODUCTION TO THE LEGISLATURE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 11.—There is visible disappointment among the Democrats here as to the effect of their melodramatic performances of Jan. 8. The expectations of the revolutionists that their incendiary suggestions would fire the popular heart, and that the Republicans would quake beneath their furious fire of resolutions and speeches, have not been realized. The result has been just the reverse. People who have not forgotten all about the 8th of January meetings, are wondering how it happened that so much money and effort were expended to so little purpose. The threats of violence have only added to the firmness and unity of the Republicans, without creating any alarm whatever in the public mind.

Hon. William A. Wheeler arrived here last evening, and became the guest of Gen. John G. Mitchell. He spent the evening and this forenoon with Gov. Hayes, whom he had never met before. At noon the Vice President elect was waited upon by a committee of the General Assembly, led by a Democratic Chairman, inviting him to accept the courtesy of the two houses. Mr. Wheeler assenting, was introduced to the Senate by Mr. Curtiss, President pro tem., and to the House by Speaker Grosvenor, but made no remarks. Members were then presented to him individually. He then held a short levee at the executive department, where he was the recipient of several hundred calls. Mr. Wheeler's visit was entirely unexpected to the people here, and was terminated by his departure at 1 P. M. for Washington.

THE PENNSYLVANIA REPUBLICANS.

CAUCUS OF THE LEGISLATURE ON THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION—SILENCE AS TO THE RESULT—RESOLUTION TO BE REPORTED TO-DAY—CONGRESS AND THE TELEGRAPH—THE STATE CAPITAL QUESTION.

special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 11.—The Republican members of the Legislature held a caucus in the State Library this evening. The subjects discussed were the Presidential complications and the action of the National House of Representatives in attempting to violate the secrecy of the telegraph message. These subjects were fully and freely discussed. What conclusion was arrived at can only be conjectured by the outside world, as the lips of all the participants in the caucus are sealed by a pledge of secrecy. A programme of subsequent action was determined upon, it is said, but as to that programme, or any particular feature of it, nothing definite can be ascertained. A series of resolutions on the subjects discussed will be introduced in both branches of the Legislature to-morrow, and until then the curious will be compelled to exercise their patience. The caucus adjourned till next Wednesday, when final action will be taken on the subjects mentioned. Persons here who profess to be able to read the signs of the times, entertain gloomy forebodings for the immediate future. They think the country is on the verge of another terrible war; that the condition of feeling in your city and Maryland are as bad, if not worse, than during the period which immediately preceded the firing on Sumter. Should the worst come, Pennsylvania will do her full duty.

The action of the National House of Representatives toward Mr. Orton of the Western Union Telegraph Company will probably result in the repeal of a law now in force in Pennsylvania, requiring telegraph companies to retain on file for three years copies of all dispatches sent over their wires.

A bill for the removal of the Capital has been offered in the House and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Nothing more will probably be heard of the bill this session. A Local Option bill has also been presented and referred to the appropriate committee; what its fate will be can only be conjectured, but the indications are that it will not pass.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT OF THE CAUCUS—IMPORTANT RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 11.—At a secret meeting of the Republican members of the State Legislature, held to-night, earnest speeches were made sustaining the course of the National Administration toward the Southern States by Messrs. Huhn, of Philadelphia, Speaker of the House, Myer, and others, and a series of pronounced resolutions were adopted requesting Gov. Hartranft to place the Militia of the State on an immediate war footing, that Pennsylvania may be ready to support the Government at any moment in carrying out the wishes of the people. Speeches were also made eulogistic in character of President-elect Hayes, and the State was pledged to support his inauguration.

THE BAY STATE SENATORSHIP.

AN ACTIVE CANVASS IN PROGRESS—MR. BOUTWELL AND GEORGE F. HOAR THE PRINCIPAL CONTESTANTS FOR THE SEAT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 11.—The contest for the seat in the United States Senate to be vacated on March 4 by Mr. Boutwell has assumed a tangible shape. Both of the leading candidates have their whippers-in at work, and the doubtful ones are quietly and persistently importuned to give them support. George S. Boutwell wants to be his own successor, and he has organized his campaign well. Headquarters have been established where all information can be obtained, and where the details of the fight are mapped out. His most formidable rival just now is Hon. George F. Hoar, whose strength seems to develop daily, and to become more troublesome to the supporters of the ex-Secretary of the Treasury. As far as can be judged from appearances now, after a careful survey of the field, it seems that Mr. Hoar is actually ahead. The Boutwell men admit that their case is not as strong as they had at first supposed it would be, but they are confident of carrying the day, having the best organization and the shrewdness and tact necessary for a successful canvass. Should they be beaten, or should they see their candidate falling off after the second or third ballot, they will drop him and concentrate their forces on some new name and try to stampede Mr. Hoar's supporters. "Anything to beat Hoar" is the cry of the Boutwell men, and the old feud which sprang up in the Senatorial fight of 1874 and was continued in 1875, between Judge Hoar and the then supporters of Mr. Dawes, will be kept up by nearly the same elements that then prevailed. The chances of other candidates, who may be called compromised candidates, appear to be better in this than in previous contests as the leaders of the different factions do not hold their men in hand with as tight a rein as they would if members were not inclined to exercise their own individual judgment. Should a break-up follow a second or third ballot, Rice seems to stand the best chance, Bullock next, Seelye, Devens, and Sanford following in the order mentioned. The Democrats had a secret caucus again to-day, and it is well understood that they will throw their first vote for Gaston, and after that for an Independent, probably Bullock, Seelye's chances appearing to be injured by the semi-official statement made this morning that he would take the office if it was spontaneous. The Boutwell leaders had a secret conference at the Parker House to-night, the doors being guarded. In the Custom-house, Collector Simmons leads the fight for the sitting Senator, and has entered into the contest with his usual vigor. The Hoar men have established head-quarters, and the fight will go on with animation until Tuesday, when the first ballot will be cast.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.

EX-GOV. PALMER THE FAVORITE OF THE DEMOCRATS—LOGAN AND DAVIS FORMIDABLE RIVALS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 11.—The Democrats held a caucus to-night, and adjourned until to-morrow afternoon, having accomplished nothing. They will probably nominate ex-Gov. Palmer and vote for him on several ballots, if necessary. Eight Democrats styling them Independents, stayed out of the caucus and decided to vote for Judge Davis. Eight Independent Senators balloted this evening, but could not agree. State Senator Haines and Congressmen Anderson and Campbell were the favorites; neither of them got a majority, and it is not likely any of them ever will. Another caucus will be held to-morrow. It is stated to-night that Davis will accept if elected. He is the strongest opponent that has been named against Logan, as the independent Senators will probably accept him. There is no change in Logan's strength, except that it looks now as if he would command the full Republican vote.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

THE ANXIETY TO LEARN THE IMPORTANT FEATURES OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE'S PROPOSITION—RETICENCE OF THE MEMBERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Since the information escaped from the Senate Committee on Counting the Electoral Vote that they had agreed and prepared a bill and were ready for conference with the House Committee, double vigilance has been exercised to prevent the important features of the agreement from becoming public. To-day the members of the House Committee are denying that they have received a bill, or that they have been asked for a conference, and when leading questions are asked they refuse to talk. The statement last night is, however, abundantly verified, excepting that the bill prepared may not have been sent to the House Committee, though it was ordered to be communicated. Considering the desire of the committee to keep the substance of the bill from publication, it will, perhaps, not be given to the House Committee till there is a joint meeting, which will soon be held. Of course, everybody is intent on knowing what the result of carrying out the proposal would be upon the election, and the committee think that the prospects of agreement would be destroyed by revealing so much of their bill. A member of the House Committee said if the provisions of the bill were such as were reported, it would be of no use for it to be reported to them.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, investigating the alleged informality in the Electoral vote of Oregon, resumed the investigation to-day. Mr. Enos Runyon, who had been adjudged guilty of contempt in refusing to answer as to who had procured the $8,000 check drawn by his firm, payable to the order of Charles Dimon in December last, was called. Mr. Finley A. Johnson, attorney for Mr. Runyon, requested permission to state that Mr. Runyon intended no contempt to the Senate or to the committee; that he (Mr. Runyon) has always honestly been of the opinion that such transactions as the one in question were of a confidential character, and ought not to be disclosed. So far as he (Mr. Johnson) was personally concerned, he would be willing to abide the penalty of the Senate for contempt rather than disclose, without leave, a transaction between himself and a customer.

Mr. Enos Runyon was then called upon the stand, and in reply to the question by Mr. Morton, "Who procured the check of $8,000 to be drawn on your firm?" said, "It was Conrad N. Jordan, Cashier of the Third National Bank of New-York." The witness said Mr. Jordan applied for this check on the morning of the 6th of December last; there was no money paid for the check by Mr. Jordan, or collaterals deposited; it was a matter of honor between them; the witness acknowledged that it was an unusual way of doing business, as it is the custom in such cases to have money or collaterals deposited; witness did not see Wm. T. Pelton on the day the check was issued, nor has he seen him since; nor has he had any correspondence with him; witness did not know Mr. Pelton in any way in this transaction; Mr. Jordan did not indicate for what purpose he wanted the check, but he did not want the transaction placed on Martin & Runyon's books; the amount of the check was charged to him, witness,) on the books of his firm; Mr. Jordan said he would fix the matter up in a few days, but mentioned no definite time.

By Mr. Mitchell—Witness' firm sent Ladd & Bush, of Salem, Oregon, a dispatch on the 6th of December that his firm had deposited $8,000 in the Bank of North America to their credit; he had had no conversation with Ladd & Bush since; Mr. Jordan did not say how he would pay for the check; he only said that in a few days he would fix it; when witness was first subpœnaed he saw Mr. Jordan, and the latter objected to having his name divulged; witness was advised by Mr. Jordan to consult Mr. Burton N. Harrison, a lawyer, before coming to Washington to testify.

In reply to a question by Mr. Kernan, witness said he saw Mr. Jordan yesterday, and he gave him permission to disclose his name. Witness stated further that he would not have disclosed Mr. Jordan's name had not that gentleman given him permission to do so.

Mr. Runyon, having purged himself of contempt, was discharged. During the afternoon the committee sat with closed doors and examined the letter and bank books of Charles Dimon, the New-York banker, to whom Runyon delivered the $8,000 check, which was ordered by Mr. Jordan on Dec. 6. These books, according to Mr. Dimon's statement, show the correspondence and business between himself and parties in Oregon since November last. Nothing in addition to what Mr. Dimon has heretofore testified to was ascertained by the examination of the books, and he was discharged. The committee have ordered that Conrad C. Jordan, who procured the $8,000 check from Mr. Runyon, be subpœnaed to appear before them as a witness.

It is stated here to-night that Gov. Tilden is a Director of the Third National Bank, of which Mr. Jordan is the Cashier. Gen. D. M. Frost, the alleged ineligible Missouri Elector, has arrived in Washington, and will be examined to-morrow or next day.

CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE POWERS OF THE HOUSE IN THE COUNTING OF THE PRESIDENTIAL VOTE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The House Committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the Electoral vote held a long session to-night, and finished their report on that subject. Their conclusions are:

First—That the power to count the Electoral vote is not conferred by the Constitution upon the President of the Senate.

Second—That the power is conferred by the Constitution upon the Senate and House of Representatives.

Third—That in the execution of the power to count the Electoral vote the House of Representatives is at least co-ordinate and equal with the Senate.

Fourth—That in counting the Electoral votes, no vote can be counted against the judgment and without the assent of the House.

These propositions were agreed to by a strict party vote: Representatives Knott, Tucker, Maish, and Sparks, Democrats, in the affirmative; Representatives Seelye, Burchard of Illinois, and McDill, Republicans, in the negative. Representative Knott will make the report to-morrow, and will ask that a day be fixed for its consideration, when ample opportunity will be afforded for debate. Representative Knott will move in the House that two more members be added to the committee, additional labor having been imposed upon it by the resolution of Representative Willis, which instructs that committee to inquire whether any votes had been given contrary to the prohibition contained in the first section of the second article of the Constitution, which is as follows: "But no Senator or Representative, or person holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector;" and also by the inquiry directed by Representative Kasson, to ascertain whether any Electoral votes had been cast by persons whose political disabilities had not been removed.

DEMOCRATIC TRICK IN MICHIGAN.

PUTTING AN EX-LIBERAL REPUBLICAN TO BE DEFEATED FOR UNITED STATES SENATOR—SPARING THEIR OWN MEN THE HUMILIATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LANSING, Jan. 11.—The 34 Democrats in both houses of the Michigan Legislature held a caucus this evening and agreed to throw their votes for Charles S. May, of Detroit, for United States Senator. The election will take place on Tuesday next. May, who has until recently lived at Kalamazoo, was a very radical Republican until 1872, when, being an aspirant for Congress and failing of the nomination by the Republican Convention of the Kalamazoo District, he came out for Greeley a day or two later, and has since become identified with the Democratic Party by securing an engagement from Tilden's "Liberty Street Bureau," making 50 speeches at $50 each. The caucus, to-night, professed to regard him as a Liberal Republican, and the chief spokesman said: "It might have a good effect on the Illinois Senatorial election for us to make a liberal show, since our case here is a hopeless one." May was Lieutenant Governor of Michigan in 1861 and 1862. He is a lawyer of fair ability.

A COLORED MASS-MEETING.

THE COLORED CITIZENS OF RHODE ISLAND IN COUNCIL—RESOLUTIONS AND AN ADDRESS URGING THE AMELIORATION OF THEIR CONDITION—THE LOYALTY OF THE BLACK MEN TO THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 11.—A mass-meeting of colored citizens was held in Newport this evening to consider the present aspect of political affairs. Benjamin T. Burton presided. Letters were read from William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, and Fred Douglass, and addresses were made by Rev. Mr. Van Horne, George T. Downing, and Rev. J. G. Yeiser. The following resolutions and address, presented by George T. Downing, were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the colored people, a minority with rights to be secured, believe it politic to have a representation in all great political parties that may exist; nevertheless, we feel that we are forbidden to form any alliance with the Democratic Party so long as it, as at present, opposes every effort designed to protect us in our rights.

Resolved, That the Republican Party should do more than it has done for the colored people in the way of protection and encouragement, as an act of justice and expediency.

Resolved, That the Republican Party should heed this friendly suggestion, for the body of the colored people in the South, if not protected and encouraged, will, we fear, break down under the weight of difficulties and outrage to which they are subjected because of their devotion to the party, and become the prey of their landlords and of those who give them daily employment. It will be seen how essential is this element of strength.

Resolved, That President U. S. Grant has our warmest thanks for his humane, prompt, and just policy in defending the weak; that his name will live and be honored when the names of his traducers will be forgotten.

Resolved, That it is our firm conviction that Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler are legally and justly entitled to be inaugurated President and Vice President of these United States; that inasmuch as their opponents, through agencies the just use of which is questionable, have obtained a large vote that stimulates them to use intimidation and the threat of civil war to secure the above offices; we, in the interest of loyalty, of good government, for the sake of freedom and equality, entreat those who have law and order on their side, to stand firm in all emergencies.

An address on the present political situation was adopted, of which the following is the substance:

The colored people of the country are not only interested, like others, in the present political affairs, but are specially concerned. We colored citizens of Rhode Island ask the attention of the moral class of the country to a tendency to yield in the matter of protecting us in our rights. We would induce the Republican Party, the professed defender of equality before the law for all men, to do more that is legitimate and proper to warm the colored people in their attachment to it, and proclaim in accord therewith as follows: It is the declared policy of the Republican Party to respect our rights as a part of the body politic. The Democratic Party, which was the ready tool of the slave power, and which is the servant of the present Bourbon power, has opposed every proclamation, amendment, and law designed to protect us in our rights, the people, as a rule, in the interest of slavery, were not educated to respect us. From this statement it will be seen that we must naturally feel a special concern as to which of these two parties shall have the administration of the Government. We are interested in other issues, but this is to us a vital point.

It is the substantial interest of all sections and of all classes, as affecting all interests, to have fraternal relations exist between all sections and classes: we believe that Hayes and Wheeler sustain a relation to this end which enables them to work in the desirable direction much better than could Tilden and Hendricks, but politicians and others having personal ends to serve must not lose sight of the fact that there is a sense of justice in the heart of fair play that has such a hold upon large numbers of the American people, in connection with securing us in our rights, that there never will be real peace in the land until respect for the rights of all men shall universally prevail, to an extent, at least, as broad as is true of New-England and some sections. This is destiny. * * *

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

THE STRESS TO PROMOTE THE TEXAS PACIFIC SCHEME—MAGNITUDE OF THE JOB—THE REVISED STATUTES — THE CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS PASSED—NEGROPHOBIA STILL EXTANT—THE ELECTIVE FRANCHISE AND POLYGAMY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Texas Pacific Railroad bill has been passed by the House Committee, and will be reported the next time the committee is called, which will be very soon. The provisions of the bill which interest the country are unchanged, except, perhaps, that they are made more objectionable by increasing the magnitude of the obligations. The bill, if passed, would saddle upon the Treasury the responsibility for the payment of a sum nearly large enough to build the canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific by the Nicaragua route. The people are looking upon this latter project as a dream, because of the immense cost, and even while they wonder at the magnitude of the enterprise and think that perhaps it may be undertaken by some future generation, Tom Scott and C. P. Huntington are actually expectant of getting out of the Treasury nearly the amount that seems so fabulous when mentioned in connection with the great international highway between the oceans, whose construction would be the marvel of the age. The bill will meet with determined opposition in the House; but its chances of passing can be better estimated when there has been a vote in the House on some preliminary motion concerning it. At present it seems to outsiders that the bill cannot pass.

This morning, in the Senate, during the consideration of the bill which provides for the correction of errors in the Revised Statutes, Senator Thurman suggested that, instead of adding a volume of amendments and changes to the laws, it would be far better to re-enact, and so have them accurate, without amendment or alteration. This idea was approved by a number of other Senators, and the matter was laid aside for further consideration.

The House, to-day, passed the consular and diplomatic and Military Academy appropriation bills. The bills as passed are substantially the same in terms and amounts appropriated as the acts of last year making appropriations for these purposes. Holman's effort to reduce the salaries of the London and other first-class missions failed. An earnest but unsuccessful effort was made, under the leadership of Reagan, of Texas, and Springer, of Illinois, to abolish the resident Ministers at Hayti and Liberia. The fact that the peoples and Governments of those two countries are negroes was the principal motive of this movement to reduce them from the diplomatic to consular grade. Both Reagan and Springer showed their ignorance of the commercial value and political importance of maintaining diplomatic relations with the Haytian Republic. Hayti commands the key to the Gulf of Mexico, and a very large proportion of our export trade is with the islands of the Gulf of Mexico and the Carribean Sea. Unless a proper diplomatic representation be maintained at Hayti our valuable commerce with that and contiguous islands would be secured by other nations. The value of domestic products annually exported to Hayti is $6,000,000, and most of these are the products of Illinois, which sends Mr. Springer to Congress, and of other Western States.

The House Committee on Territories to-day heard arguments from delegate Cannon, of Utah, and others, against the bill for the regulation of elections in the Territories. This bill was originally intended to apply only to Utah, but the committee have extended its scope and made it applicable to all the Territories. It provides that the elective franchise shall not be extended to polygamists or women, and makes polygamists ineligible to office. It also provides a general system for the conduct of elections in the Territories. The passage of the bill would be a direct blow at the saints of Utah, who now control the political machinery of that Territory, as far as it is regulated by the elective franchise. The passage of the bill would force Delegate Cannon, who has a plurality of wives, to abandon his plural wives or suffer disfranchisement. The committee will report the bill favorably.

A bill for giving the Indian Territory a government like other Territories of the United States and calling it Oklahoma is again to be pressed. The lobby has been quietly working the scheme, and in the general excitment it has escaped notice. The bill, put in plain English, provides that the Indian Territory shall be open to white settlement, and the Indian rights and titles shall be extinguished, and the railroads built through the Territory shall become possessed of the valuable lands which lie along their routes. Part of the same lobby which is engaged on the Texas Pacific bill is working up the Oklahoma bill, and it, like the other jobs which are gradually coming forward, needs to be closely watched.

THE OREGON INVESTIGATION.

MR. RUNYON PURGES HIMSELF OF CONTEMPT —THE $8,000 CHECK PROCURED BY THE CASHIER OF A BANK IN WHICH MR. TILDEN IS INTERESTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections at this morning's session examined Enos Runyon, the contumacious witness in the Oregon case. It will be remembered that at a previous examination Mr. Runyon testified that he had drawn a check for $8,000 in favor of Ladd & Bush, bankers, of Oregon, and that it had been returned to him, and that he had then drawn a check for the same amount in favor of Charles W. Dimon, by whom it was transmitted to Ladd & Bush. At the examination referred to Mr. Runyon refused to testify as to who had directed him to draw the check, and for this he was adjudged guilty of contempt. This morning, however, he purged himself by testifying that it was Conrad N. Jordan, cashier of the Third National Bank of New-York City, who had procured the check from the firm of brokers of which he is a member. The witness said that Mr. Jordan applied for the check on the morning of the 6th of December last. There was no money paid for the check by Mr. Jordan or collateral deposited. It was a matter of honor between them. The witness acknowledged that it was an unusual way of doing business, as it is the custom in such cases to have money or collaterals deposited. Mr. Jordan however did not want the transaction to be made public, and for that reason he [the witness] had not required a deposit, and on the books of the firm had entered the amount of the check as a personal draft of his own. Mr. Runyon's testimony is considered of importance, as it is generally understood here that Mr. S. J. Tilden has an account at the bank of which Jordan is the cashier. If such is the case, it will perhaps be necessary for Mr. Jordan to show why he was so anxious to transmit $8,000 secretly to the banking firm with which Gov. Grover and Mr. Cronin were in direct and frequent communication.

THE $8,000 CHECK MATTER.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 11.—A Portland, Oregon, dispatch says, regarding the allegation that $8,000 was sent to Oregon from New-York, to be employed in influencing Gov. Grover's action in the recent electoral muddle, the fact is generally known and admitted that the sum named was sent to Oregon to secure certain political results; that H. Y. Thompson, the Republican lawyer, who made the principal argument before Gov. Grover in behalf of issuing a certificate to Cronin, received $3,000 for his services as counsel; that Cronin got a similar sum, and that the remainder was returned. It is stated upon trustworthy authority that neither Grover nor Chadwick received a dollar of the money said to have been sent from New-York.

A DISTRICT POLICE SCANDAL.

TESTIMONY OF CHIEF RICHARDS BEFORE THE HOUSE INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE —COMMISSIONER MURTAGH CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY TO ENTRAP CONGRESSMAN WHITTHORNE INTO A PLACE OF DISREPUTE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The House committee to inquire into the official acts of the late Board of Police Commissioners of the District of Columbia met this morning. Major Richards, the Chief of Police, testified as follows:

The Police Commissioners had control of all the appointments; about the 1st of July last, Mr. Murtagh came to my office and requested that some attention be paid to Mr. Whitthorne, of the Naval Committee; Mr. Murtagh stated that the investigation was being pressed in a severe and uncalled-for manner, that matters were being inquired into that he did not think came within the scope of the powers of the committee, and that he wished Mr. Whitthorne watched; that he had information that Mr. Whitthorne, while in Philadelphia, had visited houses of ill-repute, and that he might do the same thing here; that he wanted him watched, and that if Whitthorne visited such houses, he wanted the officers to be prepared to raid the house and arrest him; after the arrest was made, he was to be taken to the Police station; the reporters were to be notified, and they were to come and work the facts up; after Mr. Murtagh left my office I concluded that I would not mention it to the detectives, and indeed I did not for ten days; about ten days after the first interview, Mr. Murtagh came to know what had been done; I said, "Nothing; it will require time;" he said it was important to do something, as there was great anxiety at the Navy Department to have something done; I then told Detective McDevitt of the plan; I told him, "This must not be carried into effect, but you must appear as if you were doing something;" Mr. Murtagh again subsequently called to inquire how the thing was working, and I said, "Well, we are looking to see what can be done;" he said that the Committee on Naval Affairs would make its report in a few days, and if something wasn't done immediately it would soon be of no effect; as I remember, the Naval Committee postponed its report, but, meanwhile, Murtagh called three or four times, and was quite anxious to know what had been accomplished; McDevitt suggested that it would cost money to do the watching, and Murtagh authorized me to spend what money was needed; he complained of the detectives, and said that he wanted them to make daily reports of what they were doing; Murtagh suggested that if Whitthorne could not be found in a house of ill-fame that he must be enticed into one; Murtagh, at one of his interviews with me, suggested that McDevitt was not doing anything, and then I put him in communication with Detective Miller; I told Col. Cook of the plan suggested by Murtagh; Cook was the attorney of the board; he said: "Have nothing to do with it, as it is not in the line of your duty." Witness said in reply to questions by Mr. Davy that he had known Murtagh for 20 years, and he considered that he was still on terms of friendship with him; that the Republican newspaper, of which Murtagh was proprietor, had made charges affecting his (witness') character in connection with an attack on the gamblers, but Murtagh had told him repeatedly that he did not mean that either witness or the public should construe them as aimed at the witness; he (witness) said the law in relation to gambling was, that upon the complaint of any reputable party, the house complained of was raided, and the implements of the business taken; that he had never, upon the complaint of a citizen or Police Officer in the form of the law, failed to raid the place complained of; witness said that after summing up everything in his own mind he had not now an unkind feeling toward Mr. Murtagh; that Murtagh's attacks on him had evidently something back of them which he [witness] didn't understand; witness said it was not his policy, nor was it the policy of the Police Board, to raid houses of ill-fame when they were situated in a well-defined disreputable section of the town, but that when any house was established outside of these limits it was broken up; witness has known, by general report, that gambling-houses were in operation; have ordered the lieutenants to keep a watch; no raids were made, because no complaints came in the proper shape. Witness said that the worst of the raids on houses of ill-fame was that the inmates were merely fined, and that they went back to their same course of living, distributing themselves in rooms, sometimes in respectable houses; there was no place to send them, no reformatory institution, and hence it had been his policy and the policy of the board to keep the houses within well-known disreputable lines; on one occasion, he gave orders to have every house raided the next night—not let one escape; when Mr. Murtagh heard of the order he called a special meeting of the board, and witness was directed to rescind the order; this is a matter of record; witness said that up to two or three weeks ago there had been no public clamor against the gamblers; that when arrests were made the offenders were not punished, and this operated on the Police force in a way to make them lose their enthusiasm.

Q.—Do you know of any combination entered into by a number of persons to assail Mr. Murtagh on account of the stand he has taken to suppress gambling? A.—I certainly do not.

Q.—Were any efforts made to employ a woman to aid in the Whitthorne case? A.—Not that I am aware of.

Q.—Was any money paid? A.—No, Sir. One night Detective McDevitt said he was going out on the Whitthorne matter, and he needed money; I let him have $10; it did not come from Mr. Murtagh.

Q.—What gave rise to the newspaper attack on the gamblers? Did you know that it originated with Mr. Murtagh alone? A.—So far as I know, it did.

Q.—When Murtagh asked you to watch Whitthorne did he express any feeling, personally, in the matter? A.—No, Sir, I think not; he said that the Secretary of the Navy had a good deal of feeling to know what Whitthorne was doing; that Whitthorne was p

AFFAIRS IN FRANCE.

THE REFORMED CHURCH QUESTION.

THE DISPUTE WITH THE CALVINISTS—TWO FACTIONS STRUGGLING FOR SUPREMACY—THE DECLARATION OF FAITH OF 1872—A DIVISION OF THE CHURCH ESTABLISHMENT CLAIMED—LIBERALS WITHOUT CHURCHES AND WITHOUT SALARIES—THE OFFICIAL PRINTING.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Dec. 22, 1876.

In 1872, M. Coquerel was the recognized chief of the Liberal party of the Reformed Church of France, and was engaged in a serious dispute with the Orthodox party or the Calvinists. He looked at the question from a religious point of view, and seemed to argue that everything else ought to be made secondary, when a thing was claimed in the name of religion. He wanted the State to recognize the division in the Reformed Church by giving half the elections and half the property to the seceding Liberals. But, in order to do this the State had to recognize another religion and make provision for it. The question was whether the schismatics were numerous enough to warrant their recognition among the religious sects protected by the State, and if so, to find out some basis for a division of the offices, the churches, and the property. Before the war there were two factions within the Reformed Church, each of which struggled for supremacy. Toward the last days of the Empire the schismatics had gained materially in strength, owing to the exertions of a few eloquent Pastors like Anastase Coquerel. The Calvinists were growing weaker and weaker every day, when in 1872, the aged historian, Guizot, threw himself into the midst of the contest. He pronounced in favor of the Calvinists, called the consistories together, and had a synodical meeting in Paris. Owing to his exertions, what is known as the credo of M. Guizot, or the "Declaration of Faith" of 1872, was adopted by a majority of four votes. This majority, so far as the French Government was concerned, gave the Reformed Church into the hands of the orthodox party. They controlled the elections to churches, the church property, and the money which the Government pays annually for the support of public worship in France. It was only a few years ago that the Reformed Church and the Jewish Church were acknowledged as religions, and admitted to a share in the budget des cultes. Naturally, the Liberal parties complained that they were forced into a position where they had to capitulate at the expense of their consciences, or to revolt against the decision of the Synod. As a general thing, they refused to accept the Calvinistic credo of M. Guizot, but did not carry their revolt to such a point that a complete rupture was brought about. Both parties agreed that a compromise was necessary to prevent a scandal, but neither party would yield upon the point of doctrine.

M. Thiers was greatly annoyed by this quarrel and refused to order the elections. Since then the Government has allowed matters to drag on, in the hope of seeing the two parties come to some agreement. But all attempts at compromise have been unsuccessful, and finally M. Dufaure came to the conclusion that it would be best to order the elections under the regulations adopted in 1872, according to the formulary of the Synod, hoping thereby to effect a junction between the moderate men of both parties, and at least to render the schismatic portion as small as possible. It must be evident to every mind that the Government cannot cut a Church in two and make two recognized Churches of it, nor can it take a schismatic faction and raise it to the dignity of a religion recognized by the State. Naturally it has to deal only with the Reformed Protestant Church of France, and as there are two portions claiming to represent that Church, it must examine the evidence. It finds, therefore, that the orthodox party had a majority in the last Synod, and hence it can fairly claim to be the Reformed Church. The protesting Protestants are not obliged to accept the decisions of that Synod, if they have conscientious scruples against it, but their non-acceptance gives them no right to claim a division of the Church establishment. It may be hard upon the men who are really forced into a position where they must "capitulate or revolt," but none of the arguments which they have yet presented appear strong enough to warrant any other decision than that adopted by M. Dufaure. He says that the Government has to do solely with the organization of the Reformed Church. If the Liberals want to secede and start another Church, they are free to do so, and can apply regularly to the Government for permission. Their application will receive careful consideration. If they do this, they will have to start de novo, but if they can obtain a division of the Church property they would require but little money.

This was the position of affairs the other day when M. Dufaure went out of power, and the Liberals became very much alarmed when they heard that the elections were about to be ordered under the rules adopted by the Synod of 1872. They do not accept its formulary of ordination, and when they do accept it, the Liberal Pastors cannot share in the elections, and will find themselves afterward without churches and without salaries. Several deputations were sent to M. Dufaure, but he remained firm, declaring that he was acting in the interests of the French Protestant Church in forcing the Protestants to heal their quarrels by a compromise of some sort, or by forcing a limited number of schismatics out of the way. After sending in his resignation, M. Dufaure went to see his successor, M. Martel, who was ill in bed, and obtained a promise from him to carry out this policy. The Liberals say that this was a piece of gratuitous interference on his part, and they blame him severely. But it is better for all parties that some arrangement should be arrived at without further delay, for the Protestant Church of France has suffered long enough by this scandal. The Calvinists say that the fault lies with the Liberals; the latter retort in like terms; and as all attempts at compromise have proved unavailing, it is well, perhaps, in the interest of religion, to force a solution of some sort.

I told you some weeks ago about the quarrel between M. Wittersheim and M. Dallez about the publication of the official journals, and said that the matter was before the Assembly. The Chamber refused to vote the 40,000 francs subvention demanded by M. Dalloz for the Bulletin des Communes, which was given him by M. Casimir-Périer four years ago as compensation for the refusal of the Assembly to ratify his contract. Since then M. Dallez has continued to publish the Bulletin des Communes, a paper sold for one sou, giving the laws passed by the Legislature, and has received a subvention therefor. But the publisher of the Journal Officiel, M. Wittersheim, has constantly protested against this division of the Government spoils. He claims to be the only authorized official printer, and says that if the Bulletin des Communes has to be published, it should be, like the Journal Officiel and the Bulletin des Lois, in his hands. I remarked, when discussing this question, that M. Dallez had, in fact, some rights, though they were not very clearly defined, and that, in order to settle the matter, the Assembly had authorized him to bring a suit against the Government. But, meanwhile, the Budget is under discussion, and one item in it is the 40,000 francs subvention, given to M. Dallos. M. Gambetta pretended that he had no grounds for an action, since his contract with the Minister of the Interior was conditional, or subject to the approval of the Assembly, and since that approval was refused, M. Dalloz had no ground of complaint, or, at least, for an action for damages against the Government. M. Gambetta is the leader of the majority in the Chamber, and when the question came up he had the subvention erased from the Budget. This is regular enough, but the difficulty came when the Budget came before the Senate. A grave question of principle is involved, namely, whether the Senate has the right of revising the decisions of the Chamber in financial matters. That is a question that will give rise to an angry discussion one of these days, but, meanwhile, the Senate assumes that it has the right to revise the Budget as well as the laws, and it has voted the 40,000 francs demanded by M. Dallos which the Chamber refused to allow. It is this question of the official printing, therefore, which will furnish the occasion for a dispute between the two houses as to the extent of their respective powers.

The case of the "woman cut in pieces" still continues to excite the Parisians, and the journals follow it up from day to day. Biloir was taken out of prison the other day to hear the evidence accumulated against him, but did not seem to be greatly affected by it. "What does all that prove?" he said, when the magistrate had concluded; "you have found certain things, but that does not prove that I am an assassin, or that Marie Le Monach is not yet alive. I knew her better than any one else, and I tell you that she was not like the woman at the Morgue." The evidence against Biloir is very strong indeed, though entirely presumptive. He will be brought up for trial early in January.

ARCHITECTURE IN AMERICA.

LECTURE BY REV. DR. OSGOOD BEFORE THE POLYTECHNIC ASSOCIATION—THE GREEK AND GOTHIC STYLES CONTRASTED.

Rev. Dr. Osgood lectured before the Polytechnic Association of the American Institute, at the Cooper Union, last evening, upon "Architecture in America." He defined architecture in its broadest sense as expressive, and said that it was intimately allied with all other forms of expression. As an art it was more difficult than sculpture, because the sculptor could change his work during its progress, while the architect could not. A great many metaphysicians had bothered themselves to discover how the arts were invented—an employment which the lecturer considered a decided waste of time. Architecture was in one sense a sort of literature. Dean Stanley said to a gathering of printers that in the olden time the cathedrals were the newspapers, and that new the newspapers were the cathedrals. The architecture of each age embodied its ideas, its aspirations, and its tendencies. Schofenhaur, who viewed the art from a hard, utilitarian standpoint, had said that it was a wrestle with gravitation. The Greek architecture was probably the most perfect of its kind. The Gothic was a higher type than the Greek, but the latter, as a whole, was the more perfect. There was no arch among the Greeks, the elements of their science being the column and the lintel. The idea of the column was by some thought to be taken from the trees, but this the lecturer considered a mistake. He attributed its introduction to the fact that in Greece stone was to be found in large masses, and that the most convenient form in which it could be rolled from the quarry to its place of destination was the circular section of the column. The lintel was formed of two pieces in order that if one broke the other would remain intact, and thus support the structure. The Greek temples were chiefly for outside show, and not for comfort. They were built from the outside inward, while the Gothic, on the other hand, were built from the interior outward. The Gothic was not, as has been said, the architecture of priests. It began with the great laity movement of the twelfth century. The first great example of this school was the Cathedral of St. Denis, commenced in 1130, and from that period until the present it had continued to grow in favor, and in the past 30 years had gained a powerful foothold in America. In a few months there was to be opened in Boston one of the most beautiful and impressive church edifices in this country, the new Trinity Church, presided over by Rev. Phillips Brooks. The business edifice in this New-York is the building on the North-east corner of Broadway and Bond street. Its style was known as the Victoria Gothic. The most beautiful public building in the City is the new district Courthouse, corner of Tenth street and Sixth avenue. The ugliest structure in town was unquestionably the rapid transit abomination on South Fifth avenue. He was in favor of rapid transit, but it was a shame to thus deface the thoroughfares of a great city for that or any other purpose. In regard to many of our public buildings, Americans had no reason to be ashamed. The Capitol at Washington was one of the handsomest structures of its class in the world—far superior to the English House of Parliament at Westminster.

In conclusion the lecturer said that it would be a happy day for the American people when the growth of a cultivated public taste compelled our architects and builders to use their designs upon the three leading ideas of beauty, utility, and convenience.

THE SUPPRESSION OF VICE.

ANNUAL MEETING OF MR. COMSTOCK'S SOCIETY—ADDRESSES BY REV. DR. JOHN HALL AND REV. DR. DURYEA.

The second annual public meeting of the Society for the Suppression of Vice was held at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association last evening, and was well attended, by gentlemen only, it having been announced that the addresses would be for the benefit of fathers of families. The Secretary and Agent of the society, Mr. Comstock, read the report for the year past, the particulars of which have been published, after which Rev. Dr. John Hall was introduced and spoke at considerable length. Our children, both boys and girls, he said, must be protected from the machinations of such foul beasts as the French school-master, for instance, who was recently convicted. The laws were good enough, but the enforcement of them was indifferent, to say the least, and the prosecuting officers should be made to enforce them more strictly. In Philadelphia the action of the State courts was such that the society had ceased prosecuting the offenders who peddle their wares in that city, and even in this State but little energy was shown. A man had been held out to the agent of the society, who had recently seen the janitor of one of our public schools who had been convicted and sentenced to three years' imprisonment for selling indecent pictures to the children, pardoned after having served but 13 months of his sentence, while only last Monday another man—an old offender—who was sent to prison for one year, was pardoned, having served less than one month.

At the conclusion of Dr. Hall's address, Rev. Dr. Duryea, of Brooklyn, was introduced, and spoke vigorously and to the point for about 15 minutes. A collection was then taken up, the object being to raise $6,000 or $7,000 for the expenses of the society for the ensuing year. One gentleman gave $500, and, with commendable modesty, refused his name. The collection amounted to about $2,000.

A FATAL BAR-ROOM AFFRAY.

An investigation into the manner in which Robert Lusk met his death was held by Coroner Croker yesterday. The testimony showed that a number of roughs, including Lusk, Peter Reynolds, a boatman, and James McManus, a laborer, congregated in the saloon of Joseph Arthur, at No. 589 Eleventh avenue, on Thanksgiving Day, and that, having imbibed unlimited quantities of liquor, they quarreled. Lusk, according to the testimony of several witnesses, violently assaulted Reynolds, McManus, and Arthur. The last named testified that after Reynolds had been knocked down by Lusk, the former threw bottles at the latter, striking him once on the head. Edward Derick testified that Lusk was clubbed on the head by the policeman who arrested him for disorderly conduct. The jury found that Lusk died on Jan. 2, from the effects of a fracture of the skull caused by unknown parties on Nov. 30. McManus and Reynolds were held by the Coroner in default of $500 bail, to await the action of the Grand Jury.

CITY HALL NOTES.

Mayor Ely has vetoed the Common Council's resolution assigning the Separate Troop of Cavalry to the building on Hall place and Seventh street.

It is said that the office of Public Administrator is to be removed from its present location at No. 117 Nassau street to one of the rooms adjoining the Mayor's office.

The Aldermanic Committee on Railroads, consisting of Messrs. Guntzer, Reilly, and Cowing, will meet at 2 P. M. to-day to consider the resolution of Mr. Cole, providing for compelling City railroad companies to heat their cars. A hearing will be given to citizens interested in the matter.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

A PLAN FOR GETTING RID OF THE ACCUMULATIONS OF SNOW—THE QUESTION OF FILLING UP THE SUNKEN LOTS—ACCIDENTS ON THE ELEVATED RAILROAD.

In the Board of Aldermen yesterday Mr. Morris offered a resolution requesting the Commissioner of Public Works to report to the board, at its next meeting, the advisability or practicability of permitting the Street-cleaning Bureau to open the man-holes of the several sewers after each snow-storm, and emptying therein, through such man-holes, the accumulation of snow and ice from the streets of this City. The resolution was adopted. Alderman Morris also moved that the preamble and resolutions, together with the communications from the Departments of Docks and Police, in favor of filling up the sunken and marsh lands above Randall's Island with ashes and other refuse collected from the streets, which were received by the board during the year 1873, be referred to the Committee on Police and Health. The communication from the Dock Department referred to, stated that the members could not see that any harm could come from filling up those lands with ashes. It was accompanied by a letter written by Gen. McClellan, approving of the scheme, and adding that the filling on Randall's Island should be of such a nature as not to effect the health of the children collected there. The resolution was adopted.

The resolution of Alderman Lewis offered at the last session, providing for executing a portrait of ex-Mayor Wickham, for the Governor's room, was called up, and amended so that the cost of the portrait shall be paid by an appropriation from the Board of Apportionment, and not out of City contingencies.

Alderman Morris moved to still further amend the resolution, by providing for having portraits of the late Mayor Havemeyer and ex-Mayor Vance also executed and placed in the Governor's room.

Alderman Sauer opposed the amendment on the ground, as he stated, that ex-Alderman Vance was not a Mayor, and that Mr. Havemeyer's portrait, taken when he was first Mayor at the age of 37, was already in the Governor's room.

Alderman Morris replied that the portrait of Havemeyer, taken at the age of 37, was certainly not a correct portrait of the man at 73 years of age.

The amendment was put and lost, and the original resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Alderman Morris then offered a resolution that portraits of Ex-Mayor Vance and the late Mayor Havemeyer be executed, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance.

A petition from Theodore E. Tomlinson, asking the board to take steps to have the City manufacture its own gas, and to purchase the works of the present gas companies, was referred to a committee. The board then directed the Committee on Law to draft an ordinance providing for additional safeguards around hoistways, inside the stoop lines, from the basement to the sidewalk, and also to prepare an ordinance regulating the size and style of railings, so as to secure greater safety to persons traveling on the sidewalks.

Alderman Sheils called up the resolution providing that the resolutions of thanks tendered to Mr. S. A. Lewis, ex-President of the board, be engrossed at a cost not exceeding $50.

Alderman Cowing opposed the motion. He said he would be willing to subscribe toward having the resolutions engrossed, as he had great respect for Mr. Lewis, but he was opposed to using public funds for the purpose.

Alderman Morris said that if the board decided to have the resolutions engrossed at the cost of the City, it would be certainly proper to pay a similar tribute to ex-President Vance, who was as high-minded and honorable a gentleman as could be found anywhere.

These remarks had no effect on the board, for the resolution was adopted.

A communication was received from the Commissioners of Public Works, stating that the contracts for lighting the street lamps in the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards were made prior to annexation. The Central Gas Company lights the lamps in the Twenty-third Ward at $45 each per annum, and those in the Twenty-fourth Ward are lighted by the Scranton Gas Company at $50 each for the same time. The statement was ordered to be printed.

A resolution requesting the Legislature to pass a law authorizing the board to appoint 500 additional Commissioners of Deeds was adopted.

Alderman Simonson submitted a preamble and resolution reciting the numerous accidents, some of them fatal, have occurred on the New-York Elevated Railroad; that they were occasioned by insufficient safeguards at the different stations to prevent passengers from attempting to enter or leave the cars while in motion at such stations, implying a criminal want of precaution on the part of the officers or managers of said railroad company. The resolutions then requested the Mayor to cause an inspection of such stations to be made by the Commissioner of Public Works, or the engineer of his Department, and have such safeguards provided by the Railroad company as may be deemed necessary, so as to prevent the possibility of any recurrence of such accidents, and that in case the railroad company refuse or neglect to supply such safeguards, then that the Mayor cause the subject to be presented to the Grand Jury with a view to compel the company to take all proper and necessary precautions to prevent repetitions of such accidents. The matter was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

THE UNITED STATES AND HAYTI.

REPORT OF THE HAYTIEN CONSUL AT THIS PORT—INCREASE IN THE EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE BETWEEN THIS COUNTRY AND HAYTI.

The annual report of H. A. Keamley, the Haytian Consul at this port, gives the following interesting facts relative to the export and import trade for the year 1876, between the ports of the Republic of Hayti and the ports of New-York, and institutes a comparison between the trade of the past years and that of other years, as far back as 1872, showing a large increase, both in exports and imports, within the last few years, and the natural growth of the Republic itself in a commercial sense. Those acquainted with the resources of the latter say, that the increase will continue in the future, and at the same rate the Republic will become an important factor in the commercial world. The total value of the exports from New-York to Haytien ports during the past year was $3,947,054 35 in United States currency, or $3,555,904 82 in gold, at the average rate of gold during the year The total value of the exports in 1875 was $4,831,514 28 in United States currency, or $4,275,676 05 in gold, at the average rate of bullion during that year. In 1874 it was $3,332,870 02 in United States currency, or $2,975,241 in gold. In 1873 it was $3,688,588 27 in United States currency, or $3,293,337 30 in gold. In 1872 it was $2,376,140 38 in United States currency, or $2,121,533 91 in gold. The ports in the Republic of Hayti to which the exports were made during the year were, Port au Prince, (by far the largest, amounting to $2,143,237 18 in United States currency, or $1,930,844 32, in gold,) Anx Cayes, Jacmel, Cape Hayti, Gonaives, St. Mare, Port de Paix, Jeremil, Miragoane, and Aquiri, the volume of exports to each being in the above order The number of vessels employed in the export trade from the port of New-York to the ports of the Republic of Hayti during the past year was 174, with a carrying capacity of 87,954 tons, as against 197 vessels in 1875, with a carrying capacity of 59,713 tons; 159 vessels in 1872, with a carrying capacity of 51,798 tons; 156 vessels in 1873, with a carrying capacity of 47,510 tons, and 124 vessels in 1872 with a capacity of 31,399 tons. The total amount of imports to this port from all of the Republic of Hayti during the past year, were $2,653,603 in United States currency, as against $2,154,642 in currency in 1875; $1,374,285 in 1874, and $1,883,131 in 1873. The number of vessels employed in this trade during the past year was 157, and the imported articles consisted of logwood, coffee, cocoa, mahogany, honey, Cotton, turtle-shell, lignum vitæ, goat-skins, horns, hides, wax, gum quiac, peanuts, oranges, and pepper from the following ports: Aux Cayes, Port au Prince, Gonaives, Jacmel, St. Marguerite, Aquiri, Cape Hayti, Port de Paix in Jeremil. The exports from New-York exceeded the imports to this port from Hayti by $1,293,451 35 in United States currency during the past year. In 1875 the excess was $2,676,872; in 1874 it was $1,957,985 92; and in 1873 it was $1,800,457 27.

BUSINESS FAILURES.

Bernard H. Helmcke, tailor, of No. 1 Barclay street, assigned his property for the benefit of his creditors, to Henry E. Hoppe, yesterday.

William I. Young and Charles M. Young, composing the firm of W. I. & C. M. Young, produce dealers, of No. 149 Reade street, assigned their property to Benjamin Carter yesterday.

Register Fitch has adjudicated Kenyon Cox, individually a bankrupt on his own petition. He was the partner of Daniel Drew, W. H. Hutchinson, and Horace Mannell, in the firm of Kenyon Cox and Company, bankers, which failed in the panic of 1873. Nearly all the debts are firm liabilities, and the 95 creditors have received 87½ cents on the dollar. From the schedules it appears that after the firm's failure Daniel Drew advanced $250,000 to pay the creditors. The following are the amounts the principal creditors have received on their claims: Fisk & Hatch, Co., $115,509; John Casey, $103,311 44; J. & J. Casey, $61,073 36; David Dows, $57,750; Canada Southern Railway Company, $395 74; Winslow, Lanier & Co., $39,375; W. H. Drew, $35,020 20; Metropolitan National Bank, $28,875; Charles Broadus, $29,968 41; Second National Bank of Erie, Penn., $19,632 99; Bank of North America, $14,437 50. Mr. Cox has no assets, and a claim for $136,774 46, money received in excess of his share of the profits and for losses in individual speculations, was sold recently at auction for $625.

THE BROOKLYN BRIDGE.

ITS FINANCIAL CONDITION—REPORT OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER AS TO THE PROGRESS OF THE WORK—THE CABLES TO BE MANUFACTURED FROM BESSEMER STEEL.

A meeting of the Trustees of the New-York and Brooklyn Bridge was held yesterday, Hon. H. C. Murphy, the President, in the chair. There were present besides the President, Messrs. William Marshall, J. S. T. Stranahan, J. Riley, W. B. Leonard, Lloyd Aspinwall, Lawrence Turnure, H. W. Sloenm, W.C. Kingsley, T. Kinsella, C. J. Canda, J. Van Schaick, J. Mottey, J. McLean, T. Carroll, Controllers Kelly and Burrell, and Mayors Ely and Schroeder. The Secretary reported the financial condition of the company on Saturday, Dec. 30, 1876, as follows: Receipts to date, $7,124,896 41; expenditures, $7,059,808 49; cash on hand and in bank, $65,088, and liabilities, $15,304 75. The report of Chief Engineer W. A. Roebling was next presented, together with the reports relating to the testing of the various specimens of cable wire submitted by the different bidders for the contract. Mr. Reebling's report gave an interesting review of the work accomplished during 1875 and 1876. Both towers and anchorages had been nearly completed during this time, it not being possible to finish the small amount of work yet to be done until the cables are completed. After describing the method of constructing the towers, anchorages, anchor-plates, and chains, the report gives a minute description of the method of constructing and laying the cables. The main cables consist of 19 strands. These strands are not made on land and hauled across the river, but are laid up in place, and, as they cannot be made in the position which they are finally to occupy in the cable itself, each separate strand is laid up 60 feet above this position. By this means several advantages are gained. Not only is the strand out of the way of those already made, but each wire may be laid up under a strain of 400 pounds, thereby testing it to a certain extent throughout its whole length, and eliminating all bends or crooks. The regulation of the tension, which could not be accomplished in the low position, is also rendered possible. After the first 19 or the 19 strands are completed and regulated, seven of them are compressed together to form a centre core, around which the remaining strands are afterward placed, and the whole continuously wrapped with wire. The cables are made about five or six feet above the position they will occupy after all the settling has taken place. The length of time required to make the main cables is largely dependent on the wind and weather, and will require no less than two and a half or three years. The estimate of time being based on the experience at Cincinnati, where it took nine months to lay up 1,000,000 pounds of wire into cable.

Preparations, Mr. Roebling says, for the commencement of cable-making have been going on for two years past, during which time the machinery for running out the wire from the Brooklyn anchorage has been put up, and is only awaiting the construction of the foot-bridge for an active commencement.

Two designs were made for this foot-bridge; one in a low position, at the level of the floor of the main bridge, the other 60 feet above, at the level of the cradles and strands. Both positions have their advantages and disadvantages. The important consideration which led to the adoption of the high position was the accommodation of the shipping, since the low foot-bridge would have at once formed a barrier across the river at a uniform height of 150 feet above the water, while the upper position gave 210 feet height; which head-room would be maintained for a year or more, when the lowering of the cable-strands would slightly curtail it. A general plan for getting the ropes across the river, and suspending them, was sketched out some years ago, and has since been successfully carried out, the carrying over of the first heavy rope having suggested many improvements which greatly facilitated the work of getting over the remaining ropes.

The platform, or floor of the foot-bridge, Mr. Roebling says, is three and a half feet wide, and is composed of wooden strips with a small space between them, laid on top of the ropes. No suspenders are used. To protect such a frail structure against the violence of terrific gales, that rage almost weekly, is no easy task, and, notwithstanding every precaution, the temporary works will probably be disabled more than once before the cable-making is completed. The principal security against the wind is a pair of inverted storm cables, assisted by a number of "under floor-stays" in the main span. In the land span the guys lead directly to anchorages in the ground. In addition to these, the ropes are secured together laterally. It is of but little moment, he says, how much the strands may sway about in the middle of the span, but all great waves must be checked before they reach the towers, where alone the ropes can be injured. This is done by the "under floor-stays," and by securely fastening the ropes to the masonry, the inverted parabolic storm cables serving to prevent the foot-bridge being carried away bodily.

The question of the main cable-wire has formed the subject of much reflection and thought, especially in preparing the specifications for the same. Tests have been going on at intervals for the past six years, and constantly during the last two years. The making of the tests was intrusted to Col Paine, and were carried out under Col. Farrington's immediate supervision. The principle which served as a guide in these determinations was to obtain a certain rate of strength for the least amount of money. It was from the full data obtained from these extensive experiments that the first sketch of the requirements in tests was built up. This was then modified to suit this particular case. The report, in concluding, gives a description of the manner of making the cable-wire, and also of testing the cable.

The report having been accepted, the board proceeded to the consideration of the report of the Executive Committee, who had been engaged in the duty of receiving and opening bids, and recommending the award of the contract for cable-wire to Messrs. John A. Roebling, Sons & Co., of Trenton, N. J. Before taking action on the report, the President, at the request of Mr. Leonard, read a long letter from Mr. A. S. Hewitt, in which the latter expressed it as his opinion that the board should either stipulate in the contract to the successful bidder that Bessemer steel should not be employed in the manufacture of the cable-wire, or that if it were employed, it should be subjected to different and ampler tests than those which had been provided in the existing specifications of the Commissioner. Should the Engineer conclude that it was not possible to devise such tests, or should the bidders be unwilling to take a contract subject to such tests, then Mr. Hewitt urged that the Bessemer steel should only be admitted in the specifications with such tests as the present engineering knowledge of that material would wisely prescribe.

The reading of the letter was followed by a long discussion as to the propriety of using Bessemer steel at all in the construction of the bridge. The majority of the Trustees expressed themselves in favor of its being employed. Upon the suggestion of several Trustees, the report of the Executive Committee was then referred back to that body, with instructions to receive new proposals for the manufacture of cables from Bessemer steel, and report the result at the next meeting of the board that might be called for the consideration of the subject of the awarding of the contract. The board then adjourned.

THE MOROCCO MANUFACTURERS.

The semi-annual meeting of the Morocco Manufacturers' National Exchange was held at the Astor House yesterday. Mr. B. F. Clements, of Lynn, President of the Association, presided. There were eighteen gentlemen present, representing the following houses: P. P. Tapley & Co. and W. D. Poole, of Lynn; M. S. Kerrigan, H. M. Warren & Co., Mirrick & Co., E. A. Smith & Co., and William Rutter & Co., of New-York; McNeely & Co., William Ames & Co., Adams & Kean, and G. W. Hummel & Co., of Philadelphia; John C. Baker Manufacturing Company, Presey, Scott & Co., Charles Baird & Co., John Taylor & Co., and William Warren, of Wilmington; Loeber & Atkinson, of Baltimore. Upon recommendation of the Executive Committee, it was voted that in case an effort should be made by the sole leather tanners to secure free-trade legislation by Congress, as proposed in their convention of July, the Executive Committee shall have power to increase its membership to nine and to proceed to Washington to oppose such legislation. The convention adjourned to meet in Lynn the second Thursday in July. After adjournment the members enjoyed a banquet tendered them by the New-York houses.

SUICIDE BY OPIUM.

Gustavus Lane, a mechanic, aged 28, who has for several weeks past occupied a room at the Van Dye House, at the corner of Bowery and Bayard street, committed suicide yesterday afternoon by swallowing a large dose of laudanum. Lane appeared depressed yesterday, and about 2 o'clock in the afternoon he went to his room, where he was soon afterward found unconscious by one of the servants. A vial which had contained a quantity of opium was found empty at his bedside. A physician was summoned to attend Lane, and he was subsequently removed to the Chambers Street Hospital, where he died at 9:30 o'clock last night. The motive for the suicide was not ascertained.

ARREST OF AN ALLEGED BURGLAR.

Capt. Murray, of the Fourth Precinct, yesterday arrested Patrick Culkin, alias Coffey, alias Whitey, a notorious river thief, whom he found at Owney Geaghegan's saloon, No. 103 Bowery. Culkin is charged with being one of the gang of masked burglars whose depredations on the night of Dec. 23, in the village of Ravenswood, have been already published in THE TIMES. Coffey stoutly denies all participation in the robberies and all knowledge of the gang who are now confined in the Hempstead Jail. He was, however, taken to Astoria for examination, and Capt. Murray is certain that he will be identified as one of the burglars.

POLITICAL MISCELLANY.

A PATRIOTIC MESSAGE.

GOV. ANTHONY, OF KANSAS, ON THE POLITICAL SITUATION—CONQUERED REBELS NOT TO BE TRUSTED AS FRIENDS.

TOPEKA, Jan. 11.—The Governor read his message to the Legislature in joint session this afternoon. It is mainly confined to local matters, but refers to the present condition of national affairs as follows:

This condition of things was made possible by a magnanimity without reason, and an animosity without precedent, by which we made haste to say that treason was not a crime to be remembered, and traitors not men to be feared in power. These acts were sweet to the taste of mercy, and consoling to the spirit of forgiveness; but they have proved ashes in the mouth of wisdom, and bitterness to the soul of justice. By this mistaken action and unreasonable confidence, men who but a few years ago were in open armed rebellion against the constituted authorities of our Government, in a war without historic parallel in extent and cruelty, have found their way back into the halls of legislation and positions of exalted executive and judicial trusts in the National and State Governments. If these men, when thus reinstated, had by their acts vindicated our confidence in their returning loyalty and love of country, it would have been a sublime consummation for which the nations of the earth have sighed in vain since human governments were organized, but such consummation was not possible, because human nature intervenes to prevent a conquered foe from becoming a trusted friend. The leaders of that great rebellion may bow in manly submission to the results of a war in which they lost everything; but they can never cease to regret the lost cause as the jewel of their secret hope; of their inner hearts; nor would we respect them more if they could. The sooner we admit this great fundamental fact, the sooner shall we lift our Government above the perils of rebellion and revolution by keeping its control in the hands of those whose love for its priceless blessings is paramount to the love of life itself. In this, as in all previous conflicts involving the questions of human rights, human equality, and free government, Kansas stands before the world in the same heroic attitude it has ever maintained. In its majorities in its National and State ticket, and in the almost complete political unanimity of your body, it has reaffirmed its devotion to the right, and renewed its pledge to sister States and the world, that it will not be guilty of treason to the future by forgetting the bloody record of treason in the past.

Again, he says: More than this, the Republican Party does not desire, or will it attempt, to enforce anything in conflict with the will of the people and the interests of the Government. It will act from patriotic, not partisan, motives, and do its duty in the future as in the past; and its action, whether it leads us along the quiet path of peace or the rugged road of war, will have the support of the Commonwealth of Kansas. It is desired by the people of Kansas that the party of its choice be not kept in possession of the General Government by unfair or unlawful means; at the same time it is the unquestioned sense of public judgment and patriotism that not one step be conceded in compromise, nor yielded to intimidating talk of force. They fervently pray that the discordant element of war may not again come our land to desolate its peace, protect and defend the sacred earnings of the last great struggle, another like it, or greater, is necessary, they will be found ready, now as then, to do their duty.

SOUTHERN RIFLE CLUBS.

MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS IN THE SOUTH—IN CONSTANT READINESS TO OBEY ORDERS—POWER TO BE SEIZED BY FORCE—RIFLES AND CANNON ON HAND.

The special correspondent sent recently to this country by the London Times writes to that paper from Columbia, S. C., Dec. 2, as follows:

"This afternoon I found myself at the hotel table d'hôte next a member of the press with whom I had a slight acquaintance. We happened to leave the table together, and turned for a moment into his room. There, by way of illustrating a remark which had fallen at table, he pulled out of his waistcoat pocket a small pistol, and a larger one out of his coat pocket, and then, lifting the mattress of his bed, showed me under it a fine Remington rifle, the history of which he related in good joke. It was originally a Government rifle, and was one of a number used by the colored Militia. But after a serious riot which occurred—I believe near Charleston—the Militia did not consider it 'healthy,' as my informant phrased it, to appear with rifles in the streets, and so they were kept out of sight in what was supposed to be a place of safety. A colored man, however, in Government employ, found he could get at them, and offered to steal and sell them to a rifle club at $7 apiece, whereas they would cost in the ordinary way $18. The club at once closed with the offer, and distributed the rifles to men upon whom it could rely, on the condition that each man may swear about in the middle of the span, but all great waves must be checked before they reach the towers, where alone the ropes can be injured. This is done by the "under floor-stays," and by securely fastening the ropes to the masonry, the inverted parabolic storm cables serving to prevent the foot-bridge being carried away bodily.

STATEMEN

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION....Jan. 11.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate, Mr. Morton announced that Mr. Enos Runyon had testified before the Committee on Elections, thus purging himself of contempt, and Mr. Runyon was discharged. The Senate insisted on its amendments to the Post Route bill, regarding post mail service, and a Conference Committee was appointed. The bill to provide for the deficiency in the House contingent fund was called up, with a number of amendments reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee. A discussion on Democratic economy followed, and the bill passed. The bill proposing the sale of certain land in the Wallabout Bay was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The correction of the Revised Statutes was resumed, and the proposed amendment increasing mileage of Electoral messengers to 25 cents each way, was rejected. The bill was laid aside.

In the House, the credentials of Mr. David Dudley Field were presented and Mr. Field was sworn. The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole. Mr. Holman's amendment reducing the pay of Foreign Ministers was rejected. Propositions to reduce the missions to the Sandwich Islands and Hayti to consulates were defeated. The bill was then reported to the House and passed. The Military Academy Appropriation bill was discussed in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $265,161, or $24,904 less than the bill of last year. The reduction is effected mainly by cutting off longevity pay and restricting assistant professors' and teachers' compensation to their army pay; also by reducing the military band. The bill was passed without change. The bill to provide remedies for overcharge of duties was passed.

SENATE.

The House substitute for the Senate bill granting a pension of $37 a month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg was read and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATOR ELECT ROLLINS.

The CHAIR laid before the Senate the credentials of E. H. Rollins, elected United States Senator from the State of New-Hampshire for six years from March 4, 1877. Laid on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, said of course no one would question the election of Mr. Rollins, but the certificate of his election probably was not as full as it should be. It merely said he was duly elected, and did not set forth when the Legislature met, time of election, &c. Sometimes a question might be raised about the credentials as not setting forth all the facts, and he merely made these observations now to call attention to the subject.

MR. RUNYON TESTIFIES.

Mr. MORTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a resolution discharging Enos Runyon, of the firm of Enos Runyon, bankers and brokers, of Wall street, New-York, from the custody of the Sergeant at Arms; he having testified before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and thus purged himself of contempt. Agreed to.

POST ROUTES AND FAST MAILS.

Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported back the House bill to establish certain post routes, and said the committee had considered the disagreement of the two Houses in regard to Fast Mail, and had directed him to report in favor of the Senate insisting upon its amendments, and to move that a Committee of Conference be appointed. Agreed to, and the CHAIR appointed Messrs. Hamlin, Paddock, and Maxey as the committee.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SPENCER, of Alabama, from the Special Committee appointed at the last session to frame a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, submitted a minority report from that committee. Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.

THE HOUSE ECONOMY AND DEFICIENCY.

Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, called up the House bill making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes. Amendments proposed by the committee appropriating $10,311 to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the compensation and mileage of Senators; $2,268 for the pay of messengers; $5,000 for clerks to committees; $1,580 to pay stenographers for the select committee to investigate Mississippi affairs last year; $25,000 to defray the expenses incurred by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in making investigations recently ordered as to elections in various States, and $40,000 for the transportation of notes and bonds and other securities of the United States, were agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, asked how it was, in this age of reform and retrenchment, that so soon after the ides of August, when a patriotic Congress made provision for all the wants of the people and went to the country with songs of joy, this deficiency bill was brought in.

Mr. WINDOM replied that this was not a very large bill, and he wished he could congratulate the Senator from Vermont upon the fact that it would be the only deficiency bill; but he could not. There would be another. This bill, as it came from the House, appropriated $54,879. Some of the appropriations were for expenses incurred at the last session of Congress, and should have been provided for then.

Mr. WITHERS, of Virginia, said it was no unusual thing to have a deficiency appropriation bill every session.

Mr. EDMUNDS replied that it was not unusual to have such a bill, but it was unusual to profess economy and bring in the bills afterward.

Mr. WITHERS said the records of Congress would show that deficiency bills were passed at every session.

The bill was then read a third time, and passed.

RELIEF FOR ADMIRAL WILKES.

Mr. CONKLING, of New-York, called for the Senate bill for the relief of Admiral Charles Wilkes. Passed. It authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to credit his account with $350, the amount paid on account of mess bill.

THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC CONGRATULATIONS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported back the House joint resolution relating to congratulations from the Argentine Republic and from the Republic of Pretoria, South Africa. Passed.

CLAIMS GROWING OUT OF THE WAR.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, gave notice that, at an early day, he would ask the Senate to consider the bill for the relief of Dr. J. Milton Best, of Kentucky, which had already passed Congress and been vetoed.

Mr. CONKLING hoped this bill would not be considered until the Senate should be full, as it was a kind of test case in regard to allowing a certain class of claims growing out of the late war.

PROPOSED SALE OF LAND IN THE WALLABOUT.

Mr. KERNAN, of New-York, called up the House bill to provide for the sale or exchange of a certain piece of land in the Wallabout Bay, in the State of New-York, to the City of Brooklyn.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, said he had heard something about this bill from officers of the Navy Department, and he thought it should be examined again by the Committee on Naval Affairs. He moved that it be recommitted to that committee.

Mr. KERNAN said he was aware that there was some objection to the bill on the part of naval officers, but he understood that the department did not object to it, as it provided for the appointment of a commission to arrange equitable terms for the sale of the property.

Mr. EDMUNDS said this property was worth a great deal of money, and for that reason the bill should be carefully considered.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New-Hampshire, Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, said that since the bill was reported to the Senate at the last session, information had been laid before the committee, and letters had been received from the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department, which prevented him from asking the passage of the bill in its present shape. Should it be recommitted the bill would be considered and reported back to the Senate as soon as possible.

The motion of Mr. EDMUNDS to recommit the bill was agreed to.

THE REVISED STATUTES.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the unfinished business, being the House bill to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, in charge of the bill, explained the various corrections and changes at length. The reading of the bill having been concluded, he submitted an amendment to section 144 of the Revised Statutes, so as to provide that messengers bringing the Electoral vote to the national capital shall receive 25 cents per mile each way, in accordance with the law as originally passed, and said he did not press the amendment, but the matter had been brought to his attention, and he, therefore, submitted it to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, said he hoped this amendment would not be passed, since the original act allowing 25 cents a mile each way was passed. The whole mode of traveling had been changed, and 25 cents per mile one way was enough now.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRELL, of Missouri, submitted an amendment requiring officers of the Ordnance Department and others having charge of ordnance supplies to make quarterly returns of all such supplies in their charge. Agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside informally, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hamlin] desired to submit certain amendments in regard to post routes.

The Senate then, at 3:45 P. M., went into executive session, and after a few minutes, when the doors were reopened, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

After the reading of the journal Mr. HEWITT, of New-York, presented the credentials of David Dudley Field, of New-York, who was then sworn in as a member of the House.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. HUNTER, of Indiana, introduced a joint resolution providing for the counting of the Electoral vote. Referred.

Mr. LUTTRELL, of California, introduced a like resolution, which was referred.

THE CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The House then, at 12:30, went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Caulfield, of Illinois, in the chair) on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill.

The question was on Mr. Holman's amendment, decreasing the pay of Ministers and Consuls, and it was defeated by a vote of 81 to 100.

The next amendment was one offered by Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, striking out from the list of countries the Ministers to which shall receive $7,500, the Hawaiian Islands, and providing for a Consul to that country at a salary of $3,500, which was defeated.

Mr. WATTERSON, of Kentucky, offered an amendment providing for a Minister to Switzerland. Rejected.

The next amendment was one offered by Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, abolishing the office of Minister to Hayti, and providing for the appointment of a Consul to that country at a salary of $3,500.

Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, favored the abolishment of the office of Minister to Hayti, saying that if there was any State where the United States could abolish its Minister, it was Hayti. There was no commerce between the two countries, and he could not see the necessity of having a Minister there at a salary of $7,500, when a Consul could fulfil the duties of the office.

Mr. BANKS, of Massachusetts, opposed the amendment. He stated that the policy of the United States had been such as to strip it of nearly all the commerce of the States about the Gulf of Mexico. These States now carried their products to Europe, while the United States remained without any communication with them. But a policy might be adopted which would restore that trade. The Gulf of Mexico was no longer an American sea. The Island of Hayti was the key of the Gulf, but the Government of that island might part with its jurisdiction to any foreign Government if the United States placed itself in the attitude of an enemy to that country. He spoke of the great importance which Mr. Seward and other statesmen attached to those West India Islands as a region where the solution of the negro question would in future be worked out, and he deprecated the want of statesmanship involved in the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN argued that it was not through diplomatic agents that American commerce was to be improved, but through modifications of the tariff.

The amendment was rejected.

The committee, having concluded the consideration of the bill, rose and reported it to the House, when it was passed.

THE MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Turney, of Pennsylvania, in the chair) on the Military Academy Appropriation bill, and was addressed by Mr. Finley, of Florida, in a speech on the political questions of the day.

Mr. CLYMER, of Pennsylvania, who had charge of the bill as a member of the Appropriation Committee, briefly explained the bill. It appropriated, he said, $265,161, which was a reduction of $129,919 on the estimates, and a reduction of $24,904 on the bill of last session as passed. This reduction had been made principally in the Pay Department, where $23,150 had been saved by striking out the longevity pay, and by not paying assistant professors and teachers any more than their regular army pay. A further sum of $8,544 was saved in the reduction of the band at West Point, and $1,050 in the item for repairs. There were also further reductions in the items for transportation, materials for officers, chemicals, &c. The expenses of the West Point Academy, he said, were entirely out of proportion to those of similar institutions, such as Yale, Harvard, or Princeton. There were 57 persons employed at West Point as officers and instructors. These 57 persons were paid in the aggregate $168,934, which was at the rate of $543 for the tuition of each Cadet, (there being 310,) as at present organized and governed. The institution was overgrown, and at some time in the near future the pruning-knife of economy would have to be used upon it. The bill was then considered by sections, and after some time the Committee rose and the bill was passed.

THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER COMMISSION.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution for the appointment of an International Silver Commission.

Mr. WILLARD, of Michigan, offered as a substitute an amendment, authorizing the President in the event of the joint reconstitution of silver, should one or more countries unite upon a convention with a view to agree upon a uniform relation of silver with gold, to appoint three persons to attend such convention, and also authorizing him to propose to such countries as use both gold and silver as a legal standard of value, such a convention.

The consideration of the bill then went over till Thursday next.

OVERCHARGE OF DUTIES.

Mr. WOOD, of New-York, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill to provide remedies for overcharge of duties on tonnage and imports. It provides that on the entry of any vessel the decision of the Collector of Customs as to the rate of duty or tonnage on imports shall be final and conclusive, except that the owner, master, or consignee may take protest against such decision, which protest shall be forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury; and should he decide in favor of the complainant he shall draw his warrant on the Treasury in favor of the party entitled to payment on account of overcharge. The bill was passed.

The House then, at 4:10 P. M., adjourned.

LITERARY NOTES.

—The February number of the Catholic World will contain a refutation of Mr. Huxley's three lectures on "Evolution," which were recently delivered in New-York.

—F. W. Christern imports an edition of M. G. De Molinari's Lettres sur les Etats Unis et le Canada, being his contributions to the Journal des Débats during the Centennial Exhibition.

—Hurd & Houghton have yielded to the "Extract" fever, and an author who abounds in more fine and eloquent passages than most members of his craft, Thomas De Quincey, will have the select est beauties of his writings published by this house during the week.

—Robert Clarke & Co. have just published a pamphlet for 25 cents which meets a present demand and ought to have a large circulation. It contains the Constitution of the United States, with the Fifteen Amendments, and an index, the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, and Washington's Farewell Address.

—The February number of Harper's Magazine will contain four letters addressed some years ago by Lord Macaulay to the late Henry S. Randall, the biographer of Jefferson, upon Government by majorities. Harper's very recently published some of Mr. Gladstone's diplomatic correspondence which attracted considerable attention in England.

—Messrs. Putnam's Sons have in print two works on medical subjects, one by a man, the other by a woman. Dr. E. C. Seguin treats of Spinal Paralysis, acute, sub-acute, and chronic, while Mrs. Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi writes on The Question of Rest for Women. Mrs. Jacobi is well known as an authority on the subject, and a successful practitioner as well.

—The late George D. Prentice won large temporary fame as a brilliant journalist, but his poems, now in a third edition, which has just been published by Robert Clarke & Co., Cincinnati, are his best title to permanent fame, and some of his occasional efforts—as lyric poems—are very beautiful. The volume contains a portrait of Mr. Prentice and an excellent sketch of his life.

—Mr. Edward H. Knight, author of the American Mechanical Dictionary, lately completed and published by Hurd & Houghton, will soon begin in the Atlantic a series of interesting articles on "Crude and Curious Inventions at the Centennial Exhibition," which will be very fully illustrated and will treat of the crude mechanisms of different nations, as displayed at our late International Fair.

—A. S. Barnes & Co. will publish about the middle of the month another of Mr. Steele's excellent and practical science manuals, entitled Fourteen Weeks in Zoology. They have just brought out in four volumes the "Working Teacher's Library," consisting of Page's Theory and Practice of Teaching, Holbrook's Normal Methods of Teaching, Northend's Teacher's Assistant, and Phelps' Teacher's Hand-book.

—The January number of the American Naturalist contains an amusing paper by W. H. Dall, on the "Educated Fleas," which recently excited so much interest in this City. Dr. A. S. Packard, Jr., contributes an article which is of special value, on the "Migrations of the Destructive Locust of the West," and Mr. J. C. Russell gives an interesting description of the "Giant Birds of New-Zealand."

—Scientific works promised by Messrs. Putnam's Sons comprise Acoustics, Light and Heat, by William Leas, which will form one of the "Advanced Science Series" published by them. The new volume of the "Elementary Series" is Dynamics, by J. T. Bottomley. Prof. J. S. Newberry, of the school of Mines, Columbia College, who made the first scientific report on the wonderful oil on country of the Rio Colorado, offers his Class-Book in Geology.

—The new and cheaper reissue of Kitto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature will be published in the United States by J. B. Lippincott & Co. This work is of practical value to scholars and students of the Scriptures, and contains, in three royal octavo volumes, upward of 5,000 separate articles on the antiquities, bibliography, biography, criticism, doctrine, geography, history, interpretation, literature, manners and customs, natural history, philosophy, physical science, philology, Rabbinical and Masoretic lore, and theology of the Bible, with a large number of wood-cuts, plates, and maps.

—A. D. F. Randolph will publish next week The Star and The Clouds, a new illustrated poem by the author of The Changed Cross, and the first production of this author since the last-named poem was published, 16 years ago. They have also in press The Old, Old Story, with nine tasteful illustrations in outline by H. J. A. Miles, and Mrs. Prentiss' (author of Stepping Heavenward) new serial story of old times in New-England, entitled Semaquid.

—Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons announce for immediate publication a work bearing on one of the most difficult public questions of the present day. It is by Lieut. Col. R. I. Dodge, of the United States Army, and bears the comprehensive title of The Plains of the Great West. He will describe the Western Plains and their inhabitants of native stock, giving at length the Indian customs of fighting and hunting, their rites of marriage and death, their religious beliefs and practices. Suggestions for the treatment of the Indian question are promised, and there will also be notes on emigration, as well as accounts of the game to be found on the Plains. Col. Dodge is a talented officer, whose report ought to be valuable and interesting. The volume is to be illustrated by Ernst Griset.

—An American Notes and Queries in historical matters has been attempted several times, and Potter's American Monthly was started by Benson J. Lossing for this purpose. None of these efforts appear to have been well sustained, but A. S. Barnes & Co. announce a Magazine of American History, edited by John Austin Stevens, with an attractive table of contents for January, 1877, which, if made as good as its prospectus indicates it shall be, will meet a want among students of our history and greatly advance such studies. It numbers among its contributors J. Hammond Trumbull, John G. Shea, B. F. De Costa, Henry Onderdonk, Jr., Thomas Balch, E. B. O'Callaghan, George Henry Preble, and J. Carson Brevoort, and its editor believes that the Centennial year has given such a new impulse to historical inquiry that it will find an ample support.

—Books of political interest issued by Putnam's Sons are Bastiat's Political Economy, revised, and with an introduction by David A. Wells, and The Jewks, a Study of Crime, Pauperism, and Disease, by R. L. Dugdale. Religious topics will be treated by the distinguished Unitarian preacher and lecturer, Mr. O. B. Frothingham, in The New Testament and the Messiah. where $23,150 had been saved by striking out the longevity pay, and by not paying assistant professors and teachers any more than their regular army pay. A further sum of $8,544 was saved in the reduction of the band at West Point, and $1,050 in the item for repairs. LAW REPORTS.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

ARGUMENT IN THE FAMOUS JUMEL WILL CASE—OTHER PROCEEDINGS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The following case was heard in the United States Supreme Court yesterday:

Bowen vs. Chase.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New-York.—This was an action of ejectment to recover lands of great value in the City of New-York, known as the Jumel estate. The principal point of interest in the case was the attempt on the part of the plaintiff to prove himself the son of Mme. Jumel. On the trial the court excluded evidence on the part of Bowen as to the identity of his mother, the question being, "Who was her mother?" and also evidence of other witnesses as to Mme. Jumel's statements to them as to her having a son, and her living in Rhode Island in early life with one Bailou, the reputed father of Bowen; also evidence as to the statements of Jumel, the husband of the Madame, that he had charged her with enticing him into marriage with her, and with then having a little son in Providence, and a great deal of other testimony offered to show facts supposed to have a tendency to establish the fact alleged. Objection was taken to such rulings of the court, and also to the admissions of evidence offered by the defense, the claim being that the declarations of Mme. Jumel were allowed when offered on the part of the defense to prove the identity of a niece of hers, but were excluded by the court when offered by the plaintiff to prove the identity of the fruit of her body. The argument is that this court will not say that while the law of New-York of 1830 makes Mme. Jumel heir to her son's estate, and the act of 1855, as well as the law of Rhode Island, makes him heir to her estate, she, the mother, has not such an interest in the suit as to make her declarations evidence of the fact that he is her son after her death. Clearly, it is said, her declarations are competent upon the question of her personal identity. The case embraces a great many points as evidence of interest to the profession. It followed the case in equity, except to restrain further suits by Bowen to recover property until after decision is finally made in the original action. Chauncey Shaffer and M. E. Sawyer for plaintiff; James C. Carter for defendant.

The following proceedings took place to-day:

No. 155.—The Mutual Life Insurance Company of New-York, appellant, vs. J. Morrison Harris, Assignee, &c.—The argument of this cause was continued by J. M. Harris and F. W. Brune, of counsel for the appellee, and concluded by H. E. Davies for the appellant.

No. 156.—The Mutual Life Insurance Company of New-York, plaintiff in error, vs. J. Morrison Harris, Assignee, &c.—Passed for the present.

No. 157.—Robert G. Hervey and the Paris and Decatur Railroad Company, plaintiffs in error, vs. the Rhode Island Locomotive Works. No. 158.—The Indianapolis, Bloomington, and Western Railway Company, plaintiffs in error, vs. The Rhode Island Locomotive Works.—These causes were submitted on printed arguments by R. G. Ingersoll, of counsel for the plaintiffs in error, and by H. S. Greene and D. T. Littler, for the defendants in error.

No. 159.—Joseph W. Stanton et al., plaintiffs in error, vs. James H. Embry, Administrator, &c.—The argument of this cause was commenced by T. J. Durant, of counsel for the plaintiffs in error, and continued by Edward Lander for the defendant in error.

The Court then adjourned until to-morrow.

LIABILITY OF THE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR.

Surrogate Calvin sustained yesterday the correctness of the accounting of Algernon S. Sullivan, Public Administrator, in the matter of the estate of John Seerin, deceased. Among the assets of the estate which came into Mr. Sullivan's hands was a bank-book, showing a deposit of $377 in the Third Avenue Savings Bank. This bank had failed before Mr. Sullivan became Public Administrator. He collected all the dividends paid by the Receiver of the bank, but was sued in his official capacity for the whole amount on deposit. Seerin's estate had first been in the hands of Isaac Dayton, the former Public Administrator, who did not remove the deposit from the bank because he supposed the deceased had put the money there as an investment. The Referee who audited the final accounting of the estate held that the Public Administrator was liable for the amount of the deposit on the grounds, first, because it is the duty of the Administrator to collect the account and deposit all moneys by him collected and received" in the bank designated by the Common Council; (and it is admitted the savings bank was not so designated;) and secondly, because there was evidence to show that the reputation of the bank for solvency was bad for some time before its failure. On the motion to confirm the report, the Public Administrator excepted to the above findings. After full argument, the Surrogate sustains the correctness of the Public Administrator's accounts. He holds that the evidence falls far short of establishing a general reputation which would raise a presumption of a knowledge of its unsound condition on the part of the Public Administrator, but on the contrary, that the evidence shows that the bank was in good repute as to solvency. The Surrogate holds that the Public Administrator was not guilty of neglect in failing to draw the money from the Third Avenue Savings Bank; that the investment originally made by the intestate, and that it nowhere appears that the Public Administrator knew of any suspicion as to the solvency of the bank or that he had not exercised requisite prudence in leaving the investment as deceased left it, and that the statute did not require the Public Administrator to collect deposits from savings banks as being cash in hand, but leaves it to his sound discretion. The account as rendered is therefore sustained.

THE FERRY-TICKET FRAUDS.

The trial of George W. West, ferry-master, and Jacob A. Van Volckenberg, ticket-collector at the Courtlandt street ferry, charged with being implicated in extensive frauds, by which the Pennsylvania Railroad Company was robbed of over $60,000 per year, was resumed before Judge Sutherland yesterday, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. The cross-examination of William N. Plattner, a discharged ferry-master, who gave exceedingly damaging testimony against the prisoners, was continued by Mr. Mott, counsel for the defense, who failed to shake the direct testimony of the witness. In answer to Mr. Charles W. Brooke, counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, Plattner stated that he had been promised no reward by the company in consideration of his disclosures. Mr. Brooke then called Detective Walling, who testified to the arrest of West. Edward Coffman, of Camden, N. J., one of the men employed by the railroad company to count the number of persons passing through the ferry-house during the hour of duty of West and Van Volckenberg gave the result of his experience. Mr. Brooke next examined William Armor, Jr., in charge of the waiting-room of the ferry, who testified to seeing Van Volckenberg commit acts of fraud in connection with the issuance of tickets; William Paulen, of Newark, N. J., to whom Van Volckenberg said that he expected to be arrested for "crooked" work, and William Vanzie, a ferry-master, who was approached by Van Volckenberg with the intention of getting him into the dishonest conspiracy of employes. Dr. Charles L. Hart, ferry agent at Jersey City, was recalled, and explained with much clearness the details of the arrangements connected with the issuing and collection of ferry tickets. The case will be continued to-day.

TWELVE STREET-OPENINGS.

Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on the application of the Department of Parks, appointed Joseph Blumenthal, Henry Lewis, and Meyer Batzel as Commissioners of Estimate and Assessment in the cases of the following street-openings, all being in the newly annexed district; One Hundred and Thirty-eighth street, from Harlem River to Long Island Sound; One Hundred and Forty-ninth street, from Harlem River to the Southern Boulevard; Westchester avenue, from Third avenue to the City line at Bronx River; Cliff street, from Third avenue to Union avenue; One Hundred and Sixty-first street, from Jerome avenue to Third avenue; One Hundred and Sixty-fifth street, from Boston avenue to Union avenue; Tinton avenue, from Westchester avenue to One Hundred and Sixty-ninth street; Prospect avenue, from One Hundred and Fifty-sixth to the Southern Boulevard; Willis avenue, from One Hundred and Forty-seventh street to Third avenue; One Hundred and Forty-eighth street, from Third avenue to St. Ann's avenue; One Hundred and Fifty-sixth street, from Third avenue to Elton Avenue; Morris avenue, from Third avenue to Railroad avenue, at One Hundred and Fifty-sixth street.

A COUNTER STATEMENT.

In the matter of the arrest of Mrs. Louisa Randolph, in a suit by Mrs. Cecile Thomas, widow of Thomas, the "dynamite fiend," Mrs. Randolph and her counsel, John H. White, said yesterday that the property in question in the suit was of much less value than stated by Deputy Sheriff Bogart; that it had been voluntarily left in the possession of Mrs. Randolph by Mrs. Thomas; that Mrs. Randolph had been discharged from arrest on these facts being shown; and that the proceedings against her had been instituted by Mrs. Thomas in a spirit of vindictiveness and without just cause. Mrs. Randolph said further that she had no alias; that the mention of an alias in the complaint was unjust and untrue; that she had befriended Mrs. Thomas, when the latter was without resources, and that the suit against her was evidence of ingratitude.

SUIT AGAINST CORPORATION TRUSTEES.

The case of David W. Bruce against Caleb C. Norvell, Edward B. Wesley, and T. C. Platt was brought to trial before Judge Van Vorst and a jury, in Part I. of the Supreme Court, yesterday, but was adjourned to Monday after some testimony had been taken. The suit grows out of the attempted establishing of the Republic. The plaintiff is a type founder, and sues to recover $5,189 49 for type, &c., furnished to the newspaper association. A judgment was obtained against the New-York Republican Association, which published the paper, and the plaintiff now seeks to collect the amount of the judgment from the defendants, who were the Trustees of the corporation. The ground by which he seeks to fasten the liability on them is that they failed to file the annual report for 1874, as required by law, within 20 days after Jan. 1, 1875. The defendants allege that most of the goods were furnished before the filing of the certificate of incorporation. Wesley claims he resigned before the certificate was filed, and Platt says he never was a stockholder.

COURT NOTES.

The jury in the case of Catherine L. Wells, otherwise Catherine L. Flynn, against Sheriff Conner, yesterday, brought in a verdict of $5 35 for plaintiff.

At a midnight session of the Fifty-seventh Police Court, held by Justice Murray, on Wednesday night, seven unlicensed liquor dealers, arrested in the Twenty-second Precinct, were held for trial in $100 bail.

In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Judge Sutherland set down the cases of the indicted milk dealer for trial on Friday next. August Frilmann, of No. 29 Essex street, one of the accused dealers, pleaded guilty, and was fined $50.

The suit of Hammond against Dunlap & Co. to recover rent of the premises at No. 589 Broadway, has been discontinued. The action grew out of the change in the defendant firm, which went into liquidation and paid all its creditors in full. The new firm of R. Dunlap & Co. has been formed as a successor to the former one.

The trial of the case of John Patten against the New-York Elevated Railroad Company was resumed yesterday. After three witnesses had been examined, their testimony coinciding with that given on the motion for an injunction, Judge Daly thought it unnecessary to go further into this branch of the case. The plaintiffs rested, and the defendants opened their case.

Maria Heuser, aged 35, was yesterday charged by Anthony Barbe, of No. 89 South Fifth avenue, to whom she was married on the 3d of December last, with bigamy. Mr. Ritter swore that he was married to her on the 3d of April, 1870. She claimed that she was divorced from Ritter, and that she had a legal right to marry. Justice Otterbourg reserved his decision.

Chauncey R. Weeks, one of the three Executors and Trustees under the will of R. W. Kelly, deceased, petitioned Judge Donohue yesterday to be relieved of his trust. Kelly married one of Daniel Drew's daughters, and when he died Mr. Drew acted as his sole Executor and as guardian of Kelly's children. Mr. Weeks never acted, and now that Mr. Drew has failed, seeks release from responsibility.

John Ward, aged 17, a sneak thief, called at the residence of Dr. Satterlee, No. 158 Madison avenue, on Dec. 23, and handed the servant a letter to deliver to the Doctor. The servant returned in a few minutes and found that the visitor had disappeared, taking with him a fur-lined overcoat, cap, gloves, and a pair of field glasses. In Part I. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Ward pleaded guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sent him to the State Prison for four years.

Before the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday, was argued the case of Park and Tilford against Zachariah E. Simmons and others. The defendants to the action, as it appeared, were united together in a kind of social organization known as the North Club. The club was not incorporated, and had neither constitution nor by-laws. In spite of this, it managed to run up a bill for liquors, cigars, &c. with the plaintiffs. The latter sued and recovered judgment for $1,050 12, and the defendants now appeal. Decision was reserved.

The case of D. De Castro & Co. against Bret, Son & Co. was brought up before Judge Lawrence in Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday. It appears that the plaintiffs chartered a vessel to go to Carthagena and return, stopping on the way at Savanilla. The complaint sets forth that there was a breach of the charter party by

The Democratic anxiety to have it understood that their side is getting the best of the Oregon controversy is somewhat suggestive, and the pretense that Mr. RUNYON'S testimony of yesterday in regard to the $8,000 check relieves Mr. TILDEN of the suspicion of having paid it, is exceedingly impudent. The check was sent by Mr. RUNYON'S firm at the request of CONRAD N. JORDAN, the Cashier of the Third National Bank, and, curiously enough, it was drawn without either funds or collateral being deposited to meet it. The very intimate relations of Mr. TILDEN with the Third National Bank are perfectly well known, and the personal connection he has had with Mr. JORDAN in certain land speculations is no secret. The Senate committee are getting very near the source of the Oregon corruption fund, and they have only to push their inquiries a little further to find it not far from the bank account of the intriguer of Gramercy Park.

The nomination of Mr. STEWART L. WOODFORD as United States District Attorney for the Southern District of New-York is one calculated to give general satisfaction. Keeping in view the influences which were brought to bear upon the President to make some very questionable selections, he deserves all possible credit for this proof of firmness and good sense. Gen. WOODFORD is an able lawyer, a thoroughly earnest and conscientious Republican, and a perfectly honorable man. Assuming his acceptance of the nomination, he will have an opportunity, as United States District Attorney in this City, to show how a very delicate and difficult kind of responsibility can be sustained with fidelity to the interests of the Government, and consideration for the rights of respectable merchants. His previous experience of the routine of the District Attorney's office will qualify him for a prompt discharge of its duties, and he will probably not be tempted to mix them up with the intrigues of our local politics.

Mr. COWDIN'S bill providing for a conference between the Mayor, the President of the Board of Aldermen, the heads of departments, and "twelve eminent citizens of either political party," with the view of effecting a reduction and reapportionment of official salaries, is hardly the kind of measure needed to accomplish the desired result. Our local rulers, notwithstanding the feeble recommendation of Mayor ELY, are pledged to resist any reduction of salaries, and from "twelve eminent citizens," selected under the advice of Mr. JOHN KELLY, very little could be hoped in the way of advisory retrenchment. The conference would probably not be ready to report till the close of the session, and the suggested economy, however mild, would be likely to fail as ignominously as it did last year. The Legislature can dispense with all this elaborate and probably ineffective machinery by simply acting on the carefully considered and very minute recommendations of ex-Controller GREEN, as printed in Document No. 60 of last Assembly. That embodies a scheme of reduction radical enough to satisfy the tax-payers and much more trustworthy than anything which could be expected from the present City Administration.

A sorrowful story from the ocean comes to us by the way of the old sea-port of Gloucester, Mass., ten vessels being reported missing from the fishing fleet. These craft usually carry about ten men each, and the loss of life, if these ten schooners are wrecked, as is probably the case, will be large. It is a heavy loss for the hardy little community in Cape Ann to bear. The fishermen of the North Atlantic coast endure many hardships in pursuit of their dangerous calling. This cold and stormy season has witnessed many disasters; but this latest is one of the saddest repetitions of the old and tragical story of suffering, danger, and death on the sea, and of hope deferred, despair, and lamentation on the land.

While the Board of Aldermen are patching up half remedies for the removal of snow from the streets, the Police Board persist in the policy of dogged inactivity. While the snow lies, the ordinary street-cleaning is of course neglected, and the inaccessibility of most of the streets furnishes an excuse for leaving ashes uncollected for weeks. In fact, the snow gives the Solons of the Police Board an excuse for suspending the functions of the Street-cleaning Bureau altogether, and for either hoarding the appropriation or wasting it on a gang of political sinecurists. Patient as our citizens are, this sort of thing will probably prove too much for them. If the Mayor cannot compel the Police Commissioners to do their duty the Legislature can, at least, find some better hands to which to commit the business of street-cleaning. In the present condition of affairs this cannot be done too soon.

THE MODERATE ELEMENT IN THE SOUTH.

We are not inclined to exaggerate the importance of the frequently-recurring talk about the strength of the conservative element in the Southern Democracy or the influence it will exert upon the future of parties. There are, undoubtedly, certain facts which indicate the value of this element as a check upon partisan violence. For example, the resistance offered in the party caucuses to the insane demand for the impeachment of the President, and to the revolutionary programme laid down by persons who are understood to enjoy Mr. TILDEN'S confidence, had a double value. It directed attention to the danger incident to the policy of the Tilden managers, and it proved that for whatever lawlessness may be manifested, either in connection with the counting of the Presidential vote or the inauguration of Mr. HAYES, men like Messrs. HEWITT and WOOD must bear the responsibility. Again, the South has held aloof from the demonstrations which have taken place within the last few days in support of the avowed purpose to inaugurate TILDEN at all hazards.

On the other hand, it is impossible to ignore the evidence of Democratic unity, under the guidance of the most objectionable men, in Southern States whose former political history suggests the presence of the moderate element in more than ordinary force. Take Tennessee as an illustration. Once it was a Whig State. As late as 1860, the vote for BELL exceeded by some thousands the vote for BRECKINRIDGE, and came within five or six thousand of the Breckinridge and Douglas votes combined. Probably in no other Southern State are the old Whigs more numerous in proportion to population, or more influential in their business and social relations. That they care very little for Mr. TILDEN we can easily believe. But in State matters they are in accord with the ultra Democrats, as they have shown by aiding in the election to the United States Senate of one of the most infamous of the rebel leaders. There can be little solid ground for reliance upon the conservative tendencies of politicians who are not ashamed to invest ISHAM G. HARRIS with the power of the Senatorial position. The case is even worse in Louisiana, where in 1860 the Breckinridge Democrats outnumbered the Whig supporters of BELL by not more than two thousand. The moderate element might be looked for there, if anywhere in the South. What sign have we of its existence now? We may acquit it of active participation in the crimes which disgraced the Democratic Party during the canvass. But who hears of it at this moment as a force apart from the most violent of the Democracy? The whole party, whether originally Whigs or Democrats, are responsible for the revolutionary proceedings that have taken place in New-Orleans. It is idle to pretend that we may trust to the moderation of any portion of the Louisiana Democrats, when all of them are leagued together to overthrow the legally-elected Governor, to overawe the legally-organized Legislature, and to transfer the functions of government to men who, under the law of the State, have no right to them. We might follow out the argument by adducing the record of VANCE in North Carolina—a man as obnoxious to every honorable sentiment as ISHAM HARRIS, yet who, like him, could never have attained to his present position without the help of the Democrats whose antecedents favor the presumption that they would be on the side of loyalty and moderation.

These anomalies are not incompatible with the attitude assumed by influential Southern Democrats in Congress. We see nothing to justify the fear that, in the event of trouble over the counting of the Presidential vote, the Southern whites would respond to the incendiary appeals of their Northern allies. Their rejection of revolutionary counsels is to a large extent the result of their experience of civil war, but it also proceeds in a minor degree from their disposition to subordinate national concerns to the concerns of their respective States. Had bargaining been in order, and had the local Democratic managers been left to themselves, no one can doubt that in South Carolina, Louisiana, and Florida the success of the Republican Electoral ticket would have been acquiesced in without a murmur, in return for the acceptance of the Democratic State tickets. The fact cannot be regarded as a token of moderation, still less as a proof of a willingness to abandon the Democratic Party. It proves simply that the Southern whites are intent upon acquiring, above all other things, absolute supremacy in the government of their own States as the surest method of reversing the results of the war. It is only necessary to recall what has just occurred in Tennessee, and to study the tendencies of what is now occurring in Louisiana, to perceive the futility of hopes based upon the belief that any considerable division exists in the South between the presumably moderate and the notoriously violent sections of the Democracy. For all practical purposes they are heartily united, and the violent men have control.

The elevation of Mr. HAYES to the Presidency may be followed by some modification of this condition of things. An Administration which, while removing just grounds of complaint and abstaining from needless interference, shall calmly and uniformly enforce the law, may gradually win respect for its provisions and attract to the Republican standard some who now proclaim themselves Democrats. Only in anticipation of this contingency can any faith be placed in the probable obliteration of the "color line," or in the revival of a party power within the Democratic ranks that shall be antagonistic to the violent and proscriptive spirit which dominates in State affairs. There can, then, be no understanding in advance between the Republican President-elect and influential Southern leaders. The Republican Party stands upon its principles, and any conceivable fusion of the kind discussed must proceed on the part of the Southern whites from a more intelligent estimate of their own interests. The first indication of such a change will be the reassertion of their influence by the moderate forces of the Democratic Party in the administration of local affairs.

THE TAXES ON BANKS.

The national banks present the curious spectacle of corporations generally regarded as pampered monopolies, which are trying to give up their privileges, and have very good reasons for doing so. For the past ten years, the average demagogue—of which class we are sorry to admit there are too many specimens in both parties—has denounced the national banks as drawing a great deal of money from the Government for the privilege of lending money to their customers. The West especially, has resounded with the cry, "Down with the national banks." We have been pointed to the number of men who were engaged in the management or interested in the business of national banks, and been asked whether it was strange that the bank system had been fastened like a leech on the American body politic, when its representatives took so conspicuous a part in governing the country. Meanwhile, as we have said, these favored and petted institutions are trying, with excellent reason, to rid themselves of some of their expensive prerogatives.

According to official accounts, 71 banks have gone into voluntary liquidation within the past two years, which is more than half the number that had taken a like course during the previous ten years since the passage of the Banking law. The same account shows that, with loans amounting to $931,304,714 on the 2d October, 1876, the national banks reported that they had marked off total losses during the year ending Sept. 1, 1876, of $19,719,026, or very nearly 2 per cent. on the loans outstanding at the end of the year. On the other hand, the earnings of the banks for the same period were, for the first six months, 3.62 per cent., and for the second six months only 3.25 per cent. of their capital and surplus. It is generally supposed, however, that the circulation of the banks is a special source of profit. Without going into any detailed analysis to show precisely what the gains and expenses from circulation are, we beg to call the attention of our readers to the fact that the banks, between Jan. 14, 1875, and Nov. 1, 1876, surrendered their notes, or deposited United States notes to enable them to retire their own, to the amount of $51,621,678.

Here, then, we see banks surrendering their charters; other banks reporting heavy losses; banks surrendering, or preparing to surrender, more than one-seventh part of the entire circulation of the country, and the whole body of banks reporting average earnings of less than the legal rate of interest. If we ask the reason of this we shall be told that, in addition to other causes, which are common to all business, the banks labor under peculiar disadvantages as regards taxation of their capital and their business. Of the correctness of this statement there can be no doubt. Banks are tempting subjects for taxation under the present law. Their resources are known accurately by the Government. Their business is reported regularly. They are compelled to do everything, so to speak, in the light of day, and they cannot easily evade or transfer any burden which the Government may see fit to lay upon them. If they are overtaxed, their sole remedy is to contract or to surrender their business. So far as Federal taxation is concerned, they cannot run away from it, or deceive the authorities regarding its basis, or resort to any of the devices which other corporations, under color of the law, often practice with great success. And it is hardly materially different as regards State taxation, for a bank depends so largely on the good will of those who are well-acquainted with it, and on personal familiarity by its managers with its customers, that it cannot change its place of business from one State to another as a manufacturing or even a trading corporation can.

Banks now pay taxes to the United States Government on their circulation, on their capital not in United States bonds, and on their deposits. We have heretofore quoted the statements of Controller KNOX concerning the average ratio of these taxes to the capital and surplus of the banks. It is 1½ per cent., varying from 1 per cent. in Rhode Island to 2 per cent. in New-York City, 3 per cent. in Albany, and 2 to 3 per cent. in several other places. In addition, there is the State tax, which in 1875 averaged 2 per cent., varying from one-half of 1 per cent. in Louisville, Ky., to 3.1 per cent. in this City, 3.6 per cent. in Albany, 2½ per cent. in Chicago, and so on. The average total taxation is 3½ per cent., but there is great inequality. In Pennsylvania it is but 2 per cent., in Philadelphia only 2.8 per cent., in Pittsburg only 1.9 per cent., in Delaware 2 per cent., in New-Orleans 1.9 per cent., in Boston 3.3 per cent. In Cincinnati it rises to 4.6 per cent., in Chicago to 4.8 per cent., in New-York State it is 4.2 per cent., in New-York City 5.1 per cent., in Albany 6.6 per cent. It must be obvious to any one who will take the trouble to examine these figures, even cursorily, that taxation of this irregular character is an evil, and places the banks of some portions of the country at a grave disadvantage with reference to those of other portions, and even New-Yorkers, proverbially dull as to their own institutions, cannot but recognize that our banks are worse off than any others. With a single exception in our own State and another in the city of Milwaukee, the banks of New-York City are more highly taxed than those of any other city. They pay a rate 2½ times higher than those of New-Orleans, nearly twice as high as those of Philadelphia, a half higher than those of Boston or of Baltimore, and from one-tenth to one-fourth higher than those of other commercial cities of importance.

Under these circumstances, the movement for a reduction of taxation on banks, which resulted in the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday is not an unreasonable one, and ought to have weight with the national and the State Legislatures. Our readers are already familiar with the fact that the New-York banks are reducing their capital and their surplus. According to Mr. GUSTAV SCHWAB $12,500,000 of such reduction has already been made, and it is his opinion that the tendency in this direction is increasing in force, and is likely to carry the banking capital below the point indicated by the shrinkage of business. This would, of course, be a misfortune, and it is well that business men, and not bank officers alone, have taken the matter in hand.

CONSTITUTIONAL COUNTING.

The practice and precedents prior to 1805 having been heretofore fully presented, it is necessary to notice what took place on the occasion of counting the votes of the Electors who gave JEFFERSON a second term. The House of Representatives resolved, "that this House will attend in the chamber of the Senate this day, at 12 o'clock, noon, for the purpose of being present at the opening and counting of the votes for President and Vice President of the United States," and the Senate, on the receipt of this resolution, directed its Secretary to notify the House that "the Senate are now ready to meet them in the Senate Chamber for the purpose of being present at the opening and counting of the votes for President and Vice President." The President of the Senate officially certifies that he did, in the presence aforesaid, "open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors," to which declaration he deliberately set his hand and seal.

On the first election of MADISON, a message from the House informed the Senate that "the House is now ready to attend the Senate in opening the certificates and counting the votes of the Electors of the several States." As the act of opening and that of counting is placed in the same category, it is evident that the agency performing the one was expected to perform the other. But the opening the certificates, by constitutional command, had to be done by the President of the Senate, and that the connected or associated duty of counting was done by the same officer we know from his official certificate under the seal of the Senate of the United States. On the re-election of MADISON, the House informed the Senate that the House is "now ready to attend the Senate in opening the certificates and counting the votes," and while in attendance, the President of the Senate "did, in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes," to which solemn declaration he set his hand "and caused the seal of the Senate to be affixed."

On the occasion of MONROE'S first election, the House informed the Senate that it was ready "to attend the Senate, and proceed in opening the certificates and counting the votes of the Electors," which would imply, if these House resolutions are to be taken literally, that the opening or breaking the seals of the certificates was the work of Congress. That any authority except the President of the Senate could perform this duty was impossible. We must therefore infer that the two houses were ready to proceed "to open and count the votes," by their presence and attendance only. The correctness of this view is made clear by the testimony of the President of the Senate, who certifies that he did "open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors," &c. Cumulative evidence of this fact is afforded by the wording of the joint rule, which requires the tellers "to make a list of the votes as they shall be delivered," which delivery, of course, could only be by their custodian, the President of the Senate. On the second election of MONROE, in 1821, a true definition of the duties of Congress is found in the official record in these words:

"The House of Representatives concur in the report of the joint committee appointed to make arrangements upon the subject of counting the votes for President and Vice President of the United States," and among the arrangements for the "ceremony" was the rule that the tellers should "make a list of the votes as they shall be declared"—by the President of the Senate, of course—who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President of the United States."

On Feb. 9, 1825, according to the official record, "the Senate proceeded to the hall of the House of Representatives, agreeably to joint resolution, for the purpose of opening and counting the Electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States." If this entry means that the Senate was to do or perform the opening and counting through its presiding officer, it was perfectly proper and perfectly intelligible. It cannot mean that the Senate, as a legislative body, was to open the votes, and hence did not mean that this body was to perform the apparently inseparable act of counting them.

The joint rule of procedure in conducting the ceremony was the same as had always been in use, except that the President of the Senate was requested to announce "the state of the vote, and the person or persons elected, if it shall appear that a choice hath been made agreeably to the Constitution of the United States, which annunciation shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the person or persons elected."

It will be observed that on this occasion, as on others, the announcement or proclamation of the President of the Senate was the official evidence of an election or non-election. This officer accordingly declared JOHN C. CALHOUN duly elected Vice President, and that no person having received a majority of the votes given for President, the remaining duties in the choice of a President devolved on the House of Representatives. It thus appears that no action can be taken in the election or choice of a President by the House of Representatives until the proper officer makes proclamation of the failure to elect by the Electors appointed by the States.

A BLOW AT THE THEATRE.

There is an evident purpose on the part of the zealous upholders of law to secure the punishment of all persons who were in any way connected with the alleged duel which two foolish young men are currently reported to have fought. On Wednesday last a physician who is charged with having aided and abetted in the supposed duel was brought before the Grand Jury, and examined concerning the affair. Instead of telling the whole truth, he made the mistake of declining to answer any questions, on the ground that he was afraid of criminating himself. He was, therefore, very properly committed for contempt, and he may possibly be detained in the custody of the Sheriff until his patients get well for want of medicine, and his business thus sustains a serious loss.

If the two foolish young men and the various different kinds of foolish persons who accompanied them on their recent expedition to Delaware are to be thus persecuted by Grand Juries, they should make up their alleged minds to defend themselves by frankly telling the truth. The attempt to subject them to a legal prosecution is plainly based upon a mistake. Dueling is a crime of such peculiar idiocy that it ought to be punished with impartial severity. If the two foolish young men had really fought a duel, or had left the State with the intention of fighting, there would be no question as to the propriety of procuring their indictment. The plea that they are exceptionally silly would be no bar to their conviction; neither would they be entitled to leniency because they are ornaments of a social circle in which the brutal beating of one man by another is regarded as a pleasing spectacle for the entertainment of similar ornaments of society congregated behind a club-window The law is no respecter of persons or of idiocy, and whenever two foolish young men fight a duel, they should be liberally provided with all the comforts and privileges that Sing Sing can offer.
